"(2) Contents.—Each such report shall be based upon laws enacted through the date of the report and shall set forth all the information and estimates required of a sequestration preview report required by subsections (d)(2)(D) through (H). In addition, that report shall include—

"(A) for each account to be sequestered, the baseline level of sequestrable budgetary resources and the resulting reductions in new budget authority and outlays; and

"(B) the effects of sequestration on the level of outlays for each fiscal year through 2002.

"(i) Selection of Official Final Sequestration Report.—Not later than 5 days after receiving the final OMB and CBO sequestration reports, the Board shall choose either the OMB or CBO final sequestration report as the official report for purposes of this Act, and shall issue a report stating that decision and making any comments that the Board chooses.

"(j) Presidential Order.—(1) On the day that the Board chooses a final sequestration report, the President shall issue an order fully implementing without change all sequestrations required by—

"(A) the final sequestration report that requires the lesser amount of discretionary sequestration under section 260; and

"(B) the final sequestration report that requires the lesser total amount of deficit sequestration under section 264.

The order shall be effective on issuance and shall be issued only if sequestration is required.

"(2)(A) If both the CBO and OMB final sequestration reports require a sequestration of discretionary programs, and the Board chooses the report requiring the greater sequestration, then a positive amount equal to the difference between the CBO and OMB estimates of discretionary new budget authority for the budget year shall be subtracted from the budget-year column and added to the column for the first outyear of the discretionary scorecard under section 107 as though that amount had been enacted in the next session of Congress.

"(B) If one final sequestration report requires a sequestration of discretionary programs and the Board chooses that report, then an amount equal to the difference between that report's estimate of discretionary new budget authority for the budget year and the discretionary funding limit for that year shall be subtracted from the budget-year column and added to column for the first outyear of the discretionary scorecard under section 107 as though that amount had been enacted in the next session of Congress.

"(k) Use of Major Estimating Assumptions and Scorekeeping Conventions.—In the estimates, projections, and reports under subsections (c) and (d), CBO and OMB shall use the best and most recent estimating assumptions available. In all other reports required by this section and in all estimates or calculations required by this Act, CBO and OMB shall use—

"(1) current-year and budget-year discretionary funding limits chosen by the Board and the estimates chosen by the Board of the deficit reduction necessary to comply with the deficit targets in the budget year;

"(2) in estimating the effects of bills and discretionary regulations, the major estimating assumptions most recently chosen by the Board, except to the extent that they must be altered to reflect actual results occurring or measured after the Board's choice; and

"(3) scorekeeping conventions determined after consultation among the House and Senate Committees on the Budget, CBO, and OMB.

In applying the two previous sentences, the major estimating assumptions and other calculations required by this Act that are included in the statement of managers accompanying the conference report on this Act shall be considered, for all purposes of this Act, to be the report of the Board chosen under subsection (e) for fiscal year 1993.

"(l) Bill Cost Estimates.—Within 10 days after the enactment of any discretionary appropriations, direct spending, or receipts legislation, CBO and OMB shall transmit to each other, the Board, and to the Congress an estimate of the budgetary effects of that law, following the estimating requirements of this section. Those estimates may not change after the 10-day period except—

"(1) to the extent those estimates are subsumed within (and implicitly changed by) the estimates made in preparation of a new baseline under subsections (c), (d), and (h);

"(2) to reflect a choice of the Board regarding an official set of estimates under subsections (l) and (n); and

"(3) to correct clerical errors or errors in the application of this Act.

"SEC. 256. GENERAL AND SPECIAL SEQUESTRATION RULES.

"(a) Permanent Sequestration of Deficit.—

"(1) The purpose of any sequestration under this Act is to ensure deficit reduction in the budget year and all subsequent fiscal years, so that the budget-year cap in section 262 is not exceeded.

"(2) Obligations in sequestered spending accounts shall be reduced in the fiscal year in which a sequestration occurs and in all succeeding fiscal years. Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, after the first deficit sequestration, any later sequestration shall reduce spending outlays by an amount in addition to, rather than in lieu of, the reduction in spending outlays in place under the existing sequestration or sequestrations.

"(b) Uniform Percentages.—

"(1) In calculating the uniform percentage applicable to the sequestration of all spending programs or activities under section 266 the sequestrable base for spending programs and activities is the total budget-year level of outlays for those programs or activities in the current policy baseline minus—

"(A) those budget-year outlays resulting from obligations incurred in the current or prior fiscal years, and

(B) those budget-year outlays resulting from exemptions under section 253.

"(2) For any direct spending program in which—

"(A) outlays pay for entitlement benefits,

(B) a budget-year sequestration takes effect after the 1st day of the budget year, and

"(C) that delay reduces the amount of entitlement authority that is subject to sequestration in the budget year, the uniform percentage otherwise applicable to the sequestration of that program in the budget year shall be increased as necessary to achieve the same budget-year outlay reduction in that program as would have been achieved had there been no delay.

"(3) If the uniform percentage otherwise applicable to the budget-year sequestration of a program or activity is increased under paragraph (2), then it shall revert to the uniform percentage calculated under paragraph (1) when the budget year is completed.

"(c) GENERAL RULES FOR SEQUESTRATION.—

"(1) INDEFINITE AUTHORITY.—Except as otherwise provided, sequestration in accounts for which obligations are indefinite shall be taken in a manner to ensure that obligations in the fiscal year of a sequestration and succeeding fiscal years are reduced, from the level that would actually have occurred, by the applicable sequestration percentage or percentages.

"(2) CANCELLATION OF BUDGETARY RESOURCES.—Budgetary resources sequestered from any account other than an entitlement trust, special, or revolving fund account shall revert to the Treasury and be permanently canceled or repealed.

"(3) INDEXED BENEFIT PAYMENTS.—If, under any entitlement program—

"(A) benefit payments are made to persons or governments more frequently than once a year, and

"(B) the amount of entitlement authority is periodically adjusted under existing law to reflect changes in a price index, then for the first fiscal year to which a sequestration order applies, the benefit reductions in that program accomplished by the order shall take effect starting with the payment made at the beginning of January or 7 weeks after the order is issued, whichever is later. For the purposes of this subsection, Veterans Compensation shall be considered a program that meets the conditions of the preceding sentence.

"(4) PROGRAMS, PROJECTS, OR ACTIVITIES.—Except as otherwise provided, the same percentage sequestration shall apply to all programs, projects, and activities within a budget account (with programs, projects, and activities as delineated in the appropriation Act or accompanying report for the relevant fiscal year covering that account, or for accounts not included in appropriation Acts, as delineated in the most recently submitted President's budget).

"(5) IMPLEMENTING REGULATIONS.—Administrative regulations or similar actions implementing the sequestration of a program or activity shall be made within 120 days of the effective date of the sequestration of that program or activity.

"(6) DISTRIBUTION FORMULAS.—To the extent that distribution or allocation formulas differ at different levels of budgetary resources within an account, program, project, or activity, a sequestration shall be interpreted as producing a lower total appropriation, with that lower appropriation being obligated as though it had been the pre-sequestration appropriation and no sequestration had occurred.

"(7) CONTINGENT FEES.—In any account for which fees charged to the public are legally determined by the level of appropriations, fees shall be charged on the basis of the presequestration level of appropriations.

"(d) NON-JOBS PORTION OF AFDC.—Any sequestration order shall accomplish the full amount of any required reduction in payments for the non-jobs portion of the aid to families with dependant children program under the Social Security Act by reducing the Federal reimbursement percentage (for the fiscal year involved) by multiplying that reimbursement percentage, on a State-by-State basis, by the uniform percentage applicable to the sequestration of nonexempt direct spending programs or activities.

"(e) JOBS PORTION OF AFDC.—

"(1) FULL AMOUNT OF SEQUESTRATION REQUIRED.—Any sequestration order shall accomplish the full amount of any required reduction of the job opportunities and basic skills training program under section 402(a)(19), and part F of title VI, of the Social Security Act, in the manner specified in this subsection. Such an order may not reduce any Federal matching rate pursuant to section 403(l) of the Social Security Act.

"(2) NEW ALLOTMENT FORMULA.—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—Notwithstanding section 403(k) of the Social Security Act, each State's percentage share of the amount available after sequestration for direct spending pursuant to section 403(l) of such Act shall be equal to that percentage of the total amount paid to the States pursuant to such section 403(l) for the prior fiscal year that is represented by the amount paid to such State pursuant to such section 403(l) for the prior fiscal year, except that a State may not be allotted an amount under this subparagraph that exceeds the amount that would have been allotted to such State pursuant to such section 403(k) had the sequestration not been in effect.

"(B) REALLOTMENT OF AMOUNTS REMAINING UNALLOTTED AFTER APPLICATION OF GENERAL RULE.—Any amount made available after sequestration for direct spending pursuant to section 403(l) of the Social Security Act that remains unallotted as a result of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall be allotted among the States in proportion to the absolute difference between the amount allotted, respectively, to each State as a result of such subparagraph and the amount that would have been allotted to such State pursuant to section 403(k) of such Act had the sequestration not been in effect, except that a State may not be allotted an amount under this subparagraph that results in a total allotment to the State under this paragraph of more than the amount that would have been allotted to such State pursuant to such section 403(k) had the sequestration not been in effect.

"(f) CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT PROGRAM.—Any sequestration order shall accomplish the full amount of any required reduction in payments under sections 455 and 458 of the Social Security Act by reducing the Federal matching rate for State administrative costs under the program, as specified (for the fiscal year involved) in section 455(a) of such Act, to the extent necessary to reduce such expenditures by that amount.

"(g) COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION.—

"(1) EFFECTIVE DATE.—For the Commodity Credit Corporation, the date on which a sequestration order takes effect in a fiscal year shall vary for each crop of a commodity. In general, the sequestration order shall take effect when issued, but for each crop of a commodity for which 1-year contracts are issued as an entitlement, the sequestration order shall take effect with the start of the sign-up period for that crop that begins after the sequestration order is issued. Payments for each contract in such a crop shall be reduced under the same terms and conditions.

"(2) DAIRY PROGRAM.—(A) As the sole means of achieving any reduction in outlays under the milk price-support program, the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide for a reduction to be made in the price received by producers for all milk produced in the United States and marketed by producers for commercial use. That price reduction (measured in cents per hundredweight of milk marketed) shall occur under subparagraph (A) of section 201(d)(2) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446(d)(2)(A)), shall begin on the day any sequestration order is issued, and shall not exceed the aggregate amount of the reduction in outlays under the milk price-support program, that otherwise would have been achieved by reducing payments made for the purchase of milk or the products of milk under this subsection during that fiscal year.

"(3) EFFECT OF DELAY.—For purposes of subsection (b)(1), the sequestrable base for the Commodity Credit Corporation is the budget-year level of gross outlays resulting from new budget authority that is subject to reduction under paragraphs (1) and (2), and subsection (b)(2) shall not apply.

"(4) CERTAIN AUTHORITY NOT TO BE LIMITED.—Nothing in this Act shall restrict the Corporation in the discharge of its authority and responsibility as a corporation to buy and sell commodities in world trade, or limit or reduce in any way any appropriation that provides the Corporation with funds to cover its net realized losses.

"(h) EXTENDED UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION.—(1) A State may reduce each weekly benefit payment made under the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970 for any week of unemployment occurring during any period with respect to which payments are reduced under any sequestration order by a percentage not to exceed the percentage by which the Federal payment to the State under section 204 of such Act is to be reduced for such week as a result of such order.

"(2) A reduction by a State in accordance with subparagraph (A) shall not be considered as a failure to fulfill the requirements of section 3304(a)(11) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

"(i) FEDERAL EMPLOYEES HEALTH BENEFITS FUND.—For the Federal Employees Health Benefits Fund, a sequestration order shall take effect with the next open season. The sequestration shall be accomplished by annual payments from that Fund to the General Fund of the Treasury. Those annual payments shall be financed solely by charging higher premiums. For purposes of subsection (b)(1), the sequestrable base for the Fund is the budget-year level of gross outlays resulting from claims paid after the sequestration order takes effect, and subsection (b)(2) shall not apply.

"(j) FEDERAL HOUSING FINANCE BOARD.—Any sequestration of the Federal Housing Finance Board shall be accomplished by annual payments (by the end of each fiscal year) from that Board to the general fund of the Treasury, in amounts equal to the uniform sequestration percentage for that year times the gross obligations of the Board in that year.

"(k) FEDERAL PAY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in section 10(b)(3), new budget authority to pay Federal personnel from direct spending accounts shall be reduced by the uniform percentage calculated under section 264, as applicable, but no sequestration order may reduce or have the effect of reducing the rate of pay to which any individual is entitled under any statutory pay system (as increased by any amount payable under section 5304 of title 5, United States Code, or section 302 of the Federal Employees Pay Comparability Act of 1990) or the rate of any element of military pay to which any individual is entitled under title 37, United States Code, or any increase in rates of pay which is scheduled to take effect under section 5303 of title 5, United States Code, section 1009 of title 37, United States Code, or any other provision of law.

"(2) Definitions.—For purposes of this subsection:

"(A) The term 'statutory pay system' shall have the meaning given that term in section 5302(1) of title 5, United States Code.

"(B) The term 'elements of military pay' means—

"(i) the elements of compensation of members of the uniformed services specified in section 1009 of title 37, United States Code,

"(ii) allowances provided members of the uniformed services under sections 403a and 405 of such title, and

"(iii) cadet pay and midshipman pay under section 203(c) of such title.

"(C) The term 'uniformed services' shall have the meaning given that term in section 101(3) of title 37, United States Code.

"(l) Guaranteed Student Loans.—(A) For all student loans under part B of title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965 made on or after the date of a sequestration, the origination fees shall be increased by a uniform percentage sufficient to produce the dollar savings in student loan programs for the fiscal year of the sequestration required by section 264, and all subsequent origination fees shall be increased by the same percentage, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

"(B) The origination fees to which paragraph (A) applies are those specified in sections 428H(f)(1) and 438(c) of that Act.

"(m) Insurance Programs.—Any sequestration in a Federal program that sells insurance contracts to the public (including the Federal Crop Insurance Fund, the National Insurance Development Fund, the National Flood Insurance Fund, insurance activities of the Overseas Private Insurance Corporation, and Veterans' life insurance programs) shall be accomplished by annual payments from the insurance fund or account to the general fund of the Treasury. The amount of each annual payment by each such fund or account shall be the amount received by the fund or account by increasing premiums on contracts entered into after the date a sequestration order takes effect by the uniform sequestration percentage, and premiums shall be increased accordingly.

"(n) Medicaid.—The November 15th estimate of medicaid spending by States shall be the base estimate from which the uniform percentage reduction under any sequestration, applied across-the-board by State, shall be made. Succeeding Federal payments to States shall reflect that reduction. The Health Care Financing Administration shall reconcile actual medicaid spending for each fiscal year with the base estimate as reduced by the uniform percentage, and adjust each State's grants as soon as practicable, but no later than 100 days after the end of the fiscal year to which the base estimate applied, to comply with the sequestration order.

"(o) Medicare.—

"(1) Timing of application of reductions.—

"(A) In general.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), if a reduction is made in payment amounts pursuant to a sequestration order, the reduction shall be applied to payment for services furnished after the effective date of the order. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of inpatient services furnished for an individual, the services shall be considered to be furnished on the date of the individual's discharge from the inpatient facility.

"(B) Payment on the basis of cost reporting periods.—In the case in which payment for services of a provider of services is made under title XVIII of the Social Security Act on a basis relating to the reasonable cost incurred for the services during a cost reporting period of the provider, if a reduction is made in payment amounts pursuant to a sequestration order, the reduction shall be applied to payment for costs for such services incurred at any time during each cost reporting period of the provider any part of which occurs after the effective date of the order, but only (for each such cost reporting period) in the same proportion as the fraction of the cost reporting period that occurs after the effective date of the order.

"(2) No increase in beneficiary charges in assignment-related cases.—If a reduction in payment amounts is made pursuant to a sequestration order for services for which payment under part B of title XVIII of the Social Security Act is made on the basis of an assignment described in section 1842(b)(3)(B)(ii), in accordance with section 1842(b)(6)(B), or under the procedure described in section 1870(f)(1) of such Act, the person furnishing the services shall be considered to have accepted payment of the reasonable charge for the services, less any reduction in payment amount made pursuant to a sequestration order, as payment in full.

"(p) Postal Service Fund.—Any sequestration of the Postal Service Fund shall be accomplished by annual payments from that Fund to the General Fund of the Treasury, and the Postmaster General of the United States shall have the duty to make those payments during the fiscal year to which the sequestration order applies and each succeeding fiscal year. The amount of each annual payment shall be—

"(1) the uniform sequestration percentage, times

"(2) the estimated gross obligations of the Postal Service Fund in that year other than those obligations financed with an appropriation for revenue foregone for that year.

Any such payment for a fiscal year shall be made as soon as possible during the fiscal year, except that it may be made in installments within that year if the payment schedule is approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. Within 30 days after the sequestration order is issued, the Postmaster General shall submit to the Postal Rate Commission a plan for financing the annual payment for that fiscal year and publish that plan in the Federal Register. The plan may assume efficiencies in the operation of the Postal Service, reductions in capital expenditures, increases in the prices of services, or any combination, but may not assume a lower Fund surplus or higher Fund deficit and must follow the requirements of existing law governing the Postal Service in all other respects. Within 30 days of the receipt of that plan, the Postal Rate Commission shall approve the plan or modify it in the manner that modifications are allowed under current law. If the Postal Rate Commission does not respond to the plan within 30 days, the plan submitted by the Postmaster General shall go into effect. Any plan may be later revised by the submission of a new plan to the Postal Rate Commission, which may approve or modify it.

"(q) Power Marketing Administrations and T.V.A.—Any sequestration of the Department of Energy power marketing administration funds or the Tennessee Valley Authority fund shall be accomplished by annual payments from those funds to the General Fund of the Treasury, and the administrators of those funds shall have the duty to make those payments during the fiscal year to which the sequestration order applies and each succeeding fiscal year. The amount of each annual payment by a fund shall be—

"(1) the uniform sequestration percentage, times

"(2) the estimated gross obligations of the fund in that year.

Any such payment for a fiscal year shall be made as soon as possible during the fiscal year, except that it may be made in installments within that year if the payment schedule is approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. Annual payments by a fund may be financed by reductions in costs required to produce the presequester amount of power (but those reductions shall not include reductions in the amount of power supplied by the fund), by reductions in capital expenditures, by increases in rates, or by any combination, but may not be financed by a lower fund surplus or a higher fund deficit and must follow the requirements of existing law governing the fund in all other respects. The administrator of a fund or the TVA Board is authorized to take the actions specified above in order to make the annual payments to the Treasury.

"(r) Veterans' Housing Loans.—(1) For all housing loans guaranteed, insured, or made under chapter 37 of title 38, United States Code, on or after the date of a sequestration, the origination fees shall be increased by a uniform percentage sufficient to produce the dollar savings in veterans' housing programs for the fiscal year of the sequestration required by section 264, and all subsequent origination fees shall be increased by the same percentage, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

"(2) The origination fees to which paragraph (1) applies are those referred to in section 3729 of title 38, United States Code.".

(b) Conforming Changes.—(1) The item relating to section 254 in the table of sections set forth in section 200 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 256. General and special sequestration rules.".

(c) Within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and the Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall each issue a report that includes projections of Federal spending, revenues, and deficits as a result of enactment of this Act and setting forth the economic and technical assumptions used to make those projections.

SEC. 14502. LINE ITEM VETO EFFECTIVE UNLESS DISAPPROVED.

(a) In General.—

If the committee fails to report the bill within that period, it is in order to move that the House discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill. A motion to discharge may be made only by an individual favoring the bill (but only after the legislative day on which a Member announces to the House the Member's intention to do so). No amendment to the bill is in order, except any Member may move to strike the disapproval of any rescission or rescissions of budget authority or any proposed repeal of a targeted tax benefit, as applicable, if supported by 49 other Members. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House. Such leaders, or either of them, may, from the time under their control on the passage of the bill, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any debatable motion or appeal.

(4) A motion to further limit debate is not debatable. A motion to recommit (except a motion to recommit with instructions to report back within a specified number of days not to exceed one, not counting any day on which the Senate is not in session) is not in order.

(f) POINTS OF ORDER.—

(2) It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any amendment to a rescission/receipts disapproval bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ORTON] and a Member opposed will be recognized for 30 minutes each.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in aggressive opposition to the gentleman's proposal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ORTON].

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT], the chairman of our coalition.

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Chairman, first of all, I would like to thank the coalition members and the staff for all the hard work they have done in putting this budget together. We have worked over the last several months with limited number of staff, and we believe we put a good budget together. The budget obviously is a product of hard work. It is a sound and credible and reasonable alternative. There are some technical and major public policy differences.

But we come to the floor today not armed with any charts. We come today armed with the facts. And we would like to take the opportunity today to have a thoughtful and respectful discussion about our budget and about how it differs from the Republican budget.

We have a great deal of respect for the chairman of the Committee on the Budget on the Republican side and we do not question his motives on his budget. But we do think there is a difference, and we would like very much to have the opportunity to explain that and have a kind and reasonable discussion.

We want to make a commitment. At the end of this process, the coalition members are committed to get this country's financial house in order. We will work with anyone in this House at the end of this process to see that that gets done.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAXON].

Mr. PAXON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute and appreciate the opportunity to address the House.

Before I do, I just want to commend my dear friend and colleague from the State of Ohio, who I think is a gentleman, a true revolutionary making history today for the American people. To my friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] I tip my hat again.

Mr. Chairman, today is an extraordinary day for the American people. As Speaker GINGRICH said the other day, the changes we are making for the American people in today's reconciliation bill approach the level of sweeping change advanced by President Roosevelt's New Deal. Without question, our dramatic reshaping of the Federal Government certainly surpasses the magnitude of change advanced by Lyndon Johnson's big government Great Society programs.

Without doubt, history will judge our efforts today as the start of a new era in American life and in American politics.

Unfortunately, not all Members of this body are willing to stake a dramatic new course for America and its people. The liberal Democrat leadership in this body still clings to the failed policies of the past. They still believe that America can continue deficit spending with impunity. They still believe in the Great Society notion that the Federal Government is the leading institution in American life.

A few Members of the Democrat Party in this House have rejected the notion of their liberal leaders and at least made an attempt to present an alternative reconciliation plan that balances the budget in 7 years.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, this Democrat alternative is serious flawed.

As we set out to dramatically reshape the Federal Government, a government that was built with the hard work and sweat of American taxpayers, it is only fair that we provide the American people with a dividend in the form of tax relief for working families.

The Democrat alternative ignores the very people whose hard earned dollars built the bloated Government we are now downsizing by refusing to provide them with tax relief.

Mr. Chairman, in my own region of western New York and the Finger Lakes, nearly 430,000 children will be eligible for the $500 tax credit, worth nearly $220 million to their families—not to government.

Nearly 15,000 senior citizen households will see the 1993 assault on their Social Security earnings reversed.

For the 200 or so couples in my region who were married last week, they will see a slow reversal of the unfair marriage penalty contained in the Tax Code.

And for the 120 or so senior citizens in my community who this week became eligible for Medicare, our reconciliation plan protects their access to health care until the year 2010.

Mr. Chairman, the Democrat alternative accomplishes none of these goals.

Our reconciliation plan is the right answer to get America on a new course. Our reconciliation plan says to the taxpayers back home; we work for you. You are our bosses. You are paying to keep us here and you deserve a dividend as your Government is restructured.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the Republican plan and reject the Democrat alternative.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes to explain our bill.

Mr. Chairman, my colleagues, the coalition budget also reaches balance in the year 2002, but does so by reducing the deficit by more than $30 billion more than the leadership plan before us.

Let me just divert for a minute and tell my colleagues a little story. Most of my colleagues have seen me on the floor with my son, Will. I have learned something from my son over the last several months. That is, when I feed him his vanilla custard first, he does not want to eat the green beans. History proves that our country is the same way. We want desert first.

Mr. Chairman, in the 1980 changes that we went through we made the tax cuts, but we never got around to making the difficult spending cuts. The coalition budget puts spending cuts ahead of tax cuts, in contrast to the leadership plan which borrows money to pay for tax cuts and cuts deeply into critical priority spending areas like education and health care.

The coalition budget proves that it is possible to balance the budget and also restore solvency to the Medicare trust fund to avoid devastating cuts to Medicare, to avoid raising premiums for low- and middle-income seniors. In fact, our plan would have seniors, the average senior, paying $1,000 less per person over the next 7 years than the plan before us. Mr. Chairman, it also avoids cuts which threaten the solvency of rural and inner-city hospitals.

The coalition budget proves that it is possible to balance the budget at the same time avoiding huge Medicaid cuts contained in the leadership plan that will threaten nursing home care for seniors. Ours retains the nursing home standards in current law, threatened health care for millions of poor Americans, and provide a huge unfunded mandate to the States or, in the alternative, raise premiums on poverty-level seniors by up to $5,000 apiece over the next 7 years. It also retains the spousal exemption so that seniors do not have to become impoverished when one spouse goes into the hospital.

The coalition budget also proves that it is possible to balance the budget and at the same time reform welfare in a way that provides tough work requirements, provides for child care, child enforcement, health care, and training skills to allow people to move off of welfare, provides protection for children, avoids new individual mandates on the States which merely implement a new social agenda. It avoids crippling cuts in discretionary spending to protect critical areas like education, health research, job training, economic development, and infrastructure. It avoids severe cuts to agriculture programs which could threaten the existence of family farms and rural communities.

It avoids a tax increase, as Mr. Kemp put it, on working people, 14 million working Americans of low and moderate income, as contained in the leadership plan on the earned income tax credit changes. It avoids unnecessary levels of cuts to student loans, single and multifamily housing programs, Federal worker benefits, and environmental areas. It does not politicize the debt limit and risk financial solvency of the Treasury.

Ultimately, Mr. Chairman, the coalition plan proves that it is possible to balance the budget over 7 years using honest numbers, shared sacrifices, sound priorities, and common sense, without blue smoke and mirrors as Senator DOMENICI called the $36 billion plug figure in the leadership Medicare plan. Our budget reflects where the majority of Americans would like to see our ideological debate resolved.

Our budget has received endorsements from various and interesting groups from all sides of the political spectrum including the Concord Coalition, the Washington Post, the New York Times, the Philadelphia Inquirer, and the Minneapolis Star Bulletin.

The coalition plan places deficit reduction over ideology, puts spending cuts before tax cuts, and presents a complete and credible package without blue smoke and mirrors. Our budget reflects Democratic priorities, but, more important, it reflects America's priorities.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of the coalition budget and am happy to announce that in the other body Senators SIMON, ROBB, KERREY, and CONRAD are going to be introducing the same bill as an amendment on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the very distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BURR].

Mr. BURR. Mr. Chairman, I also come, as the gentleman who stood up earlier on the Democrat side of the aisle, with no charts, with no maps, even with no buttons, even though I have worn one today, because in fact today the strategy has been clear. The strategy by the minority in this House is that, if we say things that are untrue enough, people will believe them. If we say to seniors that trying to fix Medicare will hurt them, they might believe that. If, in fact, we say to children do not worry about the debt, we are going to solve it at some point, that they might believe it. If in fact we say to the poor enough do not worry about federally driven programs, the States cannot do it, that they might believe it.

As my colleagues know, the fact is that I have had a button on all day that said if not now, when? Well, if not now, when will we stand up for seniors and secure the future of Medicare for them and for future generations? If not now, when will we stand up for children in this country and for once say we are going to begin to do away with the debt problem that we have put on their shoulders? If not now, when? If not now, when will we say to those poor individuals in this country who need Federal assistance we are going to ask their neighbors to design programs because they know better than bureaucrats what they need? If not now, when are we going to do what the American people want us to do, and turn down this substitute, and vote for the reconciliation package that will truly balance our budget in 7 years and save the programs of this Government?

Mr. Chairman, I hope and expect this legislation will foster the development of provider networks, including specialty provider networks because of my interest in assuring seniors that they will have choices relating to behavioral health care, rehabilitation care and other specialty services.

The private sector has engaged in direct contracting with specialty networks in order to lower costs and improve access to quality treatment as well as expand choice for consumers. The Medicare Program should also explore the utilization of these specialty networks for the same reasons.

I believe the Health Care Finance Administration has adequate demonstration authority under current law to test the feasibility and desirability of permitting specialty provider sponsored networks to serve the new Medicare market. A demonstration project would serve to determine whether seniors have access to the most cost-effective quality treatments for specialized services.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PETERSON], who is the chairman for policy of the coalition.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to commend all the chairmen of the task forces of the coalition and Members that served on those task forces for their hard work. It has been a lot of effort put in this budget, and this coalition budget is a honest plan to balance the budget, as the gentleman from Utah said, in 7 years through real reforms in Government programs. We make tough choices to balance the budget first instead of borrowing money to pay for tax cuts is being done in the other plan. Because we do not have tax cuts up front, we add $30 billion less to the national debt over the next 7 years than the Republican plan and put the deficit on a much more reasonable guidepath toward a balanced budget. The deficit actually increases in the second year under the Kasich substitute because of that tax increase. The coalition plan does not include this deficit bump in the second year, and in fact reduces the deficit by $61 billion in the second year. The coalition plan does not include any of the unspecified Medicare savings or budget gimmicks such as pension reversion, merger of the bank insurance fund, back-loaded IRA's, and other tax changes that make the deficit appear smaller in the first year but actually cost the taxpayers money over the long term. If we remove these gimmicks from the plan, the deficit will be $25 billion higher than in the first 2 years under the Republican plan. The coalition budget backs up the deficit reduction in this bill with tough enforcement mechanisms that make sure we meet the deficit targets. The coalition budget includes budget process reforms such as line-item veto and the lockbox to allow Congress and the President to cut spending further.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, we make a change in here that most anybody looking at this thinks we need to make. The coalition budget includes a 0.5-percent reduction in the CPI. In the Republican plan they pick up the real Bureau of Labor Statistics 0.2 change in 1999. We do what a lot of people say we should do. Five prominent economists chaired by Michael Boskin said that the CPI is overstated by between 0.7 and 2 percent. Alan Greenspan has said that it has been overstated by maybe 1 percent. The CBO says it is anywhere from 0.2 to 0.8 percent. So we picked something that we think makes some sense, and, if we are going to get at this budget problem, we have got to get something out of every area. This CPI is a fair way to spread the burden of balancing the budget evenly by treating all programs equally including tax indexing. There is lots of Republicans, including the Republican majority leader, that support this, and we also have a flat-rate COLA which we think makes a lot of sense for lower-income Americans.

We urge our colleagues' support.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MICA].

Mr. MICA. Mr. Chairman, last week President Clinton said, "I increased taxes too much and cut spending too little." We all saw it here, and, as my colleagues know, that is really what this debate is all about. Will we continue 40 years of blindly throwing taxpayer money at our problems, or will for one time reverse that failed policy? Today we must really ask ourselves what has the tax-and-spend policy of these past 30 or 40 years brought us?

We discourage and we penalize people for working. We have destroyed family structures. Our Federal programs are like sieves. They are fraught with waste, fraud, and abuse. In my district nearly 50 percent of our community college entrants need remedial education. Our children must look forward to bleak futures, part-time jobs, low-paying jobs, or service jobs. We penalize our seniors for working. We export our jobs. We discourage savings. We penalize investment, and, to top it all off, the wonderful mess we have created for our people makes them afraid to go out and walk on our streets at night.

Today we have with the budget before us possibly the last opportunity to change all that. I urge the adoption of the Republican budget and urge the defeat of this fig-leaf substitute.

□ 1630

Mr. PAYNE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and I thank all my colleagues in the coalition for their hard work on this substitute.

Mr. Chairman, there are many good reasons why this substitute is better than the Republican bill. But let me just tell you why it's better for all Americans who are, or who will be, served by Medicare.

First, the coalition budget saves Medicare by restoring its hospital trust fund. But unlike the Republican budget, our plan doesn't ask our least vulnerable seniors to shoulder an undue burden. We maintain basic part B premiums for seniors at 25 percent while we ask seniors who earn more than $50,000 to pay more. Overall, our budget provides $100 billion more for Medicare over 7 years than the Republican plan.

Second, the coalition's reforms in Medicare won't destroy health care in rural and other medically underserved areas. Our plan avoids deep, harmful cuts in payments to these vulnerable hospitals. And we incorporate vital reforms recommended by the bipartisan Rural Health Care Coalition.

Third, the coalition's Medicare reforms expand coverage for preventive medicine.

Fourth, the coalition's budget fights Medicare fraud and abuse better.

And fifth, our Medicare reforms aren't based on gimmicks such as the look-back provision. The reforms made by the coalition are clear and there for the American people to see and understand.

Mr. Chairman, the Republicans have been telling us for months now that we must cut $270 billion from Medicare to save the program from bankruptcy and to balance the budget.

Our coalition budget proves them wrong on both counts. Our plan ensures the solvency of Medicare, balances the budget, and protects our most vulnerable seniors, while spending $100 billion more than the Republican plan on Medicare for the next 7 years.

The New York Times says the coalition's plan shows "the budget can be balanced by 2002 without pummeling the poor or Medicare."

The Washington Post says our budget is "easily the best horse in the race."

These and many other newspapers across the country, as well as the Concord Coalition, are endorsing the coalition's budget.

I urge my colleagues to vote for this substitute.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KIM].

Mr. KIM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, we all agree that we cannot continue spending and spending more than we take in. We all know we have to balance the budget. We all agree with that. In private, if you spend more than you earn, you have to file a bankruptcy. My kid can understand this.

The debate is not whether we should or should not. I think the debate is how to do it. Obviously, we have two kinds of solutions. One is a real solution, the Republican solution, which guarantees that the budget will be balanced at the end of 7 years. The other plan is gentler, a band-aid plan, a feel-good plan.

Let me talk about this. Right now our national deficit is sky high. The interest payment alone last year was about the same as our national defense budget. This is a tough time. We need a tough solution, not a band-aid feel-good solution. As a matter of fact, the feel-good solution was rejected yesterday by the other body by 96 to 3. Only two Democrats supported this feel-good plan yesterday in the other body. Forty-four Democrats rejected this band-aid, feel-good plan.

Obviously, the plan we adopt must be the Republican plan. I do not see any other plan except this. This is a tough solution, a realistic solution. We guarantee we will balance the budget at the end of 7 years, which our budget does.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 seconds to correct the gentleman.

The gentleman reflected that this alternative had been voted on in the Senate yesterday and lost 96 to 3. That is incorrect. This alternative has not been voted on in the Senate. Several Senators indicated their intention to raise it today. That is an incorrect statement.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HALL].

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the coalition's budget reconciliation plan. It is a fair and responsible proposal that achieves a balanced budget and yet is not unkind in doing so. These are two important points, Mr. Chairman. It is important for our Nation's future that we ensure economic security through a balanced budget, and it is equally important that we protect all of our citizens in the process. It is also vital that we protect the most vulnerable in our Nation—our children, our seniors, our sick, our poor.

As chairman of the Coalition's Health Care Task Force, I would like to address the coalition's plan to reform Medicare and Medicaid. We recognize that reforms are needed to protect the future of these programs. We recognize that we need to slow the rate of growth. We believe that our plan achieves these goals less painfully than the majority's proposal.

The coalition budget achieves a balanced budget while protecting Medicare. It does this by slowing the rate of growth and by giving seniors more choices of health care plans—but it does not force them to change. The reforms contained in our budget have far less impact on Medicare than those in the leadership's budget—by about $100 billion less. Our Medicare plan increases coverage for preventive care and maintains full home health care coverage. It reduces providers' Medicare reimbursements far less than the leadership budget does. Our plan includes fraud and abuse provisions, medical malpractice reform, and anti-trust relief. It establishes a commission to report every 3 years on the effectiveness of our plan. Most importantly, Mr. Chairman, it maintains part B premiums at 25 percent for low and middle-income seniors and avoids cuts to rural and inner city hospitals. The coalition's Medicare provisions are less painful than those in the leadership's plan—and yet will keep us on target to balance the budget.

Those who need our help the most—those covered under Medicaid—also are protected under the coalition's plan. Our budget maintains Medicaid payment of part B premimus, deductibles, and co-payments for low-income seniors. It continues nursing home standards and protects spouses from exhausting their resources to pay for nursing home costs. These are safety nets that are critical to the health and economic well-being of our citizens, Mr. Chairman, and they must be preserved.

Mr. Chairman, we must honor our contract with the 37 million seniors being served by Medicare. We have an obligation to protect their current quality of care. At the same time, part of our contract with them is to ensure the future solvency of the program. The coalition budget accomplishes both of these. Although I don't agree with all aspects of either the leadership bill or the coalition budget, I believe the coalition budget is the most responsible proposal before the House today. I, for example, favor some tax relief, such as the $500 child tax credit and capital gains relief, that will spawn income and not cause outgo, but the argument is strong that we should not cut taxes until we balance the budget. I believe there will be some tax cuts in the final bill.

I believe that we are within a stone's throw of where the Republicans, Democrats, and the President will finally come to. We have an extraordinary opportunity to achieve a balanced budget. This is a goal that I have supported throughout my years in Congress and one that is long overdue. But we must be sure that we are stepping in the right direction, that we are resolute but kind in our efforts to protect Medicare and also balance our budget. Mr. Chairman, I believe the coalition budget is a right step, and I urge my colleagues' support.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CHRISTENSEN].

Mr. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Chairman, in November the American people elected a new Congress to come to Washington. They elected us on a number of principles, but the one that I campaigned on was cutting taxes, cutting bureaucracy, and cutting spending. The Democrat alternative falls short on cutting taxes. One in particular is the capital gains tax cut.

A capital gains tax cut is good for the small business person, it is good for the little guy, but we have heard a lot about the fact that it only helps the rich. That is not quite true. If we look at this chart, we will see that in last year's returns, capital gains was filed by people making less than $50,000, 58 percent of the time. As a matter of fact, 86 percent of all the returns filing a capital gain were from people making less than $100,000.

Capital gains will spur the economy. We know it. It is proven. It has happened before. It is going to help our seniors, it is going to help our children. It is good for the working men and women of this country. I believe that the Democrat alternative falls short in not returning people's money back to its rightful owner. That is why I support the Kasich substitute, the Republican plan, and why I think we should vote no on the Democrat alternative and vote yes on the Republican plan to balance this budget for the future of this country.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Arkansas [Mrs. LINCOLN].

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. Chairman, both of these plans balance the budget. I think that is a lot of what the American people are asking us to do. The way they ask us to do it is in a fair and reasonable way.

I think in a recent article in the Philadelphia Enquirer our group of 23 conservative Democrats, the coalition, are called a group of renegades. We are basically called that because we are the few people here in Washington that are willing to do exactly what the American people want, and that is to put people above politics, especially the partisan politics that are played here in Washington.

As I said, both of these plans balance the budget. Many of us from the coalition agree with the former speaker, that there is a need for tax reform and tax relief. However, what the American people want us to do is to cut spending first, and that is what we do. In specific areas of Medicaid, we are much more reasonable and fair than the Republican alternative. We plan to treat Medicaid more fairly than the Republican budget. The Coalition cuts $100 billion less than the Republican plan, while still balancing the budget by 2002.

The coalition keeps nursing home quality care standards that are currently in the Federal law. We do not impose liens on family farms or homes, and spouses or children of nursing home residents do not have to spend all of their assets to pay for care. The coalition imposes a per capita limit on Federal spending, instead of limiting growth per State. The coalition will allow Medicaid to continue to guarantee to pay for low-income Medicare beneficiaries.

In my State of Arkansas, roughly 70 to 80 percent of the Medicare recipients of our State have their premiums paid by Medicaid, but most importantly, the coalition will continue to guarantee health care coverage for the three categories of Medicaid beneficiaries: Low-income mothers and children, elderly people needing long-term care, and the disabled population.

I urge my colleagues to take the reasonable approach to balancing the budget.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. MYRICK], a former mayor.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Chairman, our colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. TOM COBURN, became the proud grandfather of a little baby girl, Sarah. Today's vote on this balanced Budget Reconciliation Act is going to be an historic vote that is going to make a big difference in Sarah's life. It restores fiscal sanity to our Government. As a mother of five and a grandmother of six, I have a moral obligation to balance this budget. I want my kids to have the same opportunity to succeed that I have enjoyed in this generation. We are looking today at a national debt of $4.8 trillion.

What this vote on the balanced budget means is very simply that Sarah and my new grandchild, No. 7, who is going to be born in December, will not have to pay $187,000 just to cover the interest on the debt alone through their lifetimes. We cannot go on literally mortgaging our children and our grandchildren's future, and saddling them with this huge mountain of debt.

When we pass this bill today, it is going to be the first step in balancing a budget that has not been balanced in 26 years. That is historic. We owe it to our children and we owe it to our grandchildren, and their children, to pass a balanced budget. This bill is the first step in the right direction.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. HARMAN].

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, my family and I would personally benefit from the tax cuts contained in H.R. 2491, but they are wrong. I strongly support the coalition substitute, which cuts spending first and defers tax relief until the budget is balanced. As the mother of the bipartisan lockbox, deficit lockbox amendment, let me point out that the coalition substitute is the only, repeat, the only vote we can take today to include a formal deficit lockbox mechanism as part of our 7-year balanced budget program. Only the coalition substitute makes a cut a cut, this year and in the out years.

Deficit hawks, listen up. This is the defining vote for those serious about process reform, reform that will genuinely help to reduce the deficit. Deficit hawks, Republican freshmen, this is the vote you need to make. Support the coalition substitute and its bipartisan deficit reduction lockbox.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the very distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON], the reformer of agriculture in the House.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, last June, I joined with my colleagues in the House in voting to balance the Federal budget over 7 years. This is an historic step and, if successful, would represent the first balanced budget in 33 years.

I voted in favor of a balanced budget because it is time that Congress finally take the necessary action to slow Federal spending. Failure to correct the course now will land us in dire straits over time. In fact, if we decide to continue spending at the same levels we had in fiscal year 1995, the annual deficit—the amount by which spending exceed receipts each year—would increase from $210 billion in fiscal year 1996 to $349 billion in fiscal year 2002. That increase represents a $1.165 trillion addition to the national debt. Without any additional changes, the interest on the national debt will increase from $235 billion in fiscal year 1996 to $334 billion in 2002.

This again becomes clear if you just look at how much more we spend on interest on the national debt than we spend on our education and training programs. In fiscal year 1995, we spent 66 times more on interest on the national debt than we do on the Head Start Program. We spent 32 times more on interest on the national debt than we do on the Title I Program which benefits disadvantaged gradeschool kids. We spent 149 times more on interest on the national debt than we did on all elementary and secondary school improvement programs. We spent 158 times more on interest on the national debt than we did on Federal aid to vocational education, 180 times more than on the JOBS program to get people off welfare, and 212 times more than on Job Corps. Clearly this is a distorted sense of priorities because interest on the debt is only going to grow if we do not take action now.

Today, entitlement spending makes up 64 percent of the entire Federal budget, and spending on discretionary programs, such as defense, education and job training, makes up 36 percent. Without significant shifts in priorities, by 2012 entitlement spending will consume the entire budget. That means unless we institute a significant increase in the income tax, zero Federal dollars spent for our national defense, for any education programs, other than student loans, and countless other Federal programs.

It is vital that we take steps to slow the growth in Federal spending because of the dramatic growth in entitlement programs. Although I continue to support the existence of many of our entitlement programs—especially Social Security, Medicare and student loans—we risk them consuming the entire budget.

THE OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1995

The budget that we passed in June was only a blueprint for action on congressional spending. Today, through the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995, we are making tough choices to slow the rate of Federal spending on entitlement programs.

Slowing the rate of growth in Federal entitlement programs is not a cut. Instead, we are slowing the rate of increase in spending. If you look at the big picture this becomes clear. Over the last 7 years, between 1989 and 1995 as a nation we spent $9.5 trillion. By taking the requisite steps to balance the budget over 7 years, we will still spend $11.2 trillion. That's $2.2 trillion more than in the previous 7 years. Clearly, this package makes tough choices, but spending still increases.

Let us take a look at three of the components of the budget reconciliation package that are most important to the third district. The changes in the Student Loan Program, the deregulation of the dairy industry and pro-growth tax cuts. Earlier, I expressed my support for another major component, the Medicare Preservation Act.

STUDENT LOAN REFORM

One of the tougher jobs during the budget process was the task given to the Economic and Educational Opportunities Committee of which I am a member. To find $10.1 billion in savings over 7 years in the Student Loan Program. That is a lot of money. But if you look at the fact that we will spend 242 times more this year on interest on the national debt than on higher education programs, you will realize that this is absolutely necessary. In the end, the committee was successful in crafting a student-friendly package while getting our fiscal house in order.

The package crafted by the committee would eliminate the President's Direct Loan Program. If allowed to expand, the Direct Loan Program would transform the Education Department into a bank and would disregard the long-term impact on the Federal budget. This year, the Congressional Budget Office and the Congressional Research Service have estimated that the Student Loan Program would cost $1.5 billion over 7 years. The program would require that the Education Department either hire or contract with hundreds of loan processors—duplicating what the private sector has already perfected.

The student loan reform package passed by the committee would preserve student aid for all students, despite eliminating the direct loan program. Any student who wants financial aid will be able to receive it. Students will continue to have access to Stafford and PLUS loan dollars. The annual student loan volume is projected to increase 47 percent over the next 7 years, from $24.5 billion in 1995 to $36 billion in 2002. The annual student loan amount would increase from $2,340 to $4,300 over the 7 years.

We have also succeeded in minimizing costs to students, by requiring the financial industry to shoulder its fair share—$4.8 billion. Students will not accrue or be asked to pay interest while they are still in school. In addition, they will maintain the 6-month-grace period before they are required to start repaying their loans. The only difference is that interest will begin accruing the month after graduation. This will cost graduates on average between $6 and $9 per month during the repayment period.

DAIRY POLICY FOR WORLD MARKET—THE DAIRY TITLE OF FREEDOM TO FARM

The 1995 farm bill marks a key change in farm commodity pricing, and—especially important to western Wisconsin—a deregulation of the dairy industry. The "Freedom to Farm Act" put forth by House Agriculture Committee Chairman PAT ROBERTS, would save $13.4 billion over the next 7 years.

The dairy title of the Freedom to Farm Act, which I crafted as chairman of the Dairy and Livestock Subcommittee of the House Agriculture Committee, would deregulate the market in dairy products, leveling the playing field and freeing western Wisconsin farmers from the outdated and market-suppressing milk marketing order system. The change will enable U.S. dairy producers to become and remain players in the world market.

The act would continue market transition payments over the next 7 years, and would fully fund the Dairy Export Incentive Program. In addition, the act would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to help the industry from export trading companies and continue existing producer and processor promotion programs.

TAX CHANGES: PRO-GROWTH, PRIVATE-SECTOR INCENTIVES

Reducing the amount of Federal Government growth also requires that we return control of money which we have traditionally sent to Washington back to the taxpayers. Although I believe that we must be very careful when enacting tax cuts at the same time we are balancing the budget, I have consistently supported pro-growth tax policies. The reconciliation bill before us today will help grow the economy through market incentives.

The reconciliation bill would cut individual capital gains taxes by 50 percent and corporate capital gains rates by 25 percent. These cuts will spur investment to enable the United States to maintain its competitive edge in the world economy. In addition, the bill would create new, expanded savings accounts, like individual retirement accounts, that would allow individuals to withdraw savings tax-free for major investments, such as for the purchase of a new house or for a child's college or vocational education. But the bill also closes $27 billion in corporate tax loopholes.

In sum, it is time for us to act to protect our future, to ensure that we have the option of investing in important programs in which there should be a Federal role, such as education and training. The choices that we have made are not easy, and this bill is not perfect by any means. But it represents an important start toward real fiscal responsibility. I wholeheartedly agree with that goal. By eliminating the deficit, and gradually reducing the debt, we will increase the economy's capacity for growth and ensure that our children have a chance at a prosperous future.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate those comments, but I would like to engage the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment of the Committee on Commerce in a brief colloquy.

If I understand the current law, Medicaid eligibility for a person who is disabled is based on whether the Social Security Administration has recognized them to be disabled. Social Security has improved the eligibility determination process to help ensure that disabled people get recognized as disabled and therefore qualify for Medicaid as soon as possible. This is especially important for people who have disabilities that are life-threatening and are at risk of dying before the Government finds them to be disabled.

My question to the chairman of the committee is, Is it the committee's expectation that a State, in establishing its Medigrant, will expedite determinations of eligibility for people with life-threatening conditions?

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUNDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Very clearly, Mr. Chairman, we would expect the States to take such steps to ensure that such people receive expedited determinations of eligibility, and would be very disappointed if they did not take these steps.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the reassurance of the gentleman, and look forward to making sure there is no doubt about this after it comes out of conference.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. CARDIN].

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the coalition budget. It is clearly the best plan before us. It balances the budget within 7 years, and it provides for less borrowing and less debt than the Republican plan. It is not perfect. I disagree with some of the provisions in there. I would like to see a little more time in understanding the COLA changes. I would have had less Medicare cuts. However, the key difference between the substitute and the Republican bill is the tax provisions. There are no tax cuts in this proposal, because this proposal is serious about deficit reduction.

The Republican budget runs the risk of us repeating the same mistakes that we made in 1981. In 1981 we thought we could cut taxes. We promised to control future spending. We saw the deficit soar. We could very well end up with the Republican budget devastating programs for our seniors, for our children, and our environment, and still have large deficits. That is the risk we run with the Republican budget.

The coalition budget puts the spending cuts toward deficit reduction, where it should. It does less cuts in order to preserve Medicare, in order to preserve our opportunities for higher education, in order to preserve our programs for the environment. The Members have a clear choice. In supporting the coalition budget, they are supporting cuts for deficit reduction. In the Republican plan, we are talking about cuts in order to provide for tax breaks for the wealthy. I think it is a clear choice, and I am proud to support the coalition budget.

I rise in support of the coalition budget plan. It is the best plan that has yet been proposed for balancing the budget.

Two years ago, we took a major first step toward eliminating Federal budget deficits. The 1993 budget plan has succeeded in bringing deficits down for 3 consecutive years, and the deficit in the year just ended was about half what it would have been.

This year, we have to take the next step, and move toward a balanced budget. The coalition budget will balance the budget in 7 years, through spending cuts that are real, but not harsh. The plan balances the budget more quickly, with less borrowing than the Republican leadership budget.

The coalition budget is not perfect. The cost of living adjustment in this plan raises many serious issues that have not been adequately considered. The level of Medicare cuts would not devastate the program, as the Republican plan does, but they exceed the amount I believe is necessary. I would have preferred alternative spending cuts.

Nonetheless, the authors of the coalition plan have learned the lessons of recent budget history. In 1981, in the Reagan revolution, Congress enacted the Reagan plan of tax cuts and promised spending cuts. What resulted was an explosion of Federal deficit spending.

Today, in 1995, the Gingrich revolution is hell-bent on repeating the fiscal mistakes of 1981. By cutting taxes by $245 billion, mostly to benefit the most well-off Americans, this plan again puts the cart before the horse. We should not be borrowing hundreds of billions of dollars for tax breaks, while we are still piling up hundreds of billions of debt. With the Republican budget, we could very easily end up slashing programs that are needed for our seniors, students, and the environment, and still have large budget deficits.

The coalition budget is driven by the need to balance the budget, preserve Medicare, and maintain our commitment to higher education. The Republican leadership budget is about cutting taxes and taking the first step toward eliminating Medicare. Do not take my word for it. Speaker GINGRICH, the architect of this plan, yesterday said that he would have gotten rid of Medicare but it would not be "politically smart."

The difference could not be clearer. The coalition budget cuts spending to balance the budget. The Republican budget cuts taxes to benefit the wealthy, and cuts Medicare as a first step toward eliminating this most successful American program. I urge my colleagues to support the coalition budget, and reject the committee budget.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALKER], the czar of science, and the vice-chairman of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to begin by thanking the coalition for bringing forward a balanced budget to the floor, and allowing us to debate a couple of different balanced budgets out here on the floor. I think that is a useful thing to have done. I happen to think that it is preferable to give the American people an opportunity to get some tax cuts out of all of this to what the coalition has done, but I think it is useful to have a debate about this.

I happen to believe that some of the spending reductions that we are making are in fact responsible spending reductions, because they go toward trying to reform the system a good deal more than what the Coalition does. But again, it is a useful exercise.

The reason why the tax cuts are important is for the reason of what happens in my district. Sixty-five million dollars in tax cuts come primarily to families with children in my district; over 100,000 children in my district are eligible for tax cuts. Their families are eligible for tax breaks under our budget. That is something that gets denied under the Democrats' proposal on the floor. I just think that it is a better plan to give people back a little bit of what they owe.

Mr. Chairman, I am a little disappointed, I must say, in the debate that we had a little earlier today that suggested, for instance, that the Speaker had spoken out against Medicare.

The fact is, some of the charts I saw on the floor and some of the phoney language I heard from the other side is very disappointing because I think some of the people may have known about it. The fact is, the Speaker's quote is quite clear in what we said. He was talking about HCFA. He was talking about a centralized bureaucratic monstrosity that is in the government called HCFA. He said that perhaps at some point we ought to get rid of some of the bureaucracies that surround all of this process.

It seems to me that that is what the American people have told us. They have told us that government is too big and spends too much and that we ought to get rid of a lot of the centralized bureaucracy. I think the American people would agree with that. Nothing was said by the Speaker that indicated that he was talking about Medicare in any way, shape or form.

So I think for some of the disingenuous language that we have heard on the floor today about some of the issues we have seen discussing is disturbing. That being said, Mr. Chairman, it is a good thing to be debating balanced budgets.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 seconds to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to remind my friend from Pennsylvania that the chairman of the Committee on the Budget has informed this body that the $500 per child tax cut is not in his bill.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER].

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ORTON] for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to reiterate something that has reverberated through this chamber and that is the Coalition budget gets to balance in 7 years every bit as much as the Republican budget gets to balance. However, ours is more responsible, it is wiser and fairer.

Mr. Chairman, I would tell the Members that I do not know of any group of people who have more credibility on the wisdom of a balanced budget in this Nation than the Concord Coalition. Those of you who are listening, the Concord Coalition is a bipartisan group who came together because of their concern, all of our concern, about our national deficit and debt. The Concord Coalition has endorsed the Coalition budget today as being the better way to go for our country.

In welfare reform, for example, we put people to work in a better way and faster than does the Republican plan. We do not rob the people who are trying to stay off of welfare of their earned income tax credit, the working poor, the people who are getting up every day and going to work, trying to stay off of the welfare rolls, that is simply the wrong way to go. They need a helping hand, a hand-up and not a handout. We do that in the Coalition budget.

But more importantly, let me say that we were sent here for an American solution, not a Democratic or a Republican solution, but an American solution, representing people in our districts consistent with the national interests. Democrats, Republicans and Independents. The Coalition budget is an American solution to the disgrace that our national deficit has become.

So when you hear all of this rhetoric about the Republicans have all of the answers, it is simply not true. Neither do the Democrats. This 23 maverick Democrats in the middle, as the Philadelphia Enquirer called us, have the American solution.

Mr. FRANKS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOX].

Mr. FOX of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Republican plan which will balance the budget and give the opportunity for all Americans to have reductions in their mortgage so that they can better take care of their families and have the American dream realized. It will lower by at least 2 percent their auto loans, which again will put more money back in their pocket. It will also reduce for them the cost of student loans for college, at least by 2 percent or more. Over the life of a loan, we are talking about a lot of money.

It will also help senior citizens by making sure we have the rollback of the 1993 Social Security tax. It will also give senior citizens the ability to make about the $11,280 we have been talking about, which the ceiling is falsely there now, stifling opportunity; and under our legislative, the total package, we will now have, for the first time, the ability to make up to $30,000 a year for seniors under 70 without impinging on their Social Security.

So for seniors, for working people, for children, for all Americans, by balancing the budget for the first time since 1969, we will actually help America move forward fiscally for every family.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT].

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Coalition substitute. This substitute shows that we can wipe out the deficit without wiping out programs.

We can take on this task today of balancing the budget in 7 years only because 3 years ago, we began the quest for a balanced budget on our side of the aisle.

Let put that in context. On January 13, 1993, one week before he left office, President Bush handed in his "Economic Report of the President." Turn to page 69 of this Report, and you will see that President Bush projected a deficit for 1993 of $332 billion. In March 1993, this House passed a budget, solely with Democratic votes, which put the deficit on a path downward and steered us away from that projection.

Yesterday, the President announced the results. The deficit for fiscal year 1995 was $164 billion—half the deficit President Bush projected for his last year in office. But for what we have achieved over the last three years, we would still be looking at deficits as far as the eye can see. We could not even hope to balance the budget in seven years.

Even so, balancing the budget in this timeframe is a tall order. My first problem with the Republican budget resolution was that it took a tough problem and made tougher by stipulating $350 billion in tax breaks, mostly for upper-income Americans. Those tax cuts have been compromised down to $245 billion; but guess who bears the brunt of that compromise? Working families, whose Earned Income Tax Credit will be reduced by $23 billion so that the Alternative Minimum Tax can be taken off the books, and some of the largest corporations in America can be taken off the hook when it comes to paying a fair share of taxes.

What are the consequences of such tax breaks? It's very simple: spending has to be cut by $245 billion more than otherwise needed to balance the budget over 7 years. And where do these extra spending cuts fall? On the old and very young, who depend on Medicaid, which the Republicans would slash by $182 billion. And they hit the elderly again, in the form of higher premiums for Medicare, and benefit payments so low they are sure to shut down small hospitals and rural as well as inner city hospitals.

Not everyone in this House seems concerned by such a scenario. Yesterday, the Speaker, with some pride, told a gathering from Blue Cross-Blue Shield that under his proposal, Medicare as we know it will "wither on the vine."

I cannot vote for a budget that will cause Medicare "to wither on the vine." I am not willing to wreck programs on which peoples' lives depend under the guise of balancing the budget, especially when it is not necessary to commit such carnage.

We have before us a substitute that offers a better way to a balanced budget. It reduces the cost of Medicare by more than I would like, but by enough to ensure that its solvency. It lowers the cost of Medicaid, but saves its integrity. And it puts us on a straighter course to a balanced budget because it avoids any diversion into tax cuts until the task is accomplished.

I urge my colleagues to vote against a budget that will cause Medicare to "wither on the vine," and wreck Medicaid, and run up the cost of student loans. We can wipe out the deficit without wiping out programs that millions of Americans depend on. We should all vote instead for the Sabo-Stenholm-Orton substitute.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Orton alternative.

It is a real and positive alternative that would solidify America's economic future.

Our deficit threatens our health as a nation and our ability to be competitive in our global economy. This Orton package balances the budget and meets our responsibilities to the future.

As a strong supporter of the balanced budget amendment, I recognize that we must make tough choices. We do that. Without attacking the middle class. Without taking Medicaid benefits from children and seniors. Without gutting Medicare.

This bill cuts $100 billion less from Medicare than the bill rammed through the House by the Republican leadership last Thursday.

The coalition alternative restores solvency to the Medicare Trust Fund without stealing money from seniors for tax breaks for the wealthy.

Over 7 years, the Medicare provisions in the Republican bill would cut $2,700 more per senior than this alternative.

This alternative provides a total of $80 billion more in discretionary spending for priorities such as job training, housing, economic development, and education.

It does not cut student loans—a Republican provision that has students at the University of Maryland justifiably worried about whether or not they can finish their education.

The amendment rejects the most damaging farm program cuts included in the Republican bill.

This sensible alternative also rejects cuts in Federal employee benefits.

The welfare reform provisions in the alternative, which 204 Members of this body supported, represented true reform, that puts parents to work and protects the well-being of children.

Mr. Chairman, this is responsible government. It makes tough choices and gets us to a balanced budget in 2002. As the sponsors have stated it uses "honest numbers, shared sacrifice, sound priorities, and common sense" to get our budget balanced.

Instead, the alternative imposes real discipline on spending. Unlike the Kasich bill it does so while continuing our commitment to invest in Americans to ensure a strong, healthy, educated nation.

Passage of this alternative would be good news for the citizens I represent and for all Americans. I urge a vote for the Orton-Stenholm-Peterson-Sabo alternative.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute to say, with regard to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER], if you take the best collection of the Beatles, which in essence is what the Blue Dogs did, they took the best pieces of our plan and recorded an album, any way you shake it or cut it, it still is the fundamentals of the Beatles, and their plan is still the fundamentals of ours.

They are to be complimented for having real numbers and for trying to balance the budget. But let us not dwell too much on the difference between the two proposals. It is the best of what we have to offer, and I compliment them for that.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KASICH. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, if we have taken the best of the Kasich program, would it not be best to support it?

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, the answer is, no. The problem with that, I say to the gentleman, is that you take off the icing and you can take the easiest things to do without completing the job and without also giving people some of their money back. But the point is that the Blue Dog budget is a positive document and it bears an amazing resemblance to the document that we will vote on later this afternoon. That is, frankly, why I want to compliment the folks for their program, but they could have done better.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, let us talk about this maybe in a little more simple terms. The fact is that the Democrat alternative has more taxes, has higher taxes than the Republican proposal and has higher spending than the Republican proposal.

If the gentleman is suggesting that we should take those taxes and cut some of that tax decrease out and use it to balance the budget faster, I think that would be one question; but to go back to the same old story of higher taxes and higher spending is not the way we need to go.

There was a comment that used the word draconian. Mr. Chairman, what we are doing is we are cutting 10 percent out of our budget. A lot of families in the United States cut 10 percent out of their budget in 1 year. We are taking 7 years to cut 10 percent out of our budget. It is ridiculous.

The spending of this Congress is out of shape, it is out of style, and let us get back to the real world and let people keep their money in their pockets.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCHALE].

Mr. MCHALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Coalition budget. The Philadelphia Enquirer called it a hint of sanity.

Today, I rise in opposition to the Republican reconciliation bill, H.R. 2491, which will devastate essential Medicare and Medicaid programs, institute tax cuts which will disproportionately benefit the wealthiest in our country, and debilitate entitlement and discretionary programs which are essential to securing the economic and environmental health of this country. I will support the Orton substitute to balance the budget by the year 2002.

Through the $452 billion in Medicare and Medicaid cuts, the Republicans are asking far too much of our most vulnerable citizens. In my State of Pennsylvania, Medicare currently serves one of six citizens, or more than 2 million people. Medicaid covers one in every seven residents. The impact of these cuts on our seniors will be profound: Forty-five percent of Medicaid dollars spent in Pennsylvania are for long-term nursing care for the elderly, and Medicaid dollars account for more than half of total nursing home care in the United States. These two programs have proven to be remarkably successful. In 1959, only 46% of seniors had health coverage. By 1995, this number had increased to 99%. I do not support cuts in these programs which go far beyond ensuring the solvency of these programs, and will endanger the viability of these programs for future generations.

The Republican bill contains irresponsible tax cut provisions which will benefit the wealthiest, and unfair cuts in the EITC program which will increase taxes on the poorest working families. Two thirds of the Republican's proposed tax cut would go to families in the top fifth distribution of income. Further, in my district, the 15th District of Pennsylvania, 16,644 hard working families will have their taxes increased by almost $2.3 million through the Republican EITC cuts, according to the Treasury Department.

Republican cuts in student loan and education programs will increase the cost of student loans and significantly raise the interest rates on parent loans—making college much less affordable for the middle class. The Republican budget reconciliation also opens the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge the Nation's second largest national wildlife refuge, to oil and natural gas exploration and drilling—paving way for the destruction of one of our most precious and unpolluted natural resources.

The Orton substitute is an effective, financially responsible document which will balance the budget by the year 2002 without drastically cutting Medicare, Medicaid, and other crucial programs and without implementing irresponsible tax cuts before a balanced budget is achieved. The Republican reconciliation bill represents a betrayal of basic principles, while the substitute is a fiscally sound, budget-balancing document which embodies necessary and prudent budget decisions.

Therefore, I urge the defeat of HR 2491 in its current form and the adoption of the Orton substitute.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POSHARD].

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Chairman, earlier this year, the Entitlement Reform Commission told us that all tax dollars would be spent on entitlements and interest on the debt by the year 2012 and if we continue our present course we will bankrupt the nation.

Therefore, we must stop this borrowing and spending and we must balance the budget.

The Medicare trust fund board told us we must act to restore the trust fund balance to its normal 10–12 years instead of the 6-year balance to which it has presently sunk.

Both of these reconciliation bills will balance the budget in 7 years and restore solvency to Medicare.

Only one, however, does it without massive downsizing of Medicare, Medicaid, Education, Agriculture, and Pension funds. That is the coalition budget and it is the one we should support because it puts spending cuts toward deficit reduction, not toward tax breaks for people who are not asking for them.

Mr. Chairman, in 1992 we faced the impending collapse of the Coal Miner's Retiree Health Fund. Several hundred companies who had thousands of retired miners basically said what this bill allows.

They said, "Even though these retirees were our employees all these years, and even though we have signed signatory agreements guaranteeing their health care, through our contributions to the Retiree Health Care plan, now, because we no longer want to be a part of the Bituminous Coal Operators of America, we no longer have any obligation for the health care of these retirees."

Well, a bipartisan agreement in this Congress is 1992, negotiated by a Republican Secretary of Labor and signed by a Republican President said to those companies, "You do have an obligation. You can't just transfer your responsibility to the remaining BCOA companies and force them to pay your bills."

Mr. Chairman, if the bill stands, the remaining companies will assume an additional $58 billion a year for these orphaned retirees.

We're struggling now for the survival of our coal economy and we're going to put this additional burden on the companies who are still mining!

Increase their costs, the ones that are being responsible? The coal companies who are mining the coal and the unions agreed on this. This isn't a one-sided agreement.

Please don't allow this agreement to be rescinded as a part of the reconciliation bill.

The Coal Act which I helped pass in 1992 helped keep the health fund from collapsing and helped preserve both health care and peace of mind for nearly 100,000 mining families in this Nation. The shift of costs and responsibility back to only those companies who are still in business will upset the competitive balance in the coal industry, which is already struggling to comply with the onerous provisions of the Clean Air Act.

While this provision is certainly important to me and thousands of mining families in my district, I am also very concerned about how this bill will negatively impact my district in many other ways.

That is why I am cosponsoring the Coalition Budget, which I have worked to develop along with a host of colleagues who are moderate and conservative Democrats. The people behind this alternative are seasoned veterans in the war against deficit spending.

Our budget is demonstrably better than the leadership proposal in a number of ways. Our budget controls Medicare spending by $170 billion over 5 years—enough to restore solvency to the trust fund and to control Government spending to help us reach a balanced budget. We don't take an extra $100 billion out of Medicare to finance unwise and unnecessary tax cuts, as the Republican plan proposes. Likewise, our Medicaid proposal maintains nursing home standards and continues to guarantee health care for the poor and elderly.

On the discretionary spending side, our budget has $80 billion less in budget cuts for areas such as education, job training, job creation and housing.

And in the area of agriculture, which is the economic foundation of the 19th District of Illinois, we reject the lopsided cuts contained in the Republican budget.

On balance, the coalition budget which I support is clearly better for my district, the State of Illinois and the country as a whole. We reach balance in 7 years. We reform programs such as Medicare, Medicaid, and welfare, taking the necessary steps to control rising costs but ensuring there is a way to help people maintain a decent standard of living. There are budget cuts across the spectrum of federal spending, but we have prioritized and balanced our spending plan to help middle-income families afford a home and send their kids to college.

I know that our proposal is not likely to be accepted today. The Republican plan will pass, the Senate will pass its version, and the conference agreement will go to the President and he will veto it. At that point in time, we will have to come back and work as a legislative body to reach consensus and do the job the people sent us to do. The final agreement is also likely to contain some provisions with which I very much disagree, but I will continue to keep an open mind and work in a productive way to do what's right for this country—to balance the budget.

My strong belief is that the budget which I cosponsor and have worked for looks a lot like where the final agreement will be, because I think it is the most fair and balanced approach.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHAYS], a distinguished member of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I first want to thank the Coalition. The Democratic alternative is a very fine plan. I think there is some if not a good deal that we should be talking about when we ultimately come to a conference agreement between the House and the Senate.

When I look at this budget, I see that their budget balances the budget in 7 years, and that is what we are asking the President of the United States to do. If he does that, we go a long way to having a point of agreement. So I am encouraged that my colleagues on that side of the aisle who will vote for it will be sending a message to the President.

I am also encouraged that it looks at the growth of Medicare and Medicaid and particularly Medicare and attempts to cut the growth by $170 billion. We are attempting to cut the growth by $270 billion. So there is a difference of $100 billion. In my judgment, that $100 billion change in the growth needs to happen. So we have a disagreement there.

But, on balance, there is a lot that can be complimented about this. I like the plan that we have done, and I believe in the tax cuts. I believe that if we are going to take 7 years to balance the budget, that we can, in fact, afford a tax cut; and I believe that the group that needs it the most are those that have children that are under 17 years of age and can get that $500 tax credit.

I also believe in the capital gains, because I think it generates economic activity rather than causing a loss in revenue. But, on balance, I congratulate my colleagues. They, I think, have gone a long way in helping the White House and both Chambers realize that, ultimately, we can come to an agreement.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Democratic substitute and I want to commend my colleagues for their work in its development. I especially wish to recognize my friend from Texas, Mr. STENHOLM. We worked together with other Agriculture Committee Democrats to develop the agriculture provisions now contained in the substitute—the alternative receiving the fewest no votes in the Agriculture Committee.

Mr. Chairman, the substitute amendment does what the American people want. It results in a balanced budget for fiscal year 2002. It is particularly attractive to me and to those who know agriculture because it achieves that goal without endangering the strength of our food and fiber production system and without decimating the nutrition programs that are vital to so many American families.

Mr. Chairman, we pointed out earlier that the cuts in agriculture made by the Gingrich bill are just too severe. Agriculture is the very foundation of our Nation's economy. Our basic farm programs have played a significant role in the farmer/government partnership that has been so successful in assuring that our Nation has a safe, reliable, and affordable food supply. The Gingrich plan to reduce Federal spending on farm programs by $13.4 billion will threaten the economic viability of American agriculture and thereby endanger our food security.

To take such an enormous risk with our food production system in order to provide a tax cut is a reckless approach to fiscal policy.

Mr. Chairman, the substitute includes savings from agricultural programs. It would reduce farm spending by $4.4 billion over 7 years. Agriculture always contributes its share to deficit reduction—from 1981 through 1993 we cut $50 billion out of farm spending. But this substitute cuts these programs in a responsible manner and in a way that preserves the farmer/government partnership that has so successfully served to satisfy our Nation's food.

FOOD STAMP

This substitute also achieves over $17 billion in food stamp savings over the next 7 years. These are painful cuts in a vital program that keeps millions of people from going hungry every day; but Democrats are supporting the welfare reform provisions of the substitute because we cannot vote for a bill that incorporates the harsh welfare reform legislation passed by the House last spring. The Democrats are strongly in favor of welfare reform and want the public record to properly reflect our commitment to welfare reform.

Although this substitute will reduce the amount of food stamp benefits people will get in the future, it assures that those benefits will never go below 100 percent of the thrifty food plan. People will continue to get enough benefits so that they can purchase a nutritionally adequate diet.

Unlike H.R. 4 as it passed the House, the food stamp provisions of the substitute bill do not cap the funding for food stamps. The substitute retains the flexibility in funding necessary to accommodate downswings in the economy and the subsequent increases in program participation. If the economy of a locality falters for a time, people thrown out of work will be able to feed their families under our proposal; adequate funding will be available.

Our proposal contains strong incentives to get people out of the food stamp program and into jobs, but it doesn't kick them out of the program if they are wanting and willing to work and there are no jobs available.

The substitute contains all of the fraud and abuse provisions proposed by USDA. The Gingrich bill contains only about half of those proposals. We must do everything possible to maintain the integrity of the food stamp program, to assure that these vital benefits go to those who need them most.

The substitute bill puts us on the road to true and effective welfare reform without putting huge holes in the food safety net. It cuts farm spending without endangering the foundation of our food production system. I urge my colleagues to approve this substitute.

Mr. Chairman, there are several misperceptions about the different agriculture bills that need to be clarified.

First, we need to talk about reductions. Neither the Democrats nor Republicans are saying that Agriculture should be exempted from the Reconciliation process. Agriculture has always given its fair share. We have cut agriculture over $50 billion since the 1980's. It is the only major entitlement program that has steadily declined and continues to decline. So we are in agreement.

What we don't agree with is having to cut Agriculture an additional $9 billion in order to pay for a $245 billion tax cut. It isn't that we don't like tax cuts. It isn't that we don't support the many tax cuts that are proposed. It is the simple fact that this is an inappropriate time to cut taxes (although I will note that on the working poor we are raising taxes)—when we are trying to balance the budget.

In addition, Chairman Roberts said that American farmers would pay $15 billion less in interest expenses because of a balanced budget. Mr. Speaker, the Substitute will reduce the interest expenses for American farmers the same $15 billion because the Substitute also balances the budget.

Second, we need to talk about trade. The Gingrich plan will cut our trade programs by $1.2 billion. We are now implementing the GATT Agreement that many of us supported. This is a crucial time in Agriculture as we implement this agreement. I fear that many of my colleagues have the perception that, because of the GATT Agreement, we are now on a level playing field with our competitors. Nothing could be further from the truth. Yes, this Agreement will reduce spending in agriculture. However to some extent it locked in the inequities that existed. The EV still currently subsidizes its agriculture 6 times more than the U.S. The Substitute recognizes this crucial fact and fully funds our export programs so that American Agriculture can compete abroad and maintain its markets.

Third, we need to talk about flexibility. It is being represented that one bill allows flexibility and the other doesn't. This is simply incorrect. Democrats and Republicans both agree that farmers want more flexibility in commodity programs. Both the Substitute and "Freedom to Farm" allow producers more flexibility. "Freedom to Farm" allows producers to plant program and other specified crops on their base acres. The Substitute is similar in that it provides this flexibility with the total acreage base concept and with additional safeguards for certain commodities if supplies are in excess.

And fourth, one of the most basic differences between the two provisions goes to the core of what our farms programs are designed to do. My farmers have never said that they want a handout. My farmers have never talked to me about preserving the baseline. They have talked to me about getting a decent price for their crops and about various ways to minimize risk. Farmers don't need a guaranteed payment when prices are high. Many people will say that some times when prices are high farmers don't have a crop to sell. That is why we have tried to make crop insurance a workable program. It still has many problems, but it is a concept that we need to continue to improve. Our commodity programs in the Substitute are designed to provide farmers with risk management when prices are low. "Freedom to Farm" just does not provide the safety net that producers need to survive in the face of certain weather, prices, and world conditions.

Mr. Chairman, Chairman Roberts said that Freedom to Farm will lock up the baseline for farmers so that when we have to pass more cuts in coming years—and he said not to fool ourselves, we will have more deficit reduction bills just like this one—that farm spending will be protected.

Mr. Chairman, I don't know why there will be more cuts and reconciliation bills in coming years. Perhaps the tax cuts are too high or the spending cuts are not real in the Gingrich package, but if you vote for the Substitute, there will be no need for future reconciliation bills because it will balance the budget.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. As usual, my friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH], is right. We do take the best parts of their plan, and we make it better.

As far as our Nation's veterans, the coalition budget makes $1.5 billion less in spending cuts for veterans' programs. The leadership plan would extend the prescription drug co-payment and raise it by $1. The Coalition plan does not.

But, most importantly, the coalition plan enacts the text of H.R. 580, a bill that has over 220 cosponsors, and provides much-needed military subvention, allows our military retirees to take their Medicare payments to a military hospital. This is a plan that has been endorsed by the Coalition of Military and Veterans Associations, the Retired Officers Association, the Fleet Reserve Association, the Air Force Association, the Army Association, the Marine Corps League, the Marine Corps Officers Association, the Military Order of the Purple Heart, the National Association of Uniformed Services and 30 other veterans' groups want to see this plan become law.

We have a chance to do that by passing the coalition budget.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BAESLER].

Mr. BAESLER. Mr. Chairman, the second place I think the coalition budget is superior to the budget presented by the Republicans is in the area of education. The coalition believes that education is an investment in our Nation's future. The $10 billion question is whether or not we want to make it harder for young people to invest in our own future. the coalition believes the answer is no.

The Republican plan would eliminate the 6-month, interest-free grace period, thus costing graduate students $2,500. The coalition plan thinks that is unnecessary and unfair.

The leadership plan would increase the rates that parents have to pay on the plus program. This could cost parents an additional $5,000 when repaying these loans. The coalition plan does not ask the parents to take on this additional burden.

The leadership plan eliminates direct lending as an option for schools and students. The coalition plan does not eliminate direct lending. The coalition plan believes that education cuts do not heal.

I hope my colleagues will join me in encouraging this investment by supporting the coalition reconciliation plan.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas, Mr. PETE GEREN.

Mr. PETE GEREN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Medicare subvention provisions in the coalition budget and endorse the coalition budget.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to give you yet another reason why the coalition alternative deserves your vote. We have included a provision in our alternative on Medicare subvention that has widespread and bipartisan support. It is similar to H.R. 580 which has 222 cosponsors. Not only does this proposal make dollars and cents, it corrects an inequity in the way we provide health care to our military retirees.

This proposal would allow our military retirees to use military treatment facilities with the cost of care reimbursed by Medicare. Under current law, the DOD receives no reimbursement when it treats Medicare-eligible retirees, and they are frequently the first group of beneficiaries to be denied care when budget cuts force cutbacks. Yet the military facility is the more cost-effective provider of care. The current arrangement makes no sense.

Mr. Chairman, there are 1.2 million military retirees age 65 and older in America. These men and women dedicated their lives to protecting our freedom. Right now, these retirees pay into the Medicare program as do all Americans, but Medicare will not cover their care because they receive their health care at military facilities. In 1994 alone, the DOD provided more than $1 billion in care to 230,000 Medicare-eligible retirees. Medicare should reimburse the DOD for these costs. This is good for the retiree, after all it's his or her first choice, and it is good for the taxpayer because it saves money.

Why is this so? Because health care costs at military facilities are 10 percent to 24 percent less than in the private sector, which is the price that Medicare has to pay. This proposal will save Medicare and the taxpayers billions of dollars as we struggle with balancing our budget.

But more important than that, I stated that this proposal corrects a basic inequity for our military retirees. Because of shrinking budgets, our military retirees are seeing their access to care diminish, care that they earned by their service to America. This proposal will ensure that these retirees will receive the access to care they deserve, from the doctors they choose.

Mr. Chairman, this reform is long overdue. Many military retirees choose military facilities over private providers, and we should expand that option by having Medicare cover those costs. Our military retirees deserve this and it saves money. Mr. Chairman, this is a no-brainer. It is a win/win situation.

I urge my colleagues to support our military retirees and vote yes on the coalition substitute.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY], our distinguished Republican whip.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the Committee on the Budget for yielding me the time, and I just want to commend him. It is been a long road for the gentleman from Ohio, but he is here today, and we are all very, very proud of the work that he has done and very proud of him.

Mr. Chairman, I want to rise in support of this historic reconciliation legislation and obviously in opposition of the Democrats' alternative.

Many people have trouble understanding what the reconciliation process really is. I believe it is where we reconcile our campaign promises with our legislative agenda. In other words, we are putting our money where our mouth has been. Pundits have called the Democrat alternative humble. Well as Churchill would have put it, it has much to be humble about. It does not give tax relief for American families, it does not save Medicare, and most of the Democrat leadership will not even support it.

Let me focus on the biggest difference between the Republicans and the Democrats in this debate: taxes. Republicans believe that there is a moral imperative to cutting taxes. If we fail in this endeavor, we will break faith with the families and the voters of this great Nation.

The Democrats in the Congress have a different view. They are squeamish about cutting taxes. It cuts against their philosophy, and it is shown in this substitute. The reason they are against cutting taxes is they want to spend more money. They have branded our efforts to be tax cuts for the rich. Never has so much been said by so few that has been so wrong. When Bill Clinton knows it is wrong, he admitted it himself.

Beyond the rhetoric, here are the facts: Under our bill, a family with two kids earning up to $24,000 a year will not have to pay any taxes at all. Our plan actually removes 3 million low-income families from the income tax rolls, and a family of 4 that earns $24,000 a year or more will pay $1,000 less in taxes than they paid last year under our plan.

Do we really cut taxes only for the rich? Is a $500 tax credit for children a tax break for the rich? Since when is it politically incorrect to help families take care of their children? Is our adoption tax credit a giveaway to the rich?

Let me tell you something. Those children who desperately need to find homes that are safe and secure do not think they are rich.

Is our repeal of the President's Social Security tax increase a giveaway to the rich? Frankly, I do not even think the President believes that anymore.

How about the infamous capital gains tax cut? We all know that, without the capital gains tax cut, the economy will continue to chug along at its current 2 percent per year growth rate. I thought I would never see a President of the United States brag about a 2 percent growth rate.

The real victims of this meager growth rate are those who cannot find jobs, those who cannot afford to start their own businesses, those who have never heard opportunity knock. Are they really the rich? They do not think so.

Republicans will not be intimidated by the Democrats' rhetoric on tax cuts. If we cut taxes, we will be doing what the American people sent us here for. We will be keeping our promises with our constituents. There are only positive political consequences when you keep your promises.

I hope the American people remember just one thing: These tax cuts are only 40 percent of the $600 billion that were raised in tax increases in 1990 and in 1993. These tax cuts are simply a down payment on the principle of smaller, more efficient and more effective government.

Bill Clinton has expressed taxer's remorse over his efforts to raise taxes in 1993. Maybe now he will get the message that we can cut taxes for families and balance the budget in 7 years.

Mr. Chairman, I just urge my colleagues to support historic change, vote down the Democrat alternative and vote to provide relief for the American family.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Oregon [Ms. FURSE].

Ms. FURSE. Mr. Chairman, I support the Coalition plan because it is fiscally conservative but socially responsible.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BROWDER].

Mr. BROWDER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, the coalition reconciliation plan balances the budget by 2002 just like the Republican plan but we do it in a way that is fair and responsible. I am not going to speak about the fairness, but I do want to touch on responsibility.

Earlier this year the Budget Committee traveled around the country for public hearings. Attendance at these hearings probably ran into the thousands. At every hearing, I asked if they thought we should cut taxes before balancing the budget. Overwhelmingly, the public rejected up front tax cuts. By not listening the wisdom of the American public the Republican reconciliation is unnecessarily polarizing the Nation and may cause us to fail to reach any agreement on balancing the budget this year. This is not responsible.

Make no mistake, I and many of my coalition colleagues support cutting taxes. For me, I would like to see something done on capital gains. I want a better deal for family owned businesses on estate taxes. I think a family tax credit—done smartly so it reaches families in need—is a good thing. But not in this bill.

At this stage the tax cut debate has touched off partisan bickering and class and generational warfare. When it comes to the bottom line, why divide the Nation when we are in agreement on what really needs to be done—balance the budget? Even more to the point, who go through this divisive debate when we are all in agreement that Congress soon will take up major tax reforms—many of the proposed reforms will make all our actions on tax cuts today moot.

We are in agreement that the budget should be balanced. The issue today, then, is whether we want to miss this chance just to make a political statement. The coalition sets the stage for bipartisan agreement in the best interests of the country. The Republican bill sets up a veto fight and 12 months of political rhetoric while the country suffers more deficits, more debt.

The coalition says balance first. Then nobody can charge that this is being done to cut taxes for one class while raising costs for another. Passing the coalition reconciliation would let us take up a pure tax bill—real tax reform—outside the scope of this divisive debate, so that the American people can clearly examine the spending cuts that offset the tax reductions. Then we can debate the issues of tax fairness and appropriate levels of taxation clearly and partisanship and class warfare—that is tearing this county apart—will be diminished.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CRAMER].

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of coalition plan to balance the budget in 7 years without egregious cuts, without putting tax cuts ahead of spending cuts, and without huge Medicaid and Medicare cuts.

It is often said on this floor, in reference to a particular bill, that that bill is not a perfect bill.

This may be said of the coalition plan as well.

However, the coalition proposal is the best proposal being considered today and every Republican and Democrat should vote for it.

The coalition plan is based on fairness and fiscal responsibility. The coalition plan is both tough and compassionate.

It is tough because it reaches balance in 7 years with a steady glidepath of deficit reduction and includes tough deficit reduction enforcement provisions.

It is tough because it puts spending cuts ahead of popular tax cuts.

It is tough because it reforms welfare in a way that provides tough work requirements and provides protection for children.

It is compassionate because it restores solvency to the Medicare trust fund and avoids premium hikes for low- and middle-income seniors, and avoids devastating cuts to rural and inner-city hospitals.

It is compassionate because it maintains nursing home standards and Medicare premium assistance for low-income seniors.

It is compassionate because it rejects a tax increase on the working poor.

If Members of Congress are looking for a proactive moderate proposal that reflects true mainstream American values—have I got a deal for you—the coalition reconciliation proposal.

The coalition plan proves that it is possible to balance the budget over 7 years, using honest numbers, shared sacrifice, sound priorities, and common sense.

Both the Washington Post and the New York Times, considered two of the most conservative newspapers in the country, have endorsed the coalition plan by opining that "it [Coalition plan] is a far better solution to the deficit problem than any other in sight now," and "the plan suggests the budget can be balanced by 2002 without pummeling the poor or Medicare," respectively.

I urge my colleagues to support the coalition plan—a plan that reflects where the majority of Americans would like to see our ideological budget debates resolved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Members should know that the gentleman from Utah has 5½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] has 5½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Ohio has the right to close.

Mr ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO], the ranking member of the Committee on the Budget and the former chairman of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Orton coalition budget alternative that is before us today. It accomplishes the goal of balancing the budget by the year 2002 in a fashion that is reasonable, fair, and tough but not mean.

Let me speak to some components. Clearly the area of big cuts in the Republican plan is health care. The Orton alternative makes reasonable change and reform in Medicare. it deals not only with part A of Medicare, it also deals with part B which comes from general revenue and impacts the balance of our budget.

In my judgment, there are 3 numbers that are very clear.

If one wants to simply deal with the solvency of the part A fund for the next decade, you can do $90 billion of change. If you want to deal with part A, part B, deal with higher premiums for high-income people, balance the budget, you can do it with $170 billion. If your want to deal with solvency, balance the budget, and then have a tax cut, that requires $270 billion, changes that I think are totally unacceptable in Medicare, and puts in question the long-term sustainability of those kind of cuts.

The Orton proposal restores $100 billion to Medicaid to deal with health care for the most vulnerable of children, of seniors, and of disabled in our country. Because one says let us get our fiscal house in order first, it means that we have discretionary funds so we can deal with the problems of education and housing and economic development in our country. The proposal deals with welfare reform in a tough way, in a method to put people to work but have training and child care there available for them. It does not have the meanness that some proposals have. It gets the job done. It would help people, not hurt them.

So, Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Utah and all the people who worked with him in putting this alternative before us. It is a good alternative. The country would be well served if it became law

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank my former chairman for his very knowledgeable statement.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I first want to associate myself with Chairman Kasich's remarks earlier today when he commented on the remarkable shift in philosophy toward a balanced budget which has occurred in our country. John, you have done as much as any single individual to bring about that shift and I am grateful for the role you have played.

I also associate myself with many of the comments of my ranking member. My Swedish ancestors may turn in their graves but MARTIN SABO is one Norwegian who has earned my deepest, highest respect.

Finally, I have been proud to spend hours locked up in rooms with coalition members and our staffs as we fought our way through this massive reconciliation substitute. I am proud of our product, making tough choices, always with an eye toward fairness and reasonableness.

All Members know that launching into the intricacies of the Federal budget can bring about an eye-glazing, bring-numbing boredom. But budgets are about much more than numbers; they are about people and our values.

When the coalition budget reaches balance in 7 years it is not just numbers. It is an assertion of the value that our children and grandchildren should be given as much economic opportunity as we were, not have to pay for our irresponsibility.

By putting spending cuts ahead of tax cuts we reinforce the value that rewards should come after hard work, not before. We are not opposed to tax cuts. We simply learned from the 1980's that when dessert comes first, you never get to the spinach.

The coalition budget makes reforms in Medicare to keep the program solvent well into the next decade. Value: keep the promises you have made, to today's and tomorrow's seniors.

Similarly, the coalition budget finds a numeric middle ground in Medicaid. Value: A society will be judged by the way it treats its most vulnerable citizens, particularly young children needing basic health care, senior citizens needing guaranteed, quality nursing home care, and the disabled.

The coalition budget would fundamentally reform America's welfare system, moving people from welfare to the work force, but also it includes sufficient funding for child care, job training, and other building blocks necessary to make a welfare reform policy more than a pot full of empty political promises. Value: balance compassion with a sense of personal responsibility.

The Coalition budget maintains support for student loans and agriculture. Value: treasure, nurture, and develop your national resources if you want to remain strong and healthy. Unilaterally disarming the American farmer as he seeks to compete in the international market place food makes about as much sense as unilaterally disarming our country militarily. Disarming our American students by depriving them of the education they will need to compete globally is equal folly.

Finally, the coalition budget includes the only meaningful budget enforcement to be found in this debate. Value: if you expect people to believe what you say, you ought to police yourself in ways that show you mean it.

Our budget includes hundreds of numbers but all of those numbers draw a picture of values Americans are desperately seeking in their elected officials and in public policy: responsibility, honesty, fairness, compassion. Vote for a commonsense reconciliation budget full of the common values held by most Americans. Vote for the coalition substitute.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Coalition substitute.

Mr. Chairman, today, Congress is debating the Republican budget reconciliation proposal. This bill is just bad policy.

The Republican bill will cut $270 billion from Medicare, $10 billion from student loans, and $180 billion from Medicaid. I agree that we need to find ways to reduce the budget deficit. However, I am concerned that we have decided to do so by transferring the burden to poor and low-income Americans who are already struggling to get by.

The combination of a large national debt and the aging of the post-war generation will place an even greater burden on younger generations. Our national policies must reflect this changing reality. As we seek ways to balance the budget, we must also continue investing in our Nation's future—including expanding access to higher education. These investments will be essential to preserving living standards and ensuring higher wages for the challenges we face in the future.

Twice before in our history, our Nation was able to grow out of a large national debt by investing in human capital. In the last century, the establishment of the Land Grant College system made higher education something to benefit all Americans. The G.I. Bill further increased access to higher education, strengthening a new American workforce able to face the changing needs of the country and the times. As we once again face a mounting national debt, history can be a model for our policy decisions.

The higher education cuts in the Republican budget proposal will increasingly restrict access to higher education in this country. These cuts will increase the cost of postsecondary education and may put college out of the financial reach of many families. Access to higher education has never been more important. Today, the incomes of Americans with college degrees are over 75 percent more than those with a high school education.

It is no exaggeration to suggest that higher education has helped create the American century. Our system is the envy of the world. We would be shortsighted and foolish not to take the full measure of benefit from this singular, uniquely American, comparative advantage.

I support responsible measures to reduce or eliminate the budget deficit. That is why I support the coalition alternative. This alternative balances the budget while investing in our Nation's future. It dedicates $50 billion more to education programs and maintains our commitment to student financial aid. The coalition budget reconciliation package does not give tax breaks that will only serve to cut current discretionary spending.

History has shown that we can balance the budget while making the investments in our Nation's future that can help to diminish our debt. Given that record, I believe we are doing ourselves a great disservice by limiting access to higher education by making these cuts. We cannot afford to waste any of the talent that is America's most powerful national resource.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the coalition alternative.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the Republican bill.

Mr. KASICH. I yield the balance of our time, 5½ minutes, to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY], the majority leader.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH], my good friend, for yielding me this time.

My colleagues, historians will have already no choice but to recognize this first session of the 104th Congress as among the hardest-working sessions ever of any Congress at any time. I am sure all of my colleagues will agree with that proposition.

If I could take a moment, Mr. Chairman, I would like to give my regards, my personal recognition of appreciation to all the Members of this Congress on both sides of the aisle, both those with whom I found myself in disagreement most of the time, and those with whom I found myself in agreement. The fact is we worked hard. Now we are at a point in our legislative agenda where it is time to collect our work together and to validate that work and move it forward. This work that we have before us today, this budget reconciliation bill, represents big change.

America has asked of Congress that we make a big change. We pledged to make a big change, and today is the day we can stand and deliver and keep our promise. Big change is unnerving. Those of us who are committed to making it are haunted by a fear that maybe the American people will not understand, and, quite frankly, I must say those who resist our efforts are haunted by the fear that maybe America will understand. But we must put aside our fears regarding the understanding of the American people and recognize that they do understand.

We are not here today asking America to be with us, to be on our side. We are here today prepared to make a vote that says to America, we are on your side. We are ready to give you the change you demand.

For 60 years the Ship of State, this great land, has been sailed consistently in the wrong direction, to the left, in the direction of big government, big taxation, big regulation and a lack of regard and respect for the American people's ability and integrity. With this vote today, we will crank this ship around. We will turn this ship around to the right, and we will sail it in the direction of freedom, integrity, recognition, in the direction of a government that has the ability to know the goodness of the American people and the decency to respect it. That is what this change is all about.

We must look at the direction in which we have sailed and recognize that we have left in our wake a sea of despair, a sea of frustration, and a sea of dependence, in fact a nation that is not fulfilling its great promises and its great dreams.

So now is the time to make the vote. Now is the time to step up to the challenge of those who elected us and those we represent, the people back home, the good people back home, people who work hard, people who care hard, people who share hard, and, yes, unhappily because of the failures of big government, people back home who despair hard for its failures, and in that, today we are putting together a package, and we will pass a package that promises, first, tax relief to those who work hard, that says to these American people, "We believe you should keep more of the money you earn and make the decisions regarding your family at home instead of ship that money away to Washington where people who do not know you will make mistakes on your behalf."

We have also here the first year's mark to that all-important balanced budget in 7 years. We do that for people who care hard, care hard for the future of their children, and there to say enough, we cannot saddle them with more debt. Then, as we save Medicare for another generation, we again act on behalf of those who share hard and who care hard and do so out of respect for and concern for the medical future of their parents.

This is a serious business.

Finally, on behalf of those who today must only despair hard, we have welfare reform. We dare to change a system that has failed, not because we believe people have abused that system but because we know that system has abused people and made them victims.

This is the vote we must take. In doing that, we must put aside our concerns, our fears, our parochial interests. We must think about America, and we must first reject the politics of fear and the politics of class warfare, and we must vote for the two great promises of America. America is a nation that promises each individual an equality of opportunity, and it is pledged to the all-important, critical guarantee that we will always work to secure the blessings of liberty for ourselves and our posterity, and our posterity is our children.

So I call on my colleagues, step up today, stand and deliver. Vote for this budget reconciliation package brought forward by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] and the Committee on the Budget and all of our hard work, reject this substitute, reject a motion to recommit. Vote for the future of our children so that they shall know our heritage and live it in their own lives.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, today Congress faces a decision of great significance, where our actions will affect so thoroughly the lives of our fellow Americans. I urge my colleagues to indicate their most serious consideration of the plight of seniors, children, workers, and the less privileged, by lending their support to the Democratic substitute and rejecting the GOP package.

Both sides of the aisle have been able to agree on a number of important policy issues, and I commend the leadership of both sides for their willingness to address these important points. We have agreed that the Federal deficit must be eliminated. Both sides agree that there should be a 7-year time period through which to accomplish this. Members agree that the short and long term problems with Medicare and Medicaid must be resolved by this legislation. The House has also been able to agree that the welfare system must be improved to encourage recipients to re-enter the workforce and become positive, contributing members of society.

Unfortunately, the agreement ends here. The Republican budget reconciliation proposal severely cuts many critical Federal programs unnecessarily—for the single purpose of providing a tax cut worth over $245 billion during the next 7 years, much of which will go directly to individuals who make over $100,000 a year. At the same time, the Republican plan will cut the Earned Income Tax Credit, which provides critical tax relief to the poorest American workers. Frankly, I am unable to find the logic of a proposal which cuts taxes for the wealthy while raising taxes on the working people of the United States. I do not believe that this is the message the House should be sending to the American people.

This $245 billion tax cut for wealthy Americans also will force draconian cuts to be made across the board to programs which provide critical services and assistance upon which many Americans rely. The Republican plan brutally attacks seniors by cutting Medicare and Medicaid by a combined $482 billion. The measure requires seniors and low income individuals to pay greater premiums. It also will reduce payments to hospitals which will force many of these facilities to reduce services or, in some cases, shut down entirely. The Republican proposal will make further cuts to veterans' health programs, increasing their copayments by 50 percent and increasing the fees veterans must pay to stay in a VA hospital or nursing home. Federal retirees will also be hit by delays in their COLA payments and other changes adding up to a cut of $9.9 billion. Is it right to demand that seniors, veterans, and Federal employees pay more while the most wealthy pay less?

This proposal also calls for major reductions to Federal programs supporting our children. Student loans, the most important vehicle through which middle and lower class children are able to attend college, will be cut by over $10 billion. The Federal direct loan program, which has been highly successful at my alma mater, the University of Washington, is eliminated by the Republican bill. Students receiving loans also will be charged an additional $3.8 billion over the next 7 years by eliminating the interest-free grace period, increasing the cost of student loans by as much as $2,500 per student. Is it truly in our Nation's best interest to provide $255 billion to the richest Americans by raising taxes on students?

The Republican bill also contains a number of policy decisions which are, simply put, bad ideas. This measure would eliminate established Federal standards nursing homes must meet to receive Medicaid funds. These requirements ensure that our parents and grandparents receive adequate care, are served by competent staff, and retain the rights that they deserve. This measure also permits corporations to raid their workers' pension funds for any purpose—including hostile takeovers—thus putting the retirement funds of working Americans at significant risk.

Mr. Chairman, if all of these changes were truly necessary to balance the budget by 2002, perhaps more of us on the Democratic side of the aisle would be willing to support the Republican proposal. However, the Coalition has developed a plan which accomplishes all of the important goals without this terrible assault on the middle and lower class. How can the coalition's plan do this? Simply, by eliminating the huge tax cut which our Nation cannot afford.

The Democratic plan will accomplish deficit reduction while maintaining crucial investments in education and human resources. Our plan will restore the solvency of the Medicare trust fund while cutting health care services by $195 billion less than the GOP plan. It also provides for other important services such as annual mammograms which the GOP proposal chooses not to include. This plan rejects the Republican tax increase on the working poor, encouraging people to choose work over welfare. Our substitute also confirms Congress's dedication to providing our children with a quality education and maintaining their access to institutions of higher learning by providing $50 billion more for education than the Republican plan and fully funding Federal student loan programs. Retired Federal employees will not be required to accept again delayed COLA payments under the Democratic substitute. Neither will nursing home residents be asked to compromise their personal safety nor must worker risk the security of their retirement funds.

I ask my friends on both sides of the aisle to consider carefully the decision they are about to make. Ask yourselves, should the effort to balance the Federal budget be a divisive affair—where the rich win and the poor lose; where corporations profit while workers and retirees are asked to pay more? Or should this action require all Americans to bear the burden of deficit reduction equally, with fairness and the common need being our guide? I urge my colleagues to reject the further splitting of the wealthy and middle class in this country and to support the balanced approach inherent in the Democratic substitute.

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Chairman, We have two choices today.

The Democratic alternative—the Orton substitute—would balance the budget in 7 years, without tax cuts we can't now afford, without undue cuts in Medicare and Medicaid, without raising taxes on lower-income workers, and while making possible investments we need to keep our country strong in the future. I support it.

This is in sharp contrast to the Republican bill, which I oppose. That bill would also balance the budget in 7 years, but there the similarity ends. It includes a tax cut we cannot afford, most of which goes to the wealthy who least need it. To pay for that tax cut, the committee bill cuts Medicare and Medicaid more than necessary, with over half of the total spending cuts coming from those important programs. It also actually raises taxes on lower-income workers.

Compared to the Republican bill, the Orton substitute cuts $100 billion less in Medicare, $100 billion less in Medicaid, $50 billion less in direct assistance to individuals, $10 billion less in education, $10 billion less in agriculture, and $80 billion less in other discretionary spending.

How is that possible? It is made possible by refusing to dig the hole of Federal debt deeper—that is, by refusing to cut taxes before we can afford to. And by ending $28 billion worth of particularly ill-advised subsidies to corporations.

The Democratic alternative reduces the deficit more, and quicker, than the majority's bill. It cuts a total of $853 billion from the budget over the next 7 years, compared to $811 billion in the Republican bill.

While making these deep cuts, our alternative reflects better priorities and wiser policies than majority's bill.

It maintains the earned-income tax credit, which used to enjoy strong bipartisan support as an effective, non-bureaucratic way to enable lower-income people to work their way into the middle class.

It closes tax loopholes that let multinational corporations manipulate their books to avoid paying their fair share of U.S. taxes and that allow billionaires to avoid paying their taxes by renouncing their citizenship.

It protects Medicare and Medicaid, because it is not driven to cut them deeper than necessary because it does not have to pay for a misguided tax cut.

It would provide more resources for nutrition, education, transportation, research, and crime control.

It includes real welfare reforms, with flexibility for States, a crack-down on fraud, and enough funding for day-care, training, and the other needs of people moving off welfare and into jobs.

It maintains funding for student loans, which the Republican bill would cut.

It protects the benefits of Federal retirees and preserves veterans' compensation.

It keeps our public lands in public ownership—unlike the Republican plan, which offers to turn national forest ski mountains over to the owners of ski resorts. The Republican leadership refused to let me offer an amendment to strip that provision from their bill.

The Democratic alternative would not sacrifice the wilderness and wildlife of America's last untouched stretch of Arctic coastline, the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, which the majority's bill would open to oil and gas development.

Our alternative would not perpetuate bargain-basement sales of the gold, silver, and other hardrock mineral resources of our public lands.

And it does not include the myriad provisions tucked into the majority leadership's plan, including ones that have little or nothing to do with balancing the budget and everything to do with political posturing and campaigns. Like a requirement to waste even more money on TV Marti, which no one in Cuba sees anyway, by switching to a signal that even fewer Cuban televisions can receive—and which will be even easier for Castro to jam!

And like provisions to eliminate the arms control and disarmament agency.

It's clear to me which of these two choices is better for the country. The Republican plan may be called a reconciliation bill, but I can't be reconciled into thinking that it's anything but bad for the country. We have a chance to do better—in fact, we have a duty to do better. The Democratic alternative is that better choice.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Stenholm reconciliation bill that balances the budget in 7 years without the draconian cuts found in the Republican plan.

The Stenholm alternative balances the budget without cuts in education, without extreme cuts to Medicare and Medicaid, and without increasing taxes on the middle class and the working poor.

The Stenholm alternative places deficit reduction first and does not borrow money to pay for tax cuts.

The Stenholm alternative spreads the sacrifice necessary to balance the budget among various areas of the budget. The Republican plan places a heavy burden on middle-class, hard-working Americans while giving a tax cut for the rich.

The Stenholm alternative reforms the welfare program by rewarding work that pays more than welfare.

Mr. Speaker, the Stenholm alternative has been praised by the Washington Post as a "respectable, disciplined alternative" that is "easily the best horse in the race."

The bottom line is the Stenholm alternative balances the budget without punishing the middle class and the poor. This is the bill that the American people have been asking for.

The President deserves credit for his 1993 budget which has brought the fiscal year 1995 deficit to $164 billion, almost half of what it was when he took office.

Despite forecasts of doom in 1993, our economy continues to grow at a strong, steady pace.

The Stenholm alternative will signal to the markets that we are serious about implementing sound fiscal policy in Washington. The lower interest rates that will result from this budget will allow businesses to expand at a lower cost, it will allow millions of Americans to refinance their loans on homes, cars, and credit cards, it will hasten the retirement of past debts that depress the savings rate of this country.

The Republican budget threatens to shock the economy with enormous tax cuts that could jeopardize the effects of the difficult spending cuts that we have already made.

The Stenholm alternative is prudent and makes difficult choices that we are sent here to make.

I urge my colleagues to balance the budget the smart way, and to support the Stenholm alternative.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, when we vote today on this reconciliation bill, we are passing judgement on hundreds of pages of text containing thousands of specific numbers and provisions. As important as those details are—and they are very important—perhaps more crucial are the underlying values embodied in the proposals before us. In the final analysis, people sent me here to recognize, protect, and advance the basic values America holds dear. A group of conservative Democrats called the coalition have a reconciliation bill that best accomplishes that objective.

The values implicit in the Democratic leadership's refusal to submit a balanced budget are unacceptable. At the same time, I believe that the Republican leadership bill goes too far in too many areas and does not adequately enough protect some of our most vulnerable citizens.

The coalition's budget strikes the right balance. It reflects the common sense and common values held by most Americans. All of us should strongly support it.

The coalition budget reaches balance in 7 years with a steady glidepath of deficit reduction. Value interpretation: Our children and grandchildren should be given as much economic opportunity as we were, not forced to pay for our irresponsibility.

The coalition budget requires tough spending cuts before tax rewards. Value interpretation: Rewards should come after hard work, not before.

The coalition budget makes reforms in Medicare to achieve $170 billion in savings—compared to the Republicans $270 billion and the Democratic leadership's $90 billion—to keep the program solvent well into the next decade. Value interpretation: Keep promises you've made, to both today's and tomorrow's seniors.

The coalition budget finds a numeric middle ground in Medicaid, saving $85 billion from the program for lower-income citizens. Value interpretation: Runaway costs must be reigned in, but not at the expense of the most vulnerable.

The coalition budget includes a proposal to significantly reform our welfare system. Value interpretation: Balance the compassion imperative just mentioned with a sense of personal responsibility, moving people from welfare to the work force while including adequate funds for child care, job training, and other building blocks necessary to make a welfare reform policy more than a pot full of empty promises.

The coalition budgets maintains support for student loans and agriculture. Value interpretation: Treasure, nurture, and develop your national resources if you want to remain strong and healthy.

Finally, the coalition budget includes the only meaningful budget enforcement to be found in this debate. Value interpretation: If you expect people to believe what you say, you ought to police yourself in ways that show you mean it.

During the debate on the balanced budget amendment, I stood in this very well and stressed that our obligation as public servants and to the Framers of the Constitution is to ensure that the Federal Government live within its means. Prudence and fairness dictate that we get down to the business of cutting the deficit as soon as possible and not postpone the major portion of the burden until the out years. The coalition substitute would leave our children with $159 billion less debt than H.R. 2491, my Republican colleagues' bill. That is what this debate is about—ensuring a sound financial future for our children and grandchildren—not rhetorical comments about partisan politics or Presidential elections.

I remind my colleagues that my voting record speaks volumes about my philosophy on tax cuts. I supported the Contract With America tax cut package and voted against the President's 1993 tax increases. Increasing the amount of income that my constituents retain has always been one of my, and should be one of our, top priorities. Taxes should, however, only be cut when the hard work of balancing the budget is completed. I believe that the final budget agreement will likely contain a reduced tax cut. The groundwork to do is also in place as indicated by comments of the Speaker and the President.

The coalition proposal represents the views of the majority of Americans and our best opportunity for compromise. Americans want their Federal Government to manage its fiscal affairs with the same responsibility that they are forced to in private life. Americans want the Federal Government to respect their privacy and personal freedoms. Americans want the Federal Government to trust their abilities to make decisions.

But, Americans also expect the Federal Government to carry out its responsibility to protect the general welfare. The coalition substitute does so by being fairer to rural communities, senior citizens, farmers, children, and the American family. Our proposal also balances the budget in seven years. I believe that such a combination achieves a commonsense balance that is essential to guarantee that our long-term and short-term economic future is not jeopardized, and I urge its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ORTON].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes to have it.

NOT VOTING—3

Sisisky
Tucker
Weldon (PA)

Mrs. CUBIN and Messrs. ALLARD, BACHUS, HEFLEY, MCINTOSH, and OBERSTAR has changed their vote from "aye" to "no".

So the amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. DREIER) having assumed the Chair, Mr. BOEHNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2491) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 105 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1996, pursuant to House Resolution 245, he reported the bill, as amended pursuant to that rule, back to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DREIER). Under the rule, the previous question is ordered and the amendment is adopted.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. GEPHARDT

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. GEPHARDT. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GEPHARDT moves to recommit the bill H.R. 2491 to the Committee on Budget with instructions to report the same back to the House with modifications to preserve and protect the health and income security of our seniors and our children and to achieve fairness by denying revenue reductions favoring the rich and excluding revenue increases on working class families and to retain Section 5003 relating to federal retirement provisions for Members of Congress and Congressional employees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, let me say, a few moments ago the majority leader, my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY] said that for 60 years we have been steering to the left and that now we should vote for a big change and begin to steer to the right. With all respect to my friend, I believe we should not be trying to steer left or right but we ought to steer together forward, to move this great country forward to meet the central challenges of our time.

What is that? The fact is that America in the last 20 years has fallen to sixth in the world in standard of living. The fact is that real wages for the middle class in this country have been declining for over 20 years, the steepest decline since 1820. The fact is that American families are working longer, taking second jobs and part-time jobs, having spouses in the work force who did not have to work 20 years ago. And at the end of all that work, at the end of the month and at the end of the year, they have less money to spend than they had 20 years ago.

The fact is that in the boom years of the 1980's, two-thirds of all the new wealth went to the top 1 percent, while most Americans, the bottom 80 percent, saw their income decline in real terms. So that the disparity between the people at the top and the rest of America has grown larger and wider than it has been in decades.

Mr. Speaker, we have two problems. We have two challenges. How do we get the pie to grow again in this country so we can talk about everybody having a larger share of a larger pie; and how, along with that, we can decrease the disparity in income so that there is less room between the middle class and the people trying to get in the middle class and the people at the top. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to my colleagues that the budget we are talking about today does not move us in the right direction on either of those challenges.

Let me talk about disparity of income for a moment. This budget we are about to vote on decreases the earned income credit for families struggling to get in the middle class. In other words, it increases taxes on people that are struggling to get in the middle class, people earning $25,000 and $30,000 a year. And in the same budget we have a tax cut, a massive tax cut for people at the top. It takes my breath away. I cannot believe that someone seriously, in 1995, at the same time could make those two suggestions simultaneously. It is wrong. It is morally wrong. It is economically wrong. It is the wrong thing for our country.

Second, the budget does not address how we make the pie grow again. One of our former colleagues from this side of the aisle, Jack Kemp, is an eloquent voice for saying that we will never get rid of the deficit simply by cutting. We have to also grow our way to balance in the budget. I do not agree with a lot of the things that Jack Kemp, our former colleague, prescribed, but I think he was right, we have to grow our way.

Are we going to grow our way out of this deficit if we are cutting student loans, which is the one way people in the middle class have a chance to do better and to advance their young people? Do we make the pie grow if we are cutting Medicare and Medicaid, which, in the case of Medicaid, is the one way that youngsters, two of five youngsters in the country today are on Medicaid. Are they going to have a healthy life, will they be able to produce and be productive citizens in our society if we are cutting the very way that they can do that?

Agriculture. We have had a partnership in agriculture in this country for as long as any body can remember, programs to help farming families be able to succeed and provide the food and fiber that this society needs, which has been part of the secret of having a large and growing middle class. Most countries spend more for food and fiber than we do, yet this bill takes away those agricultural programs.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I think this budget, more than anything that we have dealt with, presents a very clear and different vision between these two parties. This budget really presents a different vision for America.

A very prominent Member in the other body said yesterday, "I was there fighting the fight voting against Medicare because we knew it would not work in 1965." My party, the Democratic party, fought for and enacted Medicare in 1965.

We believe that Medicare has helped the American people probably more than anything we as a people have ever done.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the rhetoric we heard yesterday is really the real debate that we ought to be having. If extremes in the Republican party really do want to get rid of Medicare and to change it so dramatically that it is emasculated, then let us have that debate. Let us be proud to bring that difference to the American people.

If the extremes in the Republican party really believe that the right thing to do is to raise taxes on the middle-class and lower taxes dramatically on the wealthiest people in this country, then let us have that debate between now and 1996.

Mr. Speaker, I say to the ladies and gentlemen of the House in conclusion, this budget and these next 14 or 15 months are about real differences and a difference in vision of where this country should go. Let the American people decide and I believe they will decide for Medicare and for the middle-class of this country, not the wealthiest of this country.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, this is a great Republican, and frankly we are going to have some Democrats, team effort today to try to meet the challenge. It is a team effort.

But, Mr. Speaker, if I could just for a second lodge a personal note, I started offering budgets in 1989 with my good friend, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHAYS] and the support of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM]. When we did it, we took on the Republican President of the United States and the Republican chairman of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. Speaker, the reason we did it is because we were committed to a basic principle that regardless of who was in power, regardless of who was in charge, we just had to like tell it like it was.

We started arguing back in 1989 that we needed to make some hard decisions and, frankly, we discovered this: If we would just slow the growth in Federal spending, if we would just put the Federal budget on a slight diet, we could save the next generation.

It was not partisan. All over this town, if my colleagues read all the scholarly writings and listen to all the analysts and listen to politicians of both parties and listen to the presidential candidates for the last 20, 30 years, frankly they will hear the same thing: We cannot let this continue to go on; we have got to make some hard choices, because if we do not, our inability to make choices and put the country first will destroy us.

This is not a matter of conservative or liberal or Democrat or Republican. This is a matter of using good common sense, like every American family does. We need to establish priorities. We need to shrink the size and the scope of the influence of the Federal Government. And if, in fact, we put America first, we can get it done.

This is what all the political commentators have been saying. Do my colleagues want to know something? It has been tough to take on the sacred cows. The folks that have criticized our program should come over here and listen. It is not easy.

In order to take on the sacred cows, in order to deal with the entitlement programs in this country, we have had to walk across some very hot coals, have we not colleagues on both sides of the aisle? We have had to.

But we have had the courage to do it, and we promised that this day would come. We said that we would finally, once and for all, end the smoke and mirrors, end the gimmicks, stop delaying and balance the Federal budget.

Mr. Speaker, they said it could not be done. Here we have before us today the Seven Year Balanced Budget Resolution certified by the Congressional Budget Office that we, in fact, have met our goal and the people of this country should understand that in seven years we will, in fact, balance the Federal budget and save this country and save the next generation. Why did we do it? Why did we do it? Why did we do it and how did it happen?

Mr. Speaker, I just ask my colleagues to just think about this a little bit. First of all, it took courage. Some of my colleagues know what it is like to go home and have to take the heat when people do not understand all the programs and what we are doing.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of these people. I am proud to serve with them. Why? It is courage. It is the courage to be willing to put an election on the line; do the right thing.

But the other thing we are missing is why it is being done. We hear about polls. I am going to tell my colleagues about the poll I take. I started taking it in 1989, and I really took it in 1993, and I really took it this year, because I have to listen, I know I talk a lot, but I have to listen to my colleagues. Mr. Speaker, when they come back from home, know that they are listening to? The people.

Tip O'Neill talked about the beauty of the House being the House the people run. It is true. We get their message later rather than sooner, but in the final analysis, the people rule in this House. And when Members come back when they came back from the August recess and when they came back from the last holiday, what were they were hearing at home?" "Don't stop. No smoke and mirrors. No gimmicks. Put the country first. We want you to do it. Save our children." That is what they heard and that is why the program is advancing.

Mr. Speaker, a little about the program. Every time I put these charts up we get a thousand calls to the office asking for charts. Mr. Speaker, let me tell my colleagues about the program. It is unbelievable what we are doing. We are going from $9.5 trillion in spending over the last 7 years to $12.1 trillion.

Some in this House want to grow to $13.3 trillion. I respect them for that, but we are not talking about going down; we are talking about going up. The debate is not about a $3 trillion increase in spending; it is whether we can restrain ourselves for that last trillion dollars; whether we can meet the challenge on that last trillion dollars to slow the growth of this government so that we, in fact, can balance our budget.

Medicaid. Medicaid is going from 443 to 785. All over America, that is an increase. We are going to give the States flexibility. Know what? We added a little back to Medicaid today. Why? Because we will be big enough to say, if it is too thin, we are going to come in and we are going to help. We will be big enough to say it. I asked my colleagues on the other side the last time to work with us. We will keep working with them.

Medicare, $926 billion to $1.6 trillion increase over the next 7 years. How about the per beneficiary? The per beneficiary is going to go from 4,800 bucks to 6,700 bucks. The average person in the private sector who is not a senior citizen is getting 1,900. We are doing a good job by our senior citizens. We are giving them a heck of a lot more and they need it and they are going to get it. We are going to save the program from bankruptcy.

One other thing, Mr. Speaker, we are going to stop generational transfer that begins to rob the next generation that is about to go to work.

Welfare, 492 to 838. Any way we want to count it, if the Cleveland Indians could have a 492 to 838, we would be winning the World Series tonight. That is an increase. That is more. If Cleveland had 838 and Atlanta had 492, we would be bringing out the champagne in Cleveland tonight. The fact is, we are doing better by this program. Bottom line though, again, $9.5 trillion to $12.2 trillion.

Tax cuts. Two schools of thought on tax cuts. Mr. Speaker, to growth advocates I would say, want to know something? Your President, our President, my President is going to sign a reduction in the capital gains tax. I will tell my colleagues why. Because intellectuals, and people who simply get up and go to work every day, know we have got to provide an incentive for risk-taking, because that creates jobs. We will have a lower capital gains tax at the end of this process, because it is for creating jobs.

Number 2, the social advocates, and they are not mutually exclusive, number 2, people who are concerned about the American family, they want to give the family some back. So, we close the Commerce Department down and save $8 billion. We are going to give some of the money back to the people who supported that bureaucracy all these years. It makes sense.

Mr. Speaker, the results at the end of the day? Do not listen to these think tanks. Let us not even listen to us. Let us listen to the Chairman of the Federal Reserve. Do my colleagues know what he said? In simple terms: If we can balance the budget, we will do two things. We will destroy the fear in the hearts and minds of mothers and fathers that their children will not have a better America than what they had, we will eliminate that if we can balance the budget; and, secondly, we will unleash a prosperity that we cannot even chart in America.

It is about growth; it is about the future; it is about the family; it is about the next generation; about doing the commonsense things that we all believe in and our constituents believe in.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have a process called reconciliation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DREIER). The Chair wishes to observe that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] was recognized for the time that he consumed, which was beyond the 5 minutes. We are extending the same courtesy to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH], chairman of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, let me finish by saying the word "reconciliation" never made any sense to me. I thought about it this morning. If there is anything this country needs, it is reconciliation. If there is anything this House needs over the longhaul, it is reconciliation.

Mr. Speaker, I was in the gym with the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] the other night and I said, "GEORGE, you were doing a lot of things when you were in power that I thought were not so hot, but I liked you anyway, GEORGE." I said, "Now we are in power and we are doing some things that you do not like. The challenge for you is can you still like us?" Do my colleagues know what the gentleman from California said? "Yes, we can."

Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO] reminds me of this every day, at the end of the day, in the fourth quarter, we have to have reconciliation with ourselves, with the other body, with the administration.

Mr. Speaker, I will promise my colleagues that one of the leaders on this side or this side will ever ask Members to sell out their principles. They cannot do it. What I can tell Members is if we can talk, if we can communicate, if we can listen, if we can understand one another, nothing but good can come from it. Frankly, if we can have reconciliation in this House as part of the leadership of this country, that will spread to the kind of reconciliation we need in this Nation.

Republicans and Democrats, let us lay this plan down. Let us pass it. Let us save the next generation, and let us begin saving America.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WALKER was allowed to speak out of order for 1 minute.)

WELCOME TO MR. WELDON OF PENNSYLVANIA UPON HIS RETURN TO THE HOUSE FLOOR

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I make this announcement simply to ask the House to welcome back our colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELDON], who has had open heart surgery just last week and, in fact, is here for this historic vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. DRIER). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

NOT VOTING—3

☐ 1849

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to say that I was unavoidably delayed last Thursday in a meeting and missed the vote on H.R. 2491.

If I had been present, I would have voted "no."

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FRANKS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

REPORT ON H.R. 2546, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1996

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 104–294) on the bill (H.R. 2546) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said district for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1996, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DREIER). All points of order are reserved on the bill.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1868, FOREIGN OPERATIONS, EXPORT FINANCING, AND RELATED PROGRAMS APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1996

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers on the part of the House may have until midnight tonight, October 26, 1995, to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 1868) making appropriations for foreign operations, export financing, and related programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1996, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. BONIOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to inquire of the distinguished majority leader the schedule for next week.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONIOR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, October 30, the House will meet at 12:30 p.m. for morning hour and 2 o'clock p.m. for legislative business. We plan to take up four bills under suspension of the rules, H.R. 1508, the National Children's Island Act of 1995; H.R. 2005, a bill to make technical corrections in Coastal Barrier Resources Systems Map; H.R. 1358, a bill to convey the National Marine Fisheries Service Laboratory at Gloucester, Massachusetts; and H.R. 1691, the Homesteading and Neighborhood Restoration Act of 1995.

Mr. Speaker, Members should be advised that any recorded votes ordered on these bills will be postponed until 5 o'clock p.m. on Monday.

After suspensions, we will take up the rule on H.R. 2492 and the bill itself, the Legislative Branch Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1996. We also plan on going to conference on H.R. 2491, the Seven-year Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995.

On Tuesday, October 31, and the balance of the week, the House will consider the following bills, both of which will be subject to rules: The District of Columbia Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1996, and H.R. 1883, the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act of 1995.

Of course, Members should keep in mind that conference reports may be brought to the floor at any time, and we do expect a number of appropriations conference reports to be ready next week.

On Monday, October 30, we expect to finish legislation around 8 o'clock p.m. On Tuesday, the House will meet at 9 a.m. for the morning hour and 10 a.m. for the legislative business. We hope to finish voting that night by 6 o'clock so Members may return home to see their little hobgoblins, ghosts and ghouls trick or treat on Halloween night. On Wednesday we plan to work later, probably until 10 or 11 p.m. so that on Thursday, November 2, we can have Members on their way home to their families by 6 o'clock p.m.

Mr. Speaker, this is the last vote for this week, and there will be no session tomorrow.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the majority leader, you know, the House had a series of very close votes on riders to the VA-HUD bill, particularly to the EPA section of that bill. We on this side of the aisle were concerned about the statement yesterday that appeared in Congress Daily that the Republican leadership may attempt to schedule another vote on this issue at a time when many Members were absent, "to sneak it by," as the quote was relayed in Congress Daily.

That troubles us, as you can imagine dearly. We want to know if you plan to go to conference on the VA-HUD bill and when you want to do it.

Mr. ARMEY. If the gentleman would yield, we expect, Mr. Speaker, to go to conference on that on Wednesday.

Mr. BONIOR. On Wednesday. I thank my colleague.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONIOR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOGGETT. I see that Legislative Branch Appropriations Act has been rescheduled for Monday. Are you sure we will reach it on Monday?

Mr. ARMEY. Yes.

Mr. DOGGETT. Really sure?

Mr. ARMEY. Really sure.

Mr. DOGGETT. Will the rule that is provided there allow for consideration of a gift ban and lobby reform?

Mr. ARMEY. It is not germane.

Mr. DOGGET. It is not germane.

Mr. ARMEY. You can check with the Committee on Rules, but that is my understanding.

Mr. DOGGETT. Will there be any other opportunity next week to consider gift ban and lobby reform legislation of the type that the Senate approved 98 to 0?

Mr. ARMEY. I can tell the gentleman from Texas I will be making an announcement on that subject tomorrow at a press conference to be held at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. DOGGETT. Without presuming what your press conference might cover, does the gentleman contemplate the possibility of a rule being in place for this body on January 1, as is the case with the Senate?

Mr. ARMEY. I am sorry, the gentleman will repeat the question?

Mr. DOGGETT. Yes. Without getting into the details of your press conference, does the gentleman contemplate the possibility that we could have a rule in place here by January 1 as the Senate has done?

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman for asking. I will just say to the gentleman, I am sure that the gentleman's curiosity will be satisfied at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. DOGGETT. I look forward to it.

Mr. BONIOR. Have a nice weekend.

Mr. ARMEY. You all have a nice weekend.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HONORABLE SAM M. GIBBONS, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable SAM M. GIBBONS, Member of Congress:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, October 24, 1995.

Hon. NEWT GINGRICH,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to formally notify you pursuant to Rule L (50) of the Rules of the House that my office has been served with a subpoena issued by the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida.

After consultation with the General Counsel, I have determined that compliance with the subpoena is consistent with the privileges and precedents of the House.

Sincerely,
SAM M. GIBBONS.

TABLING OF PRIVILEGED RESOLUTION REGARDING FORGERY OF DOCUMENT BY A HOUSE SUBCOMMITTEE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of May 12, 1995, the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER] is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr Speaker, I rise tonight to participate in this special order in order to have an opportunity to discuss yesterday's tabling of the privileged resolution which dealt with the forgery by a House subcommittee. Although we were denied the opportunity to even debate the serious issue, I feel it is so important that we cannot let it go undiscussed.

Yesterday we tabled a resolution regarding an issue of basic responsibility of the people who serve here either by election or by appointment. This responsibility is to assure that all who serve here are cognizant of their responsibility and determined to carry out the legal obligations of this country.

This resolution, Mr. Speaker, was an effort to protect the history of our legislative record. It was designed to guarantee that we put together a fair and accurate record of our legislative history for those to come. What we do in Congress is used by teachers in classrooms, lawyers in courtrooms, authors and historians, all of whom depend upon our integrity so they need not question the authenticity of what they read.

Senator TRENT LOTT, when he served in the House, made an eloquent statement of the importance of the sanctity of our legislative records, and I quote.

> For if the legislative history made by the duly elected representatives of the people is subject to malicious alteration and distortion by anonymous nonelected staffers, then the credibility of this institution in the people's branch is in serious jeopardy. All our written records become suddenly suspect in the eyes of the people and of the press and of the courts. How much weight, for instance, are the courts likely to give to the legislative history we supposedly made as representatives when the actual source of that history is in doubt? And yet that is the situation in which we find ourselves until the guilty are found and punished and adequate steps are taken to prevent the reoccurrence of such abuse.

That was then House Member LOTT, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD June 30, 1983, and I agree with him.

Yesterday, a resolution was tabled that would have reaffirmed this House's commitment to history. Not only did this House refuse to affirm the integrity and honesty of House records, but we were prevented from even speaking about it. Are we to expect that when such things occur in this House we will sweep them under the carpet, pretend they never happened, in essence condone the actions with our silence?

Mr. Speaker, let us go back to the beginning. At a hearing on September 28 in the Government Reform and Oversight Subcommittee on National Economic Growth, Natural Resources, and Regulatory Affairs, a document was placed on the press table which appeared to be on the letterhead of the Alliance for Justice. It included a logo and address, phone number, fax number, E-mail address and a listing of member organizations laid out in such a manner as to replicate the Alliance's own letterhead. Incorrect information was then placed on this document in such a way in which any reasonable person would believe it came from the Alliance for Justice.

Upon closer examination by members of the Alliance for Justice it became clear that the document was falsified. When pressed, the Chair of the committee admitted his staff had created the document and, as admitted by his communications director, they had taken a faxed document, scanned it into the computer system and altered it.

Mr. Speaker, anyone could have picked up this piece of paper, walked out of the room and remained under the impression that it was put out by the Alliance for Justice. The creation of this document clearly held the intention of deceit. This is forgery. Forgery is a crime in the United States, and forgery was committed by those people who work in a place where the laws on forgery are made.

If the intent was not to deceive or to mislead, as claimed by the creators of the document, why create it at all? Why not simply make the point on a hand-out of their own committee letterhead? Why not just use the organization's name and list the information? The sole reason to replicate the logo and include an address, phone number, fax number, E-mail address and listing of members organizations is to make the reader of the document assume the document came from the organization instead of from the subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, why did this staff need to forge a document in the first place? We should all be perplexed and outraged by this action. Regardless of your position on the legislation which was under consideration on September 28, that hearing cannot be ignored by anyone who believes that Congress must obey the laws that it writes. It cannot go unchallenged by anybody who honorably claims to represent the United States in these hallowed halls of Congress. It cannot be accepted by those of us who have vowed to uphold the laws of the United States as we take our oath.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the unauthorized creation and falsification of documents to be distributed to the general public must be condemned. The forgery calls into question the role that we, as Members of the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight, have been sworn to carry out. It is our duty and responsibility to ensure that we provide oversight, to make sure we are acting in accordance with rules and regulations of the land. We must guarantee we are fair to all our witnesses. We must guarantee we conduct fair and open hearings. We must guarantee we put together a fair and accurate record of our legislative history.

Furthermore, I find it distressing to witness this kind of overreaching and blatant disregard for the law simply in order to make a political point, to create an enemies list, mistreat them as witnesses before the Congress and then to silence those who challenge this kind of behavior brings dangerous memories to mind and sets off resounding alarm bells.

As the people of this country once again examine this institution ever more closely, do we think they would accept the use of forgery to make a point? Do we think they would accept silencing those who attempt to make us honest? I think not.

In the name of the men and women who have served Congress in the past, in the name of those who will come after us, and in the name of history, we must be clear. We will not let forgery go unchecked. We will not allow representatives in this Congress to deceive. Mr. Speaker, we will not tolerate this kind of action.

I would like to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO. I thank my friend from New York, Ms. SLAUGHTER, for including me in this opportunity to comment on something that I think is a very serious matter. And while the privileged resolution that was to be offered yesterday was tabled, it in no sense erases this problem from the RECORD. In fact, perhaps the claim of vindication that we have heard since then makes it even more important that we pursue the matter vigorously.

I think the gentlewoman's effort tonight is an effort, even in the midst of all that is happening here, with all the very fundamental questions about public policy, to make sure that this very key issue for those of us who are concerned about the legitimacy of our process here remains on the table. Because, in my view, there are few things as sacred to this House as the public trust. And that very legitimacy, that legitimacy of our representation, rests on a tradition of trust, a tradition that is truly built painstakingly over 200 years of serve to this Nation.

Mr. Speaker, 13 years ago an incident occurred that put that trust in jeopardy. I think that incident is very much like the one that the gentlewoman from New York is commenting on. And it might surprise some of the new Members of Congress, who seem to think that for 40 years we did not fight to uphold the integrity of this institution, but, in fact, a very different approach was taken. We were not into tabling and covering up, we were actually concerned enough that we took some action.

So perhaps I can outline for colleagues who were not aware of the similar occurrence and the differing approach we took under that Democratic leadership.

A staff member of the Government Operations Committee doctored the transcripts of a committee hearing. He altered an official committee document, part of the permanent record of the House of Representatives. The changes he made were designed to advance his political agenda. The testimony of committee members was changed in a way that reflected negatively on them. He made them look foolish, and in doing so, in my opinion, he made all of us look foolish.

Committee hearings and debate like the debate we are having tonight constitute a living history of the democratic process. Words have meaning. Debate has meaning. Parliamentary democracy derives its very legitimacy from rules and procedures, and, most importantly, from a tradition of trust. For these reasons, the House acted swiftly and on a bipartisan basis to investigate the matter. 409 Members agreed unanimously to authorize the Ethics Committee to look into the incident.

The entire shameful episode was put to rest with the resignation of the staff person who perpetrated the forgery and the release of an Ethics Committee report which commented on the fulsome nature of the activity involved. No single voice was more powerful in that debate than the voice of my Republican colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, BOB WALKER.

Today a similar outrageous incident compels us to take the floor. I believe that outrageous incident is deceitful and is damaging and just as dangerous. Another forgery, this time perpetrated by yet unnamed staff of the very same committee. No one has been brought to justice, and it looks like more than a few people here would just as soon sweep this whole matter, this entire episode under the rug.

Mr. Speaker, I am angry, and I think I am angry in the same context that our colleague BOB WALKER was angry in 1983. Twelve years ago he said the following: "The integrity of this body has been compromised." He added "There is a need to begin a process to make certain that such an instance never happens again". And I think we are in a similar position today.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] talked about the integrity of the committee process. He told the House "To have any committee or any subcommittee of that full committee under a cloud of suspicion will reflect adversely on the base work of the committee, which is oversight of Federal agencies". The same as it is today.

As we do today, my colleague demanded a thorough investigation of these matters. In language that seems, unfortunately, as appropriate today as it did then, my colleague, Mr. WALKER, characterized the incident as "An example of congressional staff run amuck and of certain Members of Congress attempting to utilize our legitimate congressional oversight functions as platform to further their individual political ambition".

While I certainly hope the same is not true today, 12 years ago we acted on a bipartisan basis to investigate a forgery. Today we should join together once again in condemning a similar shameful action. We have the opportunity to urge the Speaker to ensure that the integrity of the legislative process and the committee process are respected and protected. A vote to uphold the honesty and the integrity of the House of Representatives should still be scheduled here for the deliberation on the House floor.

Once Republicans learn, I believe, that vindication has been claimed, as I said earlier, and once they learn that there is a precedent for taking action on matters that are very similar, if not exact, I am hopeful that their sense of fair play and bipartisan sense of integrity, the integrity of this institution, will come into play and that the cavalier decision to simply table the matter without further comment will be not only regretted but reversed.

It seems to me that the only way perhaps we can call upon a sense of fairness and a sense of not only perpetuating a tradition of integrity, but following a precedent can be brought about is for the gentlewoman, and others who have a concern for the institution, to continue to bring the issue to the floor until it is properly dealt with by the Republican leadership.

So, I want to thank the gentlewoman for her diligence, for the serious nature that she views this indiscretion, and I hope that other Members looking back to 1983, to when Democrats were embarrassed but unanimously, with our Republican colleagues, took action, with that harkening back to I think the proper management of the House, we will ultimately succeed.

Once again, I appreciate, the gentlewoman for letting my comments be a part of the RECORD, and I hope she will continue her effort.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Thank you, very much. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SKAGGS].

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from New York for yielding some time to me and for her courage in pursuing this very troubling matter.

Mr. Speaker, one of the wonderful words of political debate in this country over the decades has been the word "balderdash." It just occurred to me that as with so many things, perhaps like obscenity, it is hard to define, but we know it when we see it.

My colleagues, this is balderdash. The idea that the gentleman from Indiana would claim that a vote to table the gentlewoman's resolution of inquiry and privilege somehow vindicated the acts that were taken under his name by his staff in the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight really stretches credulity to the breaking point.

This is a classic example of, I think, "He protesteth too much," and we will see how the facts ultimately unfold here.

I think, as the gentlewoman has pointed out, this is a very serious matter. It does implicate the integrity of the House of Representatives of this country and the trustworthiness of the legislative process. This forgery was committed with the official resources of the House of Representatives. What kind of example does that set for not only our colleagues, but others who are observing us and trying to discern whether this body deserves to have their trust and confidence?

Let us be perfectly clear about this. There could be no purpose in this document's being produced other than to deceive. There is simply no such thing as an innocent forgery.

Let me just show, this is a blowup of the genuine article, the real stationery of the Alliance for Justice, and this was the forgery. I think there can be absolutely no doubt that this document was devised and intended to look like this one and to mislead people in the process.

Mr. Speaker, I was there at that hearing. I questioned the chairman about it at the time. He professed to have no knowledge that this had been done by his committee staff, and I think that is why the gentlewoman's resolution, which was a measured response asking the Speaker of the House of Representatives to deal appropriately to correct this failure of the committee staff to meet the high standards we expect of them, was a very, as I say, measured reaction to this.

Yet, what does the majority leader do but to move to table the resolution, clearly hoping that this problem will just go away. To the contrary, I believe that it will fester until it is dealt with openly and straightforwardly by the body. It is another example of the leadership style that seems to prevail around here these days, which is essentially encapsulated in the phrase, "Our way or no way."

The underlying issue here, the so-called Istook-McIntosh-Ehrlich proposal, is a perverse one to begin with. It directly attacks the ability of many, if not most organizations, and many if not most citizens of this country, to fully participate in the political life of America. It is a direct attack on the life blood of any democracy, which is the free flow of information and debate.

What is the problem? What is the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MCINTOSH] afraid of? Why is political advocacy by the American Red Cross or the Girl Scouts or the YMCA somehow a threat? Why should those organizations not have the full right to talk to the Congress and to others in public life about things that concern them?

It is hard to figure out, but that is, as the gentlewoman knows, the underlying agenda here. Perhaps one of the things that explains all of this is that it is intended to distract, intended to draw attention away from the failure on the part of the majority party to take up real lobbying reform, real gift ban legislation.

But in their zeal to push this kind of extreme proposal, they have overstepped the bounds. That zeal has clearly been communicated to staff in a way that has evidently blurred the very important distinction between means and ends.

A forgery by the official staff of a committee of the House of Representatives. Give me a break. That is bad enough. But for the majority just to brush it off, to table the gentlewoman's resolution, is a sorry spectacle indeed.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Thank you. The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. HEFNER].

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for making this time available. I do not usually participate in special orders, but I read a press release that took on, in my view, a very vicious tone and made some accusations about a gentlewoman who has been my friend for a long, long time.

Mr. Speaker, the only thing we have in life is our integrity, and our word is our bond, as people take about. We have some high rhetoric when we get into debate about different issues. We have just had Medicare and reconciliation. I have been here for some 20 years, but we usually try to, in our arguments, be basically honest and have some truth to what we say.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any argument, nobody has disputed, that this was not a forgery, which in itself is bad enough that anyone would forge a document. The only reason that I can imagine that anyone would put a document out is because the heading "Alliance for Justice" maybe would call attention that this is an organization and people would pick it up and they would have some respect and people would read it.

It would seem to me if someone wanted to put the information out, they would have used their own stationery, or the subcommittee's stationery head. Not only was it a forgery, which is bad enough, but after contacting the different organizations that were mentioned, they denied that they got the numbers. They got no Federal funds. And this, in itself, is false witness about an agency.

Then when they get caught with their hand in the cookie jar, if they are in the majority, they can have a motion to table and if they have got the votes, they can walk lockstep and table it. It does not mean that they are not caught with their hand in the cookie jar.

It seems to me if they had wanted to do the honorable thing when it was called to their attention, if the subcommittee chairman had wanted to do the honorable thing, he would apologize if his staff had done it.

Mr. Speaker, if my staff had done it, I would have been the first one on this floor. I have been a subcommittee chairman for a lot of years. I would have been the first one on this floor to apologize to this House and to apologize to the people that were affected, and the staff people that had done it would apologize and they probably would not have been on the staff anymore.

This is something that takes on a very serious situation to me. Then I read the press accounts here. The press release says: Taking Ms. SLAUGHTER to task for all she wants to do and use this as politically motivated and unfounded.

It is not unfounded. Nobody denies that it is a forgery. There is no doubt about that. Let me just read and follow up on what the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO] said. I have a quotation here on the same situation that the gentleman was talking about. This was from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER]:

> We have got to make certain that what we do serves the best interest of the House, but also accomplishes the purpose of making certain that we never have the future staff people or future Members thinking that this is the kind of thing they can get away with.

He goes on to say,

> This is political dirty tricks with venom, because what they have done here is the dirty tricks have resulted, potentially, in the change in the entire public documentation, but in this case, in trying to change the people's minds on legislation that is being proposed in this House."

In my view, it is to put a muzzle on these people that you do not agree with their positions, but you will just do away with these organizations. We just shut them down. We want to be able to end up detailing precisely how this came about, what took place, and then make whatever changes are necessary to make certain it never takes place again, including, of course, getting rid of the people who are responsible.

Mr. Speaker, if my colleagues are responsible Members of this House, talking about family values and principle, they would not condone and would certainly not be a party to this, which constitutes dirty tricks. It is a forgery. It is a false document. It does not have any truth to it. They are trying to do this so they can prevail in their ability to do away with all of these different agencies; muzzle the agencies, the Red Cross, the Girl Scouts, and all of these that I consider to be legitimate agencies.

If my colleagues are responsible Members of this House, and they represent, as I do and the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER] and these other people that have spoken, some half a million people in this country, they owe it to these people to be honest, to the best of their ability to speak the truth, to where the people in their district and the people of the great United States of America know that when they speak or they put out a document, it has some basis of truth to it.

And, Mr. Speaker, when they are caught in a case where this is not the case, rather than to admit and be big enough to come before the House and at least come before the people on the committee that could be affected by it and the agencies that could be affected by it, be big enough to come to them and apologize and take the people to task, the staff people, take them to task so it would never happen again.

What goes beyond all bounds of reason in my view is they muzzle the gentlewoman that brought the resolution to the House and just say, "Hey, we have got the numbers. We will not face up to it. We do not have to explain to anybody, because we have the numbers and we will just vote to table it and that will be the last of it."

I do not believe that that is the way this place is supposed to work. That is not the way that we have operated in the 22 years that I have been here, and there have been times when we have been forced to take painful votes when it affected people in my party. But we made the votes and we did not sweep it under the rug.

To me, this is absolutely, totally unacceptable. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentlewoman from New York for taking this special order. I would urge that the Member that is responsible for this would take the responsibility. He swore to uphold the laws of the great United States of America and the Constitution, that he would take it upon his shoulders to come to this House and admit that this was a forgery and that the people who are responsible for it are no longer in the employ of the taxpayers of the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for taking this time and I think she certainly is to be commended for standing up for what is morally right and the integrity of this House of Representatives.

□ 1930

Ms. SLAUGHTER. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS], the ranking member of the full committee.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, it is not often that I come to this floor for special orders, but I come here today because I feel this is an extremely important matter.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Subcommittee on National Economic Growth, Natural Resources, and Regulatory Affairs, has said that he had no prior knowledge of the document distributed at the hearing on September 28.

I have no reason not to believe him. I, therefore, also believe that he had no personal involvement in creating the document that misled so many who saw it.

However, Mr. Speaker, this incident should never have happened.

In this case, when the facts failed to support the majority's view, it appears they manufactured their own facts using official funds, committee staff and support agencies of the House to mislead Members, the press, and the public.

When they did these things, Mr. Speaker, they went too far. They ran afoul of rule IX of the Rules of the House of Representatives, and that created a question of the privileges of the House of the kind Ms. SLAUGHTER presented yesterday. Her resolution, which was tabled twice deserved a full and open debate on this floor.

Adoption of the motion to table which was offered by the majority leader obviously represented a desire to avoid debate and to side step accountability. We have seen this blind vision so often in the 104th Congress—far too often. It was hardly the vindication which some have claimed.

What is particularly offensive about the events described by Ms. SLAUGHTER is that a document was created using official funds which misrepresented the views of a witness at the hearing, an organization called the Alliance for Justice. In addition, the information about Federal grants was inaccurate.

There is only one reason the subcommittee would have created this document and that is to embarrass the Alliance for Justice.

When the document was exposed as a fraud, the chairman of the subcommittee claimed that he was not aware of any problems in the preparation of the document.

He accused the witness, Nan Aron, the director of the Alliance for Justice, of hiding behind the fifth amendment when she refused to confirm the accuracy of the numbers contained in the document.

Later he admitted that the subcommittee staff created the document. After that, he wrote a letter of apology to Nan Aron.

It is still unclear which staff actually participated in this deception and what authorization they received from Members. Concerns have also been raised that staff of a member's personal office performed functions which should have been under the direction of subcommittee staff.

Mr. Speaker, some have said in defense of the subcommittee that the forged document with the Alliance for Justice letterhead was merely a harmless graphic which was intended to illustrate the majority's contention that some member organizations of the Alliance received Federal funds.

But if this was merely a harmless graphic, then one of its purposes was to give the impression that there was something improper or illegal in their receipt of Federal funds.

Mr. Speaker, this was an exercise in using an official investigative hearing of a House subcommittee to deceive, rather than to enlighten.

The House and its committees cannot function if Members of the House attempt to deceive each other, as well as the press and the public which we represent, with false information.

The resolution submitted by Ms. SLAUGHTER called for the Speaker to get to the bottom of this incident. The Speaker had already acted earlier to ensure that Members of the House must take responsibility for documents circulated on the floor about pending legislation and amendments.

We still need action to ensure that the integrity of the committee process is respected so that its principal purpose—to gather accurate information which we can use to write legislation and to conduct proper oversight—is respected.

That integrity has been under attack throughout this Congress, not just in the incident we are addressing today.

For example, at the recent Waco hearings jointly conducted by subcommittees of the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight, we discovered that representatives of a private entity, the National Rifle Association, were treated like professional committee staff of the House; that an attempt was made to allow them access to confidential materials which might be used as evidence in the hearings; and that there was an effort to cover up their role.

As the majority must now realize, those revelations, as well as the incident involving the forged document, were counterproductive. They interfered with whatever message the majority might have been trying to put out. They embarrassed the committees and Members involved. Ultimately, they reflect on the House and on all of us.

Mr. Speaker, we often disagree on policy. But let's not attempt to deceive each other, or the national audience outside the House, with forged documents, tricks, and misrepresentations. That hurts the House on every legislative issue, not just this one. And that is what the House must speak firmly against. This must not happen again.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. If I could just ask the gentlewoman a question. I know you have seen the press release that was handed out saying that the House voted to vindicate the gentleman involved.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. I did.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Did you notice that that was written on committee stationery?

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. No, I did not.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the leadership of the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS] in this committee in trying at least to uphold the laws of the House, but the laxity, as you had pointed out, what we have seen in the Waco hearings and what we saw the other day in the hearings on the White House Travel Office, indicate to me that integrity is in very short supply on that committee.

I wonder if you agree with me, and you were there the day this document came about. I have said many times I think the thing that saddened me most was the fact that the staff and the subcommittee chair thought it was very amusing, and they saw nothing in the world wrong with what had taken place here.

I feel that it is going to be my obligation. If no one else of the 435 Members care about it, it is terribly important to me that this not take place here in this House. This is too sacred a ground that we stand on. Too many people send us here with their total trust that we are going to do the right thing. I can imagine their outrage if they really knew that this is going on. Frankly, I do not know how much more of it goes on. But at least on this piece right here where I was closely involved I intend to make my stand.

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the efforts of the gentlewoman from New York to bring a serious problem to this body's attention. The actions of majority staff of the Subcommittee on National Economic Growth, Natural Resources, and Regulatory Affairs are very disturbing, and every Member of this House should be alarmed. The entire House is once again subject to more public outrage about our activities by the production of a phony press release concocted just to make a point.

When the Republican leadership immediately tabled the gentlewoman's resolution yesterday, it certainly sent a strong message to me. Why has the Republican leadership gagged us? Why can't we have a debate? As the gentlewoman has pointed out, quite correctly, forgery is a crime. This matter needs to be examined to ensure that it never happens again. Contrary to arguments from the other side of the aisle, this is not merely a partisan issue: it is a question of institutional integrity.

I was encouraged at the beginning of this Congress when the new leadership promised that the House would be more open and that debate would be free. What has happened to that promise? I opposed efforts in the last Congress to gag or shorten debate, and I still oppose these restrictions. To say I am extremely disappointed in what happened here yesterday would be an understatement.

This is a serious problem that casts a dark shadow over this institution. So why have the Republicans also attempted to discredit the gentlewoman from New York? We all received a Dear Colleague from the Republican members of the subcommittee that not only attacked the integrity of the gentlewoman from New York but also evaded the facts. Perhaps it is because the gentlewoman is correct: forgery is a crime. This matter needs to be examined to ensure that it never happens again. Regarding the integrity of the gentlewoman, I wonder how many signers of this Dear Colleague have received campaign contributions from Defense corporations? We don't see the Republicans attempting to subvert the first amendment rights of Defense and other corporations who engage in lobbying activities.

I also question the fact that this was just a simple mistake. If the intent was only to show the amount of Federal dollars received by the Alliance for Justice, why was it necessary to use House Information Resources to produce an exact duplicate of the Alliance's letterhead, even down to its e-mail address?

The legislation that produced this controversy, the restriction of groups from using any of their own funds to lobby, deserved to be debated in a very open forum. I do not see how this is possible now. The fact that the majority staff of this subcommittee believed it necessary to willfully falsify a document to make a point about the need for this legislation certainly sends a unmistakable signal that they and their superiors did not have enough facts to bolster their arguments.

I hope the matter does not end here. Regardless of the propriety or impropriety of the actions by majority staff, the fact remains that the information was false and could have become part of the public record.

Finally, how can we explain this to our constituents? As we all know, the public's perception of Congress is still quite low. This sad situation will only lower our constituents' opinion of both the process and the institution most of us respect. This is the greatest tragedy of all, because it undermines every Member's mission—producing sound and reasoned laws for the public good. How can I tell my constituents back home that I am making the best decisions on important issues when the information I am receiving may be either skewed or fraudulent?

Once again, I salute the gentlewoman's commitment to this serious problem.

BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE] is recognized to control the balance of the pending hour as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, could I just inquire, does that mean that I have 5 minutes or that I have how long?

The SPEAKER pro tempo. The gentleman has a maximum of 22 minutes remaining.

Mr. PALLONE. I thank the Speaker and I want to thank the gentlewoman from New York for yielding me the balance of her time.

CYPRUS

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to talk about the Budget Reconciliation Act that we passed today. But before I do that, if I could just spend a couple of minutes on a matter that is very important relating to the state of Cyprus.

Mr. Speaker, earlier today Cyprus's Minister of Foreign Affairs met with the International Relations Committee for a briefing on the United Nation's and United State's continuing efforts to bring about a peaceful resolution to the illegal occupation of Cyprus by Turkey, which is now in its 21st year. I am, consequently, here tonight to once again lend my support to Mr. Michaelides and all of the Cypriot people in their fight to restore independence to their country.

Mr. Speaker, over the last two decades the international community has demanded that the Turks—who today manage their illegal occupation with a heavily armed force of over 30,000 troops and 300 tanks—allow the Cypriot people to live as a free and independent people in various forms over the years. Most recently, in July of last year the United Nations Security Council passed Resolution 939, which mandated that any settlement of the Cyprus issue must be based on a state of Cyprus with a single sovereignty and international personality and a single citizenship with its independence and territorial integrity safeguarded.

During this time period the United States has also repeatedly urged Turkey to abide by the various United Nation resolutions that have been issued. Just a few weeks ago on September 18, the House passed House Concurrent Resolution 42, which insists that all parties to the dispute regarding Cyprus agree to seek a solution based upon the relevant United Nations resolutions. House Concurrent Resolution 42 also urges the Turks to build upon a gesture of goodwill made last year by Cyprus's President Glafcos Clerides and agree to remove all foreign troops from the island.

For 21 years the entire region surrounding Cyprus has been in a volatile state, casting a pall of instability that feeds the specter of war. The Secretary General of the United Nation has called Cyprus one of the most highly militarized areas in the world. As an international champion for both the notion of self-determination and respect for international law, the United States has an obligation to make sure that when the Foreign Minister leaves our country, he will leave knowing that American people fully support the demilitarization of the island as part of the larger effort to secure a free and wholly independent Cyprus.

As I said when I spoke in support of House Congressional Resolution 42 last month, a Turkish refusal to act on this proposal can only be read as an unwavering determination by Turkey to ignore the rule of law. Indeed, the Secretary General of the United Nations has also noted there has been a lack of progress on this issue due essentially to the lack of political will on the Turkish Cypriot side. There is, however, no shortage of American political will when it comes to assisting Cyprus in its struggle for independence. Indeed, as the House's decision earlier this year to cut United States aid to Turkey demonstrated, there is an ample supply of American political will, and the sooner the Turks realize it, the better it will be for them, for Cyprus, and for the maintenance of international peace.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to now turn, if I could, back to the legislation that we spent most of our time on today, and that is the budget reconciliation bill.

When I had a few minutes during the debate today to talk about why I was opposed to Speaker GINGRICH'S budget reconciliation plan, I made reference to something that I rarely make reference to because I do not really think that surveys or polls are necessarily a good indication of the way people think. But in the poll that was actually done by the New York Times and CBS News that was in the New York Times today, there was reflected essentially what I have been hearing from my constituents relative to the budget, relative to the purported tax cuts and relative to the changes that the Republican leadership is making in both Medicare and Medicaid in this budget bill that was passed today.

Essentially, what the New York Times poll showed was that the public in general feels that and Medicare Medicaid are going to be seriously diminished for the worse as a result of this Republican bill that passed today, also that the tax cuts really are a sham, that they essentially go mostly for the rich and that ultimately this Budget Reconciliation Act, which is purported to have the purpose of balancing the budget, will not accomplish that goal.

I mention those things because I think that essentially they are true. They not only reflect what my constituents say but they reflect the reality of the legislation that was passed today.

If you look at the whole idea of balancing the budget, why would you start out with a tax cut? We all know that, in terms of the revenue that comes in, it is not sufficient to balance the budget. So if the revenue is reduced, and particularly if it is reduced in order to give some cuts to mostly wealthy people, then the balancing of the budget is going to be more difficult, and that is, in fact, what happens with this Republican proposal.

After 7 years, the national debt will be at least 250, some estimates even higher, because of the tax cut, and if you look at the tax cut, it provides more generous benefits at higher income levels.

We know that the legislation actually would raise taxes on those earning less than $30,000. So it is not even a tax cut unless you are making more than $30,000.

We are asking the American people to implement this tax cut mostly for wealthy people and at the same time that we are raising taxes on those below $30,000. And what are we doing it for? Well, I mean, if you look at what has been the debate for the last week or so on the House floor, you know that what is happening in this bill is that Medicare and Medicaid, Medicare being the health care program for the elderly, Medicaid being the health care program for low-income people, are both being seriously diminished, some would argue ultimately abolished, because of this budget bill.

It is no surprise, really, over and over again today on the House floor, and I will repeat it again, we made mention, the Democrats did, at least, to the Senate majority leader, BOB DOLE, Speaker GINGRICH, and the statements that they made with regard to the Medicare Program. We know that from the very beginning, when Medicare was passed back in the 1960's, that most of the Republicans in the House of Representatives and the Senate actually opposed it. And Senator DOLE, who is actually running for President now, was one of the 12 Members of Congress who voted again the Medicare bill at that time back in the 1960's.

Well, again, this Tuesday, earlier this week, he reiterated in a speech before the American Conservative Union, "I was there fighting the fight, voting against Medicare, 1 out of 12, because we knew it would not work in 1965." What a message that is being sent here by a candidate for President of the United States. He is essentially saying Medicare is a terrible program, and certainly it is no surprise that he and the Republican leadership are trying to essentially gut Medicare today.

Speaker GINGRICH went even further, in a sense. He pointed out that maybe we are not abolishing Medicare today, but that is ultimately what will happen. He says, "Now, we don't get rid of it in round 1, because we don't think that that is politically smart, and we don't think that is the right way to go through a transition period, but we believe it is going to wither on the vine because we think people are voluntarily going to leave it."

So what he is saying, in a sense, is he is saying very straightforwardly to, I think it was, to an insurance group, and this was actually today, that, "Well, we may not be totally destroying Medicare today, but the changes are so radical that it ultimately will disappear," and that is exactly what is going to happen under this legislation.

In an effort to try to achieve tax cuts mostly for wealthy people, not to balance the budget, we are destroying both Medicare, and I would argue also Medicaid. At least now, though, the Republican leaders are saying that they never liked Medicare from the beginning and that that really is what they are trying to do, get rid of Medicare.

How do they get rid of Medicare? Well, basically, what they do is they squeeze the program in Medicare and Medicaid so much. In other words, they take so much money out of it and they set limits on the amount of Federal dollars that are actually going to be available over the next few years so that it is not possible essentially to operate Medicare and Medicaid the way we have known them.

They also increase taxes on Medicare recipients, on the senior citizens who are part of the Medicare program. They doubling the Part B premium. Part B is the program that pays for physicians care. It could go from something like $40 today to something like $90 over the next 7 years. They means-test Medicare Part B for the elderly; those who have higher incomes will have to pay more.

But most importantly, what they are doing here, and this is why the Speaker says that ultimately people will get out of Medicare and it will disappear, is because they make it so difficult to stay in the traditional Medicare program where you choose your own doctor and he gets reimbursed in what we call a traditional fee-for-service program. So little money goes to that traditional system where you choose your own doctor and Medicare reimburses it, most of the increased dollars that are going to be available or most of the dollars that are going to be available go to HMO's or managed care systems. So if you decide you do not want to choose your own doctor and you want to go to a HMO, you are encouraged to do, because more money is going to be available on that side for seniors who go into HMO's or managed care than for seniors who stay in the traditional fee-for-service system where they choose their own doctors. That is how they get to the situation where the Speaker says ultimately Medicare disappears because more and more people will not be able to take advantage of the traditional Medicare.

On Medicaid, the abolition of Medicaid is even more direct under the bill. Medicaid right now is an entitlement, which means that if you are eligible because of your income, you get the health insurance benefit. But instead of providing a continued entitlement, we estimate maybe 35 million or so Americans who take advantage of Medicaid all of a sudden now their future and their ability to get health care is left up to the States. The money that the Federal Government provides, which again is capped and is limited, goes to the States in a block grant and the States decide who they want to cover, how they want to cover, and when they want to cover those individuals, and so essentially they could decide that they do not want to cover certain people or they could make it so difficult for those people to become eligible and so little money would be available that essentially they do not have adequate health care.

The worst the examples of this are that, I think, for myself, and again where you can see a link between what is happening with Medicare and Medicaid, was brought out last week and again today on the House floor where we mentioned that right now part B Medicare recipients, these are senior citizens who want to have their physician services covered, if they are below a certain income, if they are eligible for Medicaid, Medicaid now pays for their Part B premium. That guarantee, which exists under current law, its abolished.

There are a lot, we estimate about 7 million, widows in this country who are low-income, who right now Medicaid pays for their Part B premium. They no longer have a guarantee anymore that Medicaid will pay for that.

Although the Speaker last week indicated that this bill, or either the Medicare or this reconciliation bill, would take care of those low-income seniors, the reality is that they are not covered under this legislation that passed today.

So I think that when the American public, based on that New York Times poll or based on what I hear from my constituents say, that they are very scared about the future of Medicare and Medicaid because of the legislation that was put forward by the Republican leadership and passed rather narrowly today almost on a partisan vote, there is reason for them to be scared because the Republican leaders, because the leaders, whether it is Senator DOLE or Speaker GINGRICH, basically——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATHAM). The Chair will caution Members not to make personal references to Members of the other body.

Mr. PALLONE. Oh, you mean the Senate? All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I forgot that I am not allowed to make personal references to Senate Members.

What I wanted to say, though, in conclusion, is that it is abundantly clear that the Republican leadership in both houses, both the Senate and the House of Representatives, essentially are not in favor of Medicare, certainly the Medicare that we know of, and so when seniors express their concern and say they are fearful that this bill is going to abolish or significantly change Medicare or Medicaid for the worse, they are certainly accurate in their concerns.

We have some time, though. We have some time because even though this bill passed today, it still has to pass in the Senate. President Clinton has said that he intends to veto the legislation, and the vote today, which was rather narrow, I think it was about 232 to 200, so there were over 200 Members who were opposed to it, I think will send a message to the administration that this is not a bill that should be supported and that it should be vetoed, and when it is vetoed and it comes back to this body, we will join with all of those who have expressed concern about it to make sure that we can come up with a better bill that does not severely impact Medicare and Medicaid and that ultimately achieves the balanced budget that is necessary to achieve deficit reduction and get this country back on the road to economic prosperity.

Mr. RIGGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALLONE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I have a quick question. I respect the gentleman a lot. I heard the very tail end of his comments.

Is the gentleman committing to support that compromise that you just described if we are able to work one out?

Mr. PALLONE. Oh, absolutely. You know, I guess I should point out to you today that I had a problem with the, some problems with the Democratic substitute that was proposed, and so I ultimately did not support it. But I think that, in general, what that substitute indicated was that it is possible to achieve a balanced budget in 7 years within the time frame that the bill that was passed today proposes and that you can achieve that without having the level of cuts in Medicare and Medicaid that this bill seeks.

One of the ways that the Democratic substitute achieved that was, of course, by eliminating the tax cut.

I think the bottom line is that it is possible to achieve deficit reduction to balance the budget within the 7 years. It certainly is a worthy goal, but you do not have to do it on the backs of America's seniors, which I think is what is happening.

Mr. RIGGS. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALLONE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have one simple question. I am curious if you would tell me, over the next several years, will the amount of money that we are going to spend on Medicare increase?

Mr. PALLONE. The amount of money that you propose to spend on Medicare would increase in absolute dollars, but what I would say to you is that the problem is that the rate of increase is insufficient to keep a quality health care system. I do not like to get involved in this debate over whether it is a cut or an increase. I think I will acknowledge that it is an increase in the actual amount of dollars, but if you look at the inflation rate and you look at the amount of money that is going to be necessary to keep a quality Medicare and Medicaid system, I think it is inadequate. That is my point.

Mr. NORWOOD. Well, I know you do, and those of us on this side really believe it is very adequate. For the first time, we are going to give providers of health care the opportunities to help bring down that inflation rate, and I think we will see that happen.

"60 MINUTES" REPORT ON THE DEATH OF VINCE FOSTER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of May 12, 1995, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] is recognized for 15 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have been watching the television show on CBS, "60 Minutes," for a long, long time, and I have always respected that program because it was very informative, and I always thought it was factual. And then, just after the last presidential election, I think Mr. Hewlett, the producer of "60 Minutes," said in a national interview that had he exposed all of the information that was available to him at "60 Minutes" during the campaign, that the then candidate for President, who was later elected, would be walking around in the snows of New Hampshire. So it became apparent to me that the "60 Minutes" producers and the people who ran that show had a very strong bias, and that bias was reflected in much of their reporting.

This became apparent to me again about 2 weeks ago on a Saturday night, when I watched Mike Wallace start doing a 20 minute segment on the death of Vince Foster. I have never seen so much misinformation and so much bias in reporting as I saw during that 20 minute segment.

Let me just tell you some of the things that happened, some of the things that "60 Minutes" ignored. Mike Wallace said that every government body that has investigated the death of Vince Foster reached the same conclusion, than he killed himself at Fort Marcy Park.

He did not mention that the independent counsel, Kenneth Starr, has reopened the investigation. Mr. Starr's attorney spent this summer questioning witnesses before a grand jury. The FBI is back in Fort Marcy Park, or was a couple of weeks ago, more than 2 years after Vince Foster's death, looking for the bullet that killed him. Would the independent counsel go through all of this work were there not unanswered questions about the case?

So I believe that Mr. Wallace was incorrect when he said that the conclusion has been reached by every government agency. In addition, many of us in Congress have come to different conclusions as well.

Another thing that he forgot to mention was that the police were not the first people to encounter Foster's body. He mentioned a national park policeman who found the body. The fact of the matter is that the park policeman did not find the body. The body was found by a man called C.W., the confidential witness, who was the first person on the scene.

I have a sworn statement, where I went out to his home with a court reporter and two other Congressmen, from the confidential witness. The FBI questioned him extensively and considers him honest and credible.

"60 Minutes" never talked about him or even mentioned on that program that there was a confidential witness that found the body. "60 Minutes" never read his statement.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], who is the chairman of the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight in the House, told "60 Minutes" that he knows more about this subject than any Member of Congress, and, although I have high regard for Representative CLINGER, he never interviewed the confidential witness, although he had an opportunity to do so, and he never read his sworn deposition, which was verified.

Mike Wallace went into great detail during this interview about how the gun was found in Foster's right hand. He said critics of the investigation incorrectly stated that Foster was left-handed. Well, that misses the point entirely. When the confidential witness discovered the body, he looked very carefully. He was within 18 inches of Mr. Foster's face. He looked very carefully and saw no gun in either hand. He was very clear in his statement, in the sworn statement before me and the FBI, that when he found Foster, both hands were palm up with the thumbs pointed out away from the body. When the police arrived on the scene, they found his right hand palm down with the thumb pointed in, the gun on the trigger finger, and the gun was partially obscured by his hand and his leg.

When the confidential witness found the body, the head was looking straight up, and there were no bloodstains on his cheek. When the police arrived, the head was still pointing up, but there was a contact bloodstain on the cheek and the trails of blood running from his mouth and nostrils down the side of his face.

Now, how did Foster's hand get moved and why was there no gun in it when the man found it, and later there was a gun in it? How did Foster's head get moved? It is obvious to me that somebody was there and moved the body.

Now, the Park Police officer, Officer Fornshill, was not, as I said before, the first to discover the body. It was a confidential witness. Park Police Officer Kevin Fornshill told Mike Wallace that Foster's body could not have been moved to the park because the vegetation around him was not trampled.

But the fact of the matter is the confidential witness said in a sworn statement that the vegetation below the body, from the feet all the way down to a path that went all the way around the park, it was trampled flat. There was a narrow path at the bottom of the berm that winds around the perimeter of the park. "60 Minutes" would have known this if they had read his statement, or even decided to look into it and asked.

The confidential witness told the FBI that he saw a half-empty wine cooler bottle near Foster's body. The Park Police did not find it. What happened to the wine cooler bottle and were there any fingerprints on it? As the confidential witness was leaving the park, he looked inside the white Nissan parked in the lot and saw a half-full package of wine cooler bottles, very similar to the one beside the body, a briefcase, and a suit jacket that looked similar to Foster's suit pants. This was not Foster's car. Foster's car was a gray Honda and it was parked further away, and C.W., the confidential witness, did not walk near it.

Mike Wallace made a big issue out of the amount of blood around the body. He interviewed the medical examiner, who said there was sufficient blood underneath the head and shoulders to conclude that he died at that spot.

This misses the key point. There would have been blood underneath Foster's head, whether he shot himself at the spot or was moved there. The key point is there was no blood spattered on anything behind where Foster was sitting. Anytime someone shoots himself through the mouth, there would be blood splattered all over above him, and there was nothing above him that had any blood on it whatsoever. The vegetation on the path behind Foster was clean.

The first emergency medical services person who arrived at the park, George Gonzalez, commented that it was very unusual for a suicide victim's body to be laid out so neatly, with the feet together and the hands neatly at his side. He told this to the staff of the Committee on Government Operations, and he said: "I find it odd to have the body laid out like it was. I wouldn't expect the hand or body in the position found, the hands perfectly at the side." "60 Minutes," incidentally, did not interview Mr. Gonzalez.

Mike Wallace noted that it was not unusual for Foster's clothes to have carpet fibers on them. Foster's attorney said that Mrs. Foster had just had new carpeting installed in their home. Well, if that is the case, why did the FBI not take carpet samples and match them with the fibers on his clothes? They did not do that.

There were blond hairs on Mr. Foster's body and all over his clothes. Why did the FBI not compare these hairs to the hair of the people Foster knew and was close to?

Here are some other key points that "60 Minutes" left out in their biased reporting.

First, the Park Police investigation was incomplete and unprofessional. The photos of the crime scene were underexposed and did not turn out. The only photos were of very poor quality, and they were made with instamatic cameras.

No search was conducted for any skull fragments. When you blow the top of your head out with a .38 caliber bullet, there are skull fragments and bone fragments all about where the head was. There was none of this, no blood and no brain particles.

No search was conducted for skull fragments, as I said. Only a very cursory search was conducted for the bullet. White House Counsel Bernie Nussbaum refused to allow Park Police officers or the FBI to search Foster's office. In fact, the night of Foster's death, Bernie Nussbaum, the chief counsel of the President, and two other high level White House aides, Patsy Thomason, who was the chief personnel officer, and Mrs. Williams, Hillary Clinton's chief of staff, searched Foster's office and removed files having to do with Whitewater. This was after the Park Police asked that the office be sealed, and it was not sealed for at least 12 hours while they went through and rifled through those papers. Justice Department officials accused Nussbaum of violating an agreement they had reached regarding the search of Foster's office.

Second, the coroner that conducted the autopsy on Foster has made glaring errors in the past. This was not revealed by the "60 Minutes" show. Dr. James Beyer was the coroner who reviewed and did the autopsy on Vince Foster.

Let me tell you about Mr. Beyer. In 1989 there was an autopsy on establishing the death of a man named Tim Easley. Mr. Beyer, the coroner, ruled that Easley killed himself by stabbing himself in the chest. He failed to notice a defensive wound on the man's hand. The case was reopened, and, after an outside expert reviewed the case, Easley's girlfriend confessed to murdering him, after he had been judged a suicide by the coroner. That is one mistake.

In 1991, regarding a Mr. Tommy Burkett, Mr. Beyer did an autopsy on him and ruled that Burkett had killed himself with a gunshot wound to the mouth very similar to Vince Foster's. He said it was a suicide. Mr. Burkett's family had the body exhumed and reexamined by an outside expert. The second coroner reported that Dr. Beyer had failed to notice a disfigured and bloody ear, indicating a struggle, and a broken jaw, indicating he had been hit in the face and his jaw was broken during a struggle. The FBI is now investigating this case. It obviously was a murder or homicide, and not a suicide.

The first special counsel, Robert Fiske, appointed a board of forensic experts to review the Vince Foster case. They concurred in Fiske's opinion that Foster killed himself at Fort Marcy Park. However, they were not appointed until a year after Foster died, and the only way that they could come to the conclusions they did was to read the coroner's report and use that as a guide to come to their conclusions. So they never saw the body, and they verified he was killed at the park. But the fact of the matter is, they could not possibly have known that, because they only used the coroner's report to come to the conclusions they did.

So, in conclusion, last summer, when the Senate Committee on Banking and Financial Services held a hearing on Foster's death, the FBI testified there was absolutely no doubt that Foster killed himself, and that he killed himself at Fort Marcy Park.

Now, let us review the problems and glaring inconsistencies with this investigation.

First, the eyewitness who found the body testified that he is sure there was no gun in Foster's hand and the hands were in a different position than when the police arrived. That was not mentioned on "60 Minutes."

Second, the confidential witness said there were no bloodstains on the face when he found the body. There were bloodstains on the cheek when the police arrived, indicating it had been moved. When they moved his body, his head went over to the side and blood drained out on the face.

Third, the confidential witness testified he saw a wine cooler bottle close to Foster's body in the park, and a package of similar wine cooler bottles in a car in the parking lot that did not belong to Foster. Where did they come from? Where did that bottle go?

Fourth, despite extensive searchers of the park, the FBI has been unable to find the bullet that killed Vince Foster, and they are still looking for it. Evidently the independent counsel sent them back out there 2 or 3 weeks ago to look for it again.

Fifth, no skull fragments were ever found at the site where Foster's body was found, even though there definitely would have been skull fragments from that kind of a wound.

Sixth, there were no fingerprints on the gun. Get this: The gun was in his hand, and there were no fingerprints on the gun. The FBI said they probably, get this, "melted off in the heat." And yet when they took the gun apart, they found fingerprints there from the time the gun was made at the factory.

Seventh, there were no fingerprints on the suicide note found in Foster's briefcase in his White House office. It was torn up into 28 pieces, and the first few times the briefcase was searched, they could not find the note at all, even though they turned it upside down, and there were no fingerprints on it.

Eighth, the coroner who conducted the autopsy of Foster's body has made glaring errors of high profile cases in the past. In one case, a body had to be exhumed and reexamined in order to change the ruling from suicide to murder.

Ninth, security guards working at the Saudi Arabian Ambassador's residence across the street from the park, within 100 yards, 300 feet, with guards outside all day and night, heard no gunshot.

Tenth, Foster's shoes were completely clean, with no grass or dirt stains, even though he was supposed to have walked 700 yards through the park to the second cannon.

No. 11, the FBI never made any attempt to identify the carpet fibers or the blond hair on Foster's clothing.

No. 12, the police photos at the death scene did not turn out, leaving a serious lack of documentation of the death scene.

With all of the glaring problems, can you imagine the FBI telling the Senate Banking Committee there could be no doubt about where and how Foster died? With all of these glaring problems, can you imagine what Johnny Cochran, F. Lee Bailey, and O.J. Simpson's other lawyers would have done in a case like this?

Independent Counsel Starr is still investigating this death. "60 Minutes" should not jump to conclusions until Mr. Starr has completed his investigation, and Members of Congress should not jump to conclusions until Mr. Starr completes his investigation as well.

So I just would like to say to my friends at "60 Minutes," Mr. Wallace, Mr. Hewlitt, and everybody else, before you make the kind of determination that you did and do the kind of reporting that you did 2 weeks ago, please talk to all the people involved, especially eyewitnesses. The man who found the body, who gave a sworn statement under oath to me and to two other Congressmen, was never contacted, never interviewed, and nobody has seen that report, even Mr. CLINGER, who is the chairman of the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight here in the House.

So I just say that I think it was a bad piece of reporting, and I would urge them to be more thorough in the future.

BALANCED BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of May 12, 1995, the gentleman from California [Mr. RIGGS] is recognized for 45 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. RIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take advantage of this momentous occasion to talk with some of my distinguished colleagues a little further on what we did on this floor today.

This vote earlier today on the Seven Year Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995, as far as I am concerned, is not only the defining moment for the 104th Congress, but clearly it is one of the most historic votes in modern memory.

I had the opportunity to preside for a short period of time today in the Speaker's chair over the debate, and, as I was sitting up there, Mr. Speaker, where you are sitting now, I was really struck. I found myself thinking back on my first stint in Congress, since some of my friends and families like to teasingly call me a "retread." But I have served in Congress once before, took a time out, I guess a forced vacation or sabbatical, going through a near-death experience politically, and then won election again to Congress, and had, obviously, the good fortune to come back to Washington as part of our new majority.

As I was sitting up there today I thought back on the debate we had in the 102d Congress, when a group of us, led by the gentleman from Ohio, JOHN KASICH, who is now the chairman of the House Committee on the Budget and the primary architect and sponsor of this Seven Year Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act, attempted to force a debate on this floor on balancing the Federal budget.

As I thought back on that debate, I realized that the terms of the debate back here in Washington have fundamentally changed, and for the better, in my view. I think there is no going back to that time and that tenor in previous Congresses. The debate has changed again because now the debate is framed in terms of what we will do, even if it entails sacrifice on the part of ourselves and our fellow Americans to preserve the American dream for our children, and, frankly, to create a better opportunity, a better future rather for better opportunities for all Americans, particularly for our kids and grandkids.

So back then the debate was cast in terms of why we cannot and will not balance the Federal budget, and today, concluding with this historic vote on final passage for the 7-year Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act, we saw that the debate in the 104th Congress and, as far as I am concerned from here on out, will be cast in terms of how we can and we will and we must balance the Federal budget.

So, Mr. Speaker, things have very much changed. Back then, in that 102d Congress, and what made me think of this is now that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, one of our former colleagues, Senator SANTORUM came over to join us tonight on this floor for the conclusion of the debate and the vote on final passage. Back than I recalled doing special order with him into the wee hours of the night. Now we are a little more civilized, we have a certain time restraint on special orders to allow our hard working staff to get home. But I remember that on that occasion we both took from our wallets, as I am right now, photographs of our families. We both have young children. As I look at mine, mine are much older than then and certainly have grown much bigger, but I really think what we did today is all about our kids and America's children.

Again I am struck by how much the debate has changed back in Washington, and I look forward to talking about these fundamental changes with my colleagues on the House floor tonight during the remaining time for our special order.

Mr. Speaker, at this point in time I want to yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TIAHRT] who can, I think, set the stage for the debate to follow, and then we will go to my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. NORWOOD], and my colleague and very good friend the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HUTCHINSON], who I think has made some major contributions to the budget reconciliation package.

So I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. RIGGS], and I want to set the framework for the rest of our discussion by giving to the audience here in the House Chamber and elsewhere what the marching orders have been for Congress, and they are expressed on this chart here.

This is something that has been driven by the American people. We have had a lot of polling data that has been given to the Congress and it says there are some things they want to see happen over the course of the remainder of this year. Well, top on the list here is balancing the budget in 7 years.

Tonight, Mr. Speaker, I had the honor of voting for a reconciliation package that does balance the budget in 7 years and it passed on a vote of 227 to 203.

We also received from the American public the request to save Medicare from bankruptcy this year. I want to make a comment that there has been some confusion between tax breaks, which we will talk about in a minute, and saving Medicare. The allegation has been that we are taking cuts in Medicare and giving it to our rich friends, but it is really not true. In fact, it is an outright lie. We are increasing. What is going to happen in Medicare, right now the average recipient gets $4,800. By 2002 the average recipient will get $6,700, an increase of $1,900, 43 percent.

There is a provision called a lockbox in the bill that says that any savings go right back towards health care. They do not go towards any kind of tax breaks. So that has been a big misnomer the American public has had to swim through to get to the truth.

Also, as a request from the American public, we are going to reform welfare. That is an important thing to do because we have a system now that is obviously broke. It is anti-family and anti-work. Just since October 1st, in Wichita, Kansas, we had a toddler that was shot in a gang feud. A two-year-old child was sitting in a car seat out in front of a Quick Trip, which is a convenience store; in a gang-related killing this little child was shot. This is evidence of the breakdown of the American family. It is time that we change this system that has been around since the 1960s because it really is broken.

By any yardstick that we use to measure our social climate, whether it be violence or drug abuse or illegitimacy, they have all gotten worse in the last 30 years, and I think their roots are in the current welfare system.

The last thing I want to talk about is providing that tax relief for families and for job creation that is important, and we will expand more on that later, but one more chart I want to talk about before I yield back. This is from Alan Greenspan, the chairman of the Federal Reserve, and it goes back to the very first point we were talking about, balancing the budget.

We need to look at what are the effects of balancing the budget. Congress has been trying to do it for 25 years. They have been unsuccessful until this year. This year we are successful in getting on a glide path to balance the budget by 2002. But what will be the results, according to the chairman of the Federal Reserve? His vision says that children will have a higher standard of living than their parents.

Mr. Speaker, about a year ago there was a poll where about two-thirds of Americans had lost faith in the system. They did not think that their children would have the same or better opportunities than they had. We are going to restore faith in the system. We are going to provide the opportunity for may children and the children in the fourth district of Kansas and across America to have a higher standard of living than their parents.

Improve the purchasing power of incomes. We have seen a real degradation of purchasing power over the last 40 years. We want to reverse that trend by balancing the budget.

A rise in productivity. If we are going to compete on an international basis we must have a rise in productivity.

A reduction in inflation. We have not seen the inflation like we had during the Carter years, but we are right on the verge with a lot of short-term debt that needs refinancing and long-term debt. We have a very big increase in the money supply. We must check that inflation so we have a reduction in inflation.

We are going to strengthen financial markets. Acceleration long-term economic growth and a significant drop in long-term interest rates. According to Alan Greenspan, a balanced budget would reduce the interest rates 2 percent. And in the average house in Wichita, KS, that would cut the payment about $100 a month, over a 30-year mortgage about $36,000 to $38,000. A significant reduction by simply balancing the budget.

So I think we have had a real challenge from the American public. We have seen a significant step tonight with putting the seven-year Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act in place, passed through the House. And as I yield back, I want to say I was very proud to be a part of that and hope that America will see this significant achievement and have hope for the future, because I see that hope.

Mr. RIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's comments and his participation in this special order. He makes, I think, some very significant points, not the least of which, to paraphrase that wonderful and venerable saying, we do not inherit the world from our parents, we borrow it from our children. I think what we are all about tonight, and as a majority party in the Congress, is making a better world for out children.

I really believe, Mr. Speaker, the American people are tired of excuses. As the gentleman from Kansas points out, it has been more than a quarter of a century since Washington last produced a balanced budget. Twenty-five years. And the American people's patience with the excuses, with the Washington gimmicks, has actually worn out.

Last November, and I do not think there is any mistaking the message of last year's election, they demanded an end to ever bigger Government, ever increasing taxes and endless deficits as far as the eye can see. They voted for smaller government, lower taxes, and a balanced budget, and that is the clear message to the Republican Congress.

After 10 months, Mr. Speaker, of frankly fighting the entrenched opposition of the defenders of the status quo, for the most part the Democratic minority, which has refused to acknowledge at least what the leader of their party, President Clinton, has recently acknowledged, and that is we must get on with task of balancing the budget. Despite all the obstacles we have encountered, we are able to report to the American people tonight mission accomplished.

So as the gentleman points out, for the discussion that will follow, we have produced today in this historic legislation the first balanced budget in 25 years, which includes a plan passed last week on the House floor as a separate freestanding bill and then incorporated into the legislation on the floor today, a plan to preserve, protect and strengthen Medicare which still allows Medicare spending.

As the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE] finally admitted a little earlier this evening in his special order, we still allow Medicare spending to increase for every senior every year. As the gentleman from Kansas points out, we have a genuine welfare reform proposal that emphasizes work, families and hope for the future. And, last, but certainly not least, in terms of importance, tax cuts to counter, and let us be honest about this, the huge Clinton Democratic tax increase in the last Congress, but tax cuts to strengthen families and to stimulate economic growth and job creation in the private sector, which gives us most of our new living wage jobs.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I want to yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. NORWOOD].

Mr. NORWOOD. I thank my friend from California for yielding, and let me say to the gentlemen, Mr. HUTCHINSON from Arkansas, and Mr. TIAHRT from Kansas, that I am very pleased to share this hour with them. I think it is fortunate that we represent the whole southern end of the United States so that people can know that this is not just a Georgia thing and this is not just an Arkansas thing, this is a movement that we see in our country.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate for us to recognize how fortunate we are to have such a wonderful speaker pro tempore tonight, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LATHAM]. We are privileged to be here with you, sir.

I also want to point out that I would rather be watching the Braves game, the Atlanta Braves are going to finish that series tonight, and I am sorry I will not be there, but today is such an historic day that I wanted us to have a little time tonight to talk about the truth again, because, generally, we have to come in an hour early to hear the misrepresentations and the half truths so we know really what to say to the American people in order to correct their misinformation.

It was interesting to me tonight, Mr. RIGGS, to watch the minority leader, Mr. GEPHARDT, and the fact that he was actually stunned that this body was going to balance the budget. He seemed in disbelief that after 25 years we were actually going to balance the budget. I think for me tonight I was a little stunned, too. I cannot imagine this body having an hour debate where the debate is what is the best way to balance the budget.

Do Members know we actually did that tonight? We had another group that thought we should do it a little different way, but the idea was that we have to balance our budget for our children and our grandchildren.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to speak a little bit to why we are dealing with the problem.What really caused this reconciliation package for a balanced budget over 7 years. We in this country, maybe not us, maybe our children and maybe our grandchildren, are in debt $5 trillion. That is a fact. My 2-year-old grandson owes $187,000 on his portion of the interest on the debt. If we continue to follow the lead of Mr. GEPHARDT, we would borrow another trillion over the next 4 years, get into the 21st century and start borrowing a trillion every 3 years, and next year we would pay more for the interest on the debt than we actually spend on defense and where would it end?

I think it is pretty clear if we continue to follow the Gephardt plan that we are going to end up bankrupt. We are going to end up a mess in this country with a standard of living that none of us want for our children.

Mr. Speaker, there is another option. We can follow the lead of the great South American economies and we can start printing a lot of money. Well, we all know what happens there. Our economy goes to ruin. A third option for us might have been to follow the President's lead and continue to do what we are doing and spend whatever we want to spend with no prioritizing, just spend it if we like it, and we could get into the 21st century and our children would be paying 85 cents out of every dollar they earn just for taxes, just to keep this country afloat.

Now, it is my personal opinion, my children are doing enough. My father paid $1 out of every $50 he earned in Federal taxes. My son is paying $1 out of every $4 he earns. They are doing enough.

Our only alternative, then, was to do what the people I know in the 10th District of Georgia said do. They said for us to balance this budget by cutting spending. And in addition to that, they said, we do not like the 103d Congress' and Mr. Clinton's $260 billion tax increase. And if my colleagues do not believe they did not like it, look around this body sometime and look at all the new faces. The American people said we do not want the tax increase.

Now, what I think we are trying to do is exactly what my people at home said do. First, give them their money back. I do not think of this as a tax cut; I think of this as a tax return. We are giving $245 billion back out of the $260 billion.

Now, we start doing what they told me to do. Start by cutting the spending. That is precisely what this reconciliation has done. As we talk about more details of our tax return and details of this great Medicare Program, Mr. TIAHRT and I talked about it the other night. I cannot wait for us to get home and start talking to our seniors and give them the details.

Mr. RIGGS, I will yield back in hopes that we will come back and talk more about Medicare.

Mr. RIGGS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia is very distinguished in his professional life. I guess he could call it his "real life." His professional career. He is one of a handful of medical doctors who joined the 104th Congress. He is a dentist by profession and obviously very knowledgeable about the issue of health care.

I know that he has worked hard on the Medicare Preservation Act portion of the budget reconciliation bill. So, I would like the gentleman from Georgia to review for us, briefly if he could, what we were able to accomplish last week when we passed the Medicare Preservation Act on this House floor, and why it was included in the budget reconciliation.

Mr. NORWOOD. First of all, I do not think any American would disagree with us on the point that Medicare part A was going bankrupt. If my mother-in-law was to have Medicare in the year 2002, we had to act. We could not hide behind a rock; we could not wait until the next election; we needed to deal with the problem today. That is exactly what we have done, and I am very, very pleased with the outcome.

I think we have managed to do some very good things for the patients, if you will. That is how I tend to think about people. But the patients in Medicare are going to be much better off.

First thing, we are going to increase the spending greatly. I know, 40 percent; I get new numbers saying up to 50 percent. But the spending over 7 years is going to increase greatly.

Mr. Speaker, I will use the same tired numbers. We are now spending $4,800 per recipient. In the year 2002, we are going to be spending $6,700 per recipient. I know in Washington that is a cut, but in the 10th District of Georgia, that is a $1,900 increase.

Mr. RIGGS. If the gentleman would yield for me to interject, those figures are actually higher in high-growth States like California. The increase in California is roughly from $5,000 per Medicare beneficiary today to $8,000 per Medicare beneficiary in the year 2002.

Our Medicare Preservation Act anticipates that we will spend an aggregate of $50,000 per Medicare beneficiary in California over the next 7 years.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. NORWOOD. If I could, I want to hurry and bring this up. My mother-in-law may be watching. One of the things that is so great about the Medicare plan is the options. The patients are going to have the same options that we have as Congressmen. They are not going to have to have one-size-fits-all. They are going to look at a number of alternatives and they are going to pick the option that is best for that family. A 65-year-old is going to take a different option than an 85-year-old, but the point is, they will have options.

Quickly, let me say, Medicare recipients do not have to do anything. If they want to stay in Medicare exactly as it is today, all they have to do is stay there. They do not even have to make a phone call. If they like part A and part B and Medigap and that suits them and they are happy with their doc, they can stay put.

There is no increase in the copayments; there is no increase in the deductibles. It is exactly like it is. We are not changing anything for anybody.

Now, having said that, Mother-in-law, I want to look at some of the other great options, because there are new ways to have health care. We are going to have provider service networks. Listen, I have been in health care. That is going to be great. The doctors are going to come together. The hospitals are going to come together. They are going to have efficiencies. They are going to work at getting the costs down and not have to worry about the Federal Trade Commission putting them in jail.

Mr. Speaker, that is what has been holding the price up, partly, in health care. The Federal Trade Commission would not dare let two of our hospitals come together and share a CAT scan. Lord knows, that is cheating.

Mr. RIGGS. And that is the antitrust reforms we made.

Mr. NORWOOD. Antitrust reforms are very important in that bill.

Another option for patients will be to try managed care. That is going to be the right thing for certain people. It might not be right for everybody, but recipients can get into these programs for the first 2 years and if they do not like it in 30 days, go back. Try them all. Try even one of them. See what is best for your family.

Medical savings accounts will be terrific. Not for every patient. Not for every person. But they are going to be very good for many families to choose the medical savings account where they simply get a cash rebate from the Government. Rather than them paying a recipient's Medicare bills, the recipient will put that money in the bank and draw interest on it and no tax on it. They will have a catastrophic insurance plan and they even choose the amount of their deductible; $3,000, $5,000. It is a terrific bill.

Mr. RIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the comments of the gentleman from Georgia who is one of the leading architects of the Medicare reforms that are contained in the bill.

Now, if the gentleman would not mind, I want to turn to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HUTCHINSON]. We are also joined by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHRYSLER].

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HUTCHINSON] is one of the principal movers and shakers in the House of Representatives for real reform of the American welfare system; one of the chief architects of the welfare reform provisions contained in the Seven-year Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHRYSLER] is the leading proponent of the section in the budget reconciliation bill which effectively will abolish the Department of Commerce and at least partially address the criticism from some of our political opponents and other skeptics and pundits across the land who believe that we are not willing to tackle in an earnest fashion the whole issue of corporate subsidies.

Let me turn first to the gentleman from Arkansas and then next to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join my friend and colleague on a truly historic and monumental night. I have admired the gentleman's contribution for many years back when he was in the gang of seven in his first round in Congress, and I think he had a great deal to do with bringing this day and making it a reality.

Mr. Speaker, I first got into public life and ran for public office back in 1984. We had a business and I have been involved in education. People asked me, "Why would you get into politics and go into the State legislature?" I served 8 years in the Arkansas State Legislature with Bill Clinton as the Governor.

My answer was very simple. I had one motivation. I had three boys who at that time were pretty young. I had twins who were 12-years-old at the time and I had an 8-year-old. I looked at where our country was headed and even then 12 years ago at the kind of debt that we were accumulating in this country and the burden that we were placing upon them. I wanted to be able to look them in their eyes and say, "You guys, the Nation that I am leaving you, the heritage that I am leaving you may not be what I wanted it to be, but I did what I could to reverse that."

Mr. Speaker, here a dozen years later it is so gratifying to know that all across this country there were people who were feeling that same way and who took the step to get into public life and who have made this day a reality.

For the first time in 25 years, we passed a reconciliation bill that leads us to a balanced budget in the year 2002. I suppose if it had been easier, there would have been a Congress that would have done it before. It has taken courage and there were some choppy waters out there, but today we cast the right vote.

In the midst of all the debate and statistics and rhetoric today, I am afraid it could be easy to forget that the real winners in this vote today, the real winner is the American family. And that is the purpose of this, and I appreciate the gentleman from California [Mr. RIGGS] for organizing this special order to remind us that the real victors today were the families.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TIAHRT] a moment ago had the chart up, the marching orders for Congress: Balanced budget, tax relief, welfare reform, and Medicare reform. When we really look at those issues, they come right back to the American family. There is nothing more that we could do for the American family than balance the budget.

My district director has a 2-year-old little girl, Abby Deatherage, and we have all fallen in love with her. When Abby was born 2 years ago, she inherited $18,000 worth of debt and she is going to pay $187,000 over her lifetime just to pay her part of the interest on the national debt, and it has gotten worse every day.

Mr. Speaker, we finally have started to change that with this historic vote today.

Mr. RIGGS. If I may interject for a moment, that will be taxes that she will pay over the course of her lifetime as a wage earner and taxpayer just in interest on the national debt for no productive purpose. This is money that otherwise could have gone perhaps for college education, home purchase, health care, but instead it will go just to pay interest on the national debt at the present rate.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. That is her paying for our luxuries and what we wanted to consume during our generation.

Let me illustrate it a different way. It is not a partisan issue. There was a bipartisan commission on entitlements. It was chaired by Democrat Senator KERRY, and it made this observation. In just 17 years, the year 2012, Federal mandatory spending, that is entitlements, plus interest, that is mandatory spending, entitlements plus interest, will consume all of the total amount of revenues collected.

Not a penny for roads; not a penny for courts; not a penny for Head Start; not a penny for drug enforcement; not a penny for the FBI, national defense, and on and on we go. All of it consumed on entitlements and on interest.

Mr. RIGGS. And that is the course we were on until today.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Until today.

Mr. NORWOOD. Let me ask a question about that. Had we not changed things, I can expect that the likely solution would well have been to raise taxes until we get up to the President's number of 85 cents out of every dollar, leaving our children to live on 15 cents of every dollar.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. My colleague is exactly right. The liberal solution has always been raise taxes. But the interesting thing is that the Joint Economic Committee that produced a report in 1992 demonstrated that during the last 40 years, every time Congress raised taxes $1, they increased spending $1.59, which I think is the clearest evidence that raising taxes is not the solution to deficit spending. Rather, it is to control spending and that is what this Congress took a big step toward today.

Ronald Reagan said, "Never give a big spender a bigger allowance." That is what we have been doing for too long.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about tax relief. Back in my district, there are some awfully patriotic people. They say, We would like to have a tax cut, but why cut taxes if this is the time to balance the budget?

I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. NORWOOD] said it well. He explained the situation that we face appropriately. They deserve a dividend out of the savings that we are generating. The tough choices that we have made, they deserve to get a dividend on that.

There is nothing I have worked harder on than this $500-per-child tax credit. My Senate colleague from Minnesota, ROD GRAMS, and I worked very hard to get it into the Republican budget 2 years ago when the Republican budget did not seem anything more than a symbolic gesture. It became part of the Contract With America, and now it is passed today.

In 1948, the average family paid 3 percent of its income to Uncle Sam and today that same family pays 24.5 percent. When we combine it with State taxes, local taxes, the cost of government regulation, the average family pays 52 percent of its income to the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, that is more than they pay for clothing; more than they pay for food; more than they pay for recreation; more than they pay for health care. All of those things combined, they are paying more to the Federal Government in taxes.

Then they say, "You are cutting Medicare so that you can give breaks to the wealthy." Who are we really giving relief to? That $500-per-child tax credit will benefit most the middle-class working person who has seen his lifestyle squeezed over the years. If he makes $30,000 and they have two children, that couple is going to see their Federal taxes cut in half.

If they make $25,000 a year, two children, that $500 per child tax credit will mean that they owe nothing.

Mr. NORWOOD. They do not pay any taxes.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Those are not rich people. They will not owe anything at that wage level.

Mr. NORWOOD. It depends on who defines rich. I notice some on the other side say anybody who has a job is rich. A family of four making $25,000 a year is not rich. You mean to tell me they will not have to pay any? All of their tax liability goes away?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. That will be the effect.

Mr. NORWOOD. What a great move.

Mr. RIGGS. That family of four effectively gets a $1,000 tax break each and every year until those two children turn 18, and I believe the estimate was that the $500 per child tax credit will completely eliminate the Federal tax liability for something like 4.7 million American families with incomes below $25,000 a year.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. They are suddenly going to discover, when this becomes a reality next year, that they are the rich people that people said we were cutting taxes for.

I might point out, I want to commend the gentleman from California [Mr. RIGGS] for his efforts on insuring that the earned income tax credit for even lower-income working Americans, those making $12,000 to $20,000, to insure that this budget reconciliation will make them a winner as well, that there will be no working Americans with children who will be net losers because of this budget reconciliation bill. I think that is very important. We want to reward working Americans and working American families. That is what this budget reconciliation can do. The issue is who can spend it better.

For years, for a generation now, we have confiscated the taxes, the wages of hard-working Americans, brought that money to Washington; we in our wisdom in the Washington-knows-best mentality decided where it should go, sent it back to them in the form of entitlements after we took out a huge surcharge back in Washington.

Back in Arkansas, we kind of have the notion God made the family to be the primary caretaker of their children, not the government, and that the moms and dads of middle America will know better how to use that money for the benefit of their children and their families than bureaucrats in Washington, DC.

Mr. NORWOOD. Just for a second, you mentioned the earned income tax credit, and you know and I know we have heard so much unbelievable rhetoric about that.

Do you know that this 7-year reconciliation balanced budget bill increases that by 35 percent? "Increase" in Georgia, that means going up, you know, 35 percent more for the earned income tax credit.

Mr. RIGGS. Likewise, we increase spending, of course, on Medicare, Medicaid, and the welfare program, although at a slower rate than the present course.

So I thank the gentleman from Arkansas very much for his contribution, and I was really remiss. I introduced him as one of the leading architects of welfare reform in the House of Representatives. He is certainly that. But he is also the chief proponent of the $500 per child tax credit going back to the last Congress in his first term in Congress. I want to thank the gentleman for what he has done to provide much-needed tax relief for American families.

I want to turn to the gentleman from Michigan, who, as I mentioned earlier, was the chief proponent, or is the chief proponent, of our plans for reinventing the Federal Government by beginning with the elimination of the Commerce Department.

I also want to signal to my colleagues that we have a little bit less than 15 minutes remaining on our special order.

I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CHRYSLER. I thank the gentleman. It is good to be here joining you at this moment, certainly a moment of history when this Congress has passed Medicare reform, welfare reform, balanced budget, certainly the dismantling of the Commerce Department, which is near and dear to my heart, but also tax cuts.

You know, I would like to take a minute, and my colleague from Arkansas, you know, I think you hit it right on the head. The Republican Party is the party for people that work. That is really what we are saying here. You know, when you talk about these tax cuts, the only people that say that they do not want a tax cut are people that can afford it. But people that work, they are the ones that really want it. You know what this thing is all about, and the Democrats know what this is all about, they are railing against this tax cut.

I mean, it was, first of all, school lunches. We heard that back in May, school lunches; we were eliminating the School Lunch Program, we were taking the food out of the children's mouths. But guess what happened in August, a school year started, and we have not heard one story or one comment from anyone about one child in this country that did not get their school lunches. Is that not amazing?

I think it speaks volumes about the rhetoric we heard today, and what we are trying to do to balance this budget, what that really means is instead of spending $3 trillion more than what we are spending today over the next 7 years, we are going to spend $2 trillion more than what we are spending today over the next 7 years. The Democrats know that. They know we are increasing spending. The only way to get to a balanced budget in 7 years is to increase the growth of revenue, and the only way to increase the growth of revenue is to have these tax cuts.

You know, it is not money the Federal Government has that we are going to say we are going to give you some money back. It is money that we are saying to people out there, keep it, do not send it in, you will make a better decision about spending it. The Democrats know it. They know that we need those tax cuts. All of us in this country need those tax cuts in order to get this balanced budget, and we need to make sure, as we did tonight, as the Senate will do tomorrow, that there will be $245 billion worth of tax cuts in this.

There also is certainly a provision in this thing that says we have to have the spending cuts first, and they have to be certified before the tax cuts kick in. I think it is important for the American people to know that.

Mr. RIGGS. Is that the lockbox language?

Mr. CHRYSLER. I was going to say, set up the lockbox provision, that says that when we eliminate a program, those savings go to eliminating the debt which is other than the deficit. So we have set up a number of things.

Mr. RIGGS. Just on that one point, to make sure I clearly understand what the gentleman is saying, the gentleman is saying our 7-year balanced budget plan has to be certified as getting us to a balanced budget, and perhaps even generating a budget surplus, an unheard-of idea in this town, but a budget surplus, a balanced budget and a budget surplus by the year 2002 before any tax cuts can take effect.

Mr. CHRYSLER. That is exactly right. Now, the American people need to know that, because there is a lot of demagoguery going on about this, and it is amazing to me, the American people need to know that this is not the Government's money. This is their money. All of us. We are the taxpayers. We are the government, in fact, and most Americans, it is a strange phenomenon, but most Americans think the money withheld from their paycheck is not even their money, and, you know, it is the single largest expenditure they make, as the gentleman said, higher than the car that they buy, higher the clothes and the food they put on their tables, the clothes they put on their backs. This is a tremendous expenditure on the part of the American taxpayers. It is their money. It is not government. We are not cutting taxes. We are just letting people keep more of what they earn and save, and we need a little less government. We need lower taxes. We need to let people make their own decisions about how they spend their money and not government, because we need to preserve the opportunity, certainly that all of us have had in our lifetimes, for our kids because when it is their turn, they deserve the same opportunity that we have had.

That is what this is all about.

Mr. RIGGS. I appreciate the gentleman's comments. Very eloquent. The gentleman made a crucial point. The gentleman actually made the point that by allowing people to keep more of what they make, more of their hard-earned money, we actually create an incentive for average Americans to plan and save for their own retirement, which helps reduce the strain on the entitlement programs. I think that is a crucial point.

Mr. CHRYSLER. When we let people keep more of what they earn and save, we let them make their own decisions how they spend it, they are always going to make the better decisions. They are going to go out and buy something. When they buy something, somebody has to build that something. When somebody builds something, they are earning a wage and paying taxes. That is how you create revenue for the government.

Mrs. MYRICK. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Michigan makes a very good point, you know, when you talk about government funds, and it is really our money and the taxpayers' money. Have we ever considered the fact that why do we not just talk about, instead of saying government funds, taxpayers' funds or taxpayers' money every time that we mention it? Because really and truly there is a mentality up here that says, "Oh, it is the government's money," and so the American people really do not have the benefit of the thinking to realize that we are here to say, hey, wait a minute, this is your money, and we want to give it back to you. Just a thought.

Mr. CHRYSLER. It is a very good thought. Certainly, you know, we all need to understand that we have got to talk in language the American people understand. We talk about Medicaid and Medicare. The average American out there does not understand the difference. This Medi Grant Program is much clearer than Medicaid, and certainly things like Most Favored Nation status for China should be called normalizing trade relations. Community Reinvestment Act should be called high-risk lending because that is exactly what it is. When the American citizens, the American taxpayers, can understand what we are talking about in clear and concise language, then they will feel more a part of the government and there will be more respect for it.

Mr. RIGGS. I look forward to doing further special orders with my colleagues. I know, with the frantic pace we have been keeping in this Congress, we will be on next week on to other matters. Really I think we hopefully will at least periodically pause and reflect on what we have done here today. We ;still have a ways to go. Obviously, we will have to work out any differences between the House and Senate versions of this balanced budget reconciliation bill. Then we have to see what the President does, the one remaining obstacle to the critical reforms we discussed here tonight. I am committed to coming back here and reinforcing our actions and making sure we convey our message to the American people because again this is by far and away the most momentous and historic vote in any Congress in modern times.

I want to go very quickly to may colleagues to give them an opportunity to make some closing remarks.

Mr. TIAHRT. As we close, I want to say the 7-year Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act is for Gene and Kathy Ewert, who have Tia, Trevor, and Katie. It is a $500 tax break for each one of those. That will cover several months; rent. For David and Kay Walker, who have three sons, Caton, Daniel, and Body, that will be $500 for each of those boys, and that will cover several months of house payments, and it is very important to David because he is on strike right now.

So this tax package that we have in the 7-year Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act is for families, and I am excited about that, and I am happy that we can still balance the budget, get the workings of government going and take care of families here in America.

Mr. RIGGS. I thank the gentleman for his comments and participation.

Mr. NORWOOD. In closing, I will make three quick little points. No. 1, I would like to thank the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HUTCHINSON] on behalf of my 29-year-old son and two of the most beautiful children you have ever seen for the $500 tax credit. I know that it is going to the right place for the right people.

I think it is very important that we say to the American people, because I know it drives me crazy when they talk about tax cuts for the wealthy, when 90 percent of these tax returns that we are going to give people back are for families with incomes of $75,000 or less, and 75 percent of the capital gains that we are going to return to people go to families with $50,000 or less.

In conclusion, I want to talk about a lady back in my district. I will not talk about her name, but I think it points out what this tax cut, tax return bill does as much as anything. She is a single parent with two children, and she makes $17,500 a year. Under our present system, she gets back each year $939, under the current tax rate, and the earned income tax credit. Under our plan that we passed today, that family will get back $2,214. That is $1,275 more for a low-income working single mom than she would get under the current law.

Mr. RIGGS. I thank all of my colleagues again. I thank the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Michigan.

(e) RESIDENTIAL EXCHANGE.—Notwithstanding the establishment, confirmation and approval of rates pursuant to 16 U.S.C. 839e, and notwithstanding the provisions of 16 U.S.C. 839c(c), the cost benefits of eligible utilities' total purchase and exchange sales under 16 U.S.C. 839c(c)(1) shall be $145,000,000 for Fiscal Year 1997, and the net benefits paid to each eligible electric utility shall be $145,000,000 multiplied by the percentage of the total of such net benefits paid by the Administrator to such utility for Fiscal Year 1995.

(f) PERSONNEL FLEXIBILITY.—The Administrator may offer employees voluntary separation incentives as deemed necessary which shall not exceed $25,000. Recipients who accept employment with the United States within five years after separation shall repay the entire amount to the Bonneville Power Administration.

(g) SAVINGS.—Unless superseded by an Act of Congress, the authority provided by this section is expressly intended to extend beyond the fiscal year.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1905) making appropriations for energy and water development for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1996, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effects of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The language and allocations set forth in House Report 104–149 and Senate Report 104–120 should be complied with unless specifically addressed to the contrary in the conference report and statement of the managers. Report language included by the House which is not changed by the report of the Senate or the conference, and Senate report language which is not changed by the conference is approved by the committee of conference. In cases in which the House or Senate have directed the submission of a report, such report is to be submitted to both House and Senate Committees on Appropriations.

TITLE I

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE—CIVIL

The summary tables at the end of this title set forth the conference agreement with respect to the individual appropriations, programs and activates of the Corps of Engineers. Additional items of conference agreement are discussed below.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY

CORPS OF ENGINEERS—CIVIL

GENERAL INVESTIGATIONS

Amendment No. 1: Appropriates $121,767,000 for General Investigations instead of $129,906,000 as proposed by the House and $126,323,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees are aware that there is existing authority for the Corps of Engineers to maintain the Dog River in Alabama from the Mobile Harbor Ship Channel to 2,600 feet west of the Alabama Highway 163 bridge. The river has severe siltation west of that point and is not navigable during low tide. From within available funds, the Corps of Engineers is directed to use $200,000 to initiate a reconnaissance study of that portion of the Dog River.

The conference agreement includes $150,000 for the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway, Palm Beach County, Florida, project. Using these funds, the Corps of Engineers is directed to perform a reevaluation study of the authorized navigation improvements along the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway in Palm Beach County.

The conference agreement includes $6,205,000 for the Upper Mississippi River and Illinois Waterway study, the same as the budget request. The purpose of this study is to address the need for navigation capacity expansion on the Upper Mississippi River and Illinois Waterway. The conferees believe that the environmental component of the study should be limited to any impacts associated with expanding the capacity of the two systems. Therefore, the conferees direct the Corps of Engineers to not expand the scope of the study such that its total cost exceeds that presented in the current Project Management Plan. In addition, because of the need for a timely review of future navigation needs on the upper Mississippi River and Illinois Waterway, the conferees direct the Corps to expedite work on the study and ensure that the Division Engineer's public notice on the feasibility report is issued no later than December of 1999.

The Secretary of the Army is directed to initiate a general reevaluation report for the Truckee Meadows Flood Control project, Nevada, authorized in the Water Resources Development Act of 1988. Of the $400,000 provided in the conference agreement for the Lower Truckee River, Nevada, project, $50,000 is appropriated for this investigation. The report will consider additional flood protection at and below Reno, Nevada, through levee/channel improvements, local impoundments, and potential reoperation of existing reservoirs in the watershed. The report will also consider the potential for environmental restoration along the Truckee River and tributaries in the Reno-Sparks area.

The conference agreement includes $600,000 for the Corps of Engineers, in cooperation with the Bureau of Reclamation, to continue the feasibility study for lake stabilization in the Devils Lake Basin of North Dakota as described in Public Law 102–377. The conferees expect the Corps of Engineers to expedite planning for emergency mitigation measures including emergency outlet options to the Sheyenne River, upper basin storage, and enhanced diking. The Corps of Engineers shall make its recommendations to the Congress for upper basin storage and enhanced diking by March 1, 1996, and shall report on the status of the lake stabilization study by September 30, 1996.

The conference agreement includes $559,000 for the Army Corps of Engineers to continue preconstruction engineering and design for the Noyo Harbor Breakwater, California, project. The conferees are aware of a proposal to utilize prefabricated steel structures in lieu of a stone breakwater, at considerably less cost than the $22,900,000 now projected. Furthermore, the structures can be fitted to generate electricity. The potential for reduced construction costs, together with the ancillary benefit of wave power generation, would facilitate local cost sharing. The conferees, therefore, direct that the funds be utilized for efforts to validate the viability of using these structures to serve as breakwaters, including modeling.

The conference agreement includes the following amounts for Coordination Studies With Other Agencies: Cooperation With Other Agencies, $480,000; Section 22 Planning Assistance to States, $2,000,000; Special Investigations, $3,400,000; Gulf of Mexico Program, $300,000; Interagency Water Resources Development, $1,000,000; National Estuary Program, $180,000; North American Waterfowl Management Plan, $180,000; and $380,000 for the Pacific Northwest Forest Case Study as described in the Senate Report.

Within the funds available for the Flood Plain Management Services Program, the conferees have provided $100,000 for a study along the Jacks Defeat Creek watershed in Monroe County, Indiana.

The conference agreement includes $30,432,000 for Corps of Engineers research and development activities. Included in this total is $23,732,000 for the Corps' base research and development program; $1,900,000 for evaluation of environmental investments; $2,000,000 for earthquake engineering; $1,000,000 for zebra mussel control; $1,500,000 for the characterization and restoration of wetlands; and $300,000 for the continuation of the Construction Technology Transfer Project between the Corps of Engineers' research institutions and Indiana State University.

Amendment No. 2: The conference agreement includes language providing $375,000 for the Norco Bluffs, California, project, as provided for in the House and Senate bills; restores House language stricken by the Senate for the Ohio River Greenway, Indiana, project amended to provide $500,000 instead of $1,000,000 as proposed by the House; includes language proposed by the Senate for the Kentucky Lock and Dam, Kentucky, project amended to provide $2,000,000 instead of $2,500,000 as proposed by the Senate; restores House language stricken by the Senate providing $300,000 for the Mussers Dam, Pennsylvania, project; and includes language proposed by the Senate providing $300,000 for the West Virginia Port Development, West Virginia, project. The conference agreement also deletes language contained in the House and Senate bills providing funds for the Indianapolis Central Waterfront, Indiana, project. Funding for this project has been included under Construction, General.

The conference agreement also includes language for a watershed study in the vicinity of Hazard, Kentucky, using previously appropriated funds. The Corps of Engineers is directed to prepare a reconnaissance level study addressing flood control, water supply and water quality needs as well as opportunities for environmental restoration in the Upper Kentucky River basin. In particular, the Corps is directed to evaluate the potential to reallocate excess storage in existing Corps lakes and alternatives thereto, for the purpose of providing additional water supply capability to meet expanding regional needs.

CONSTRUCTION, GENERAL

Amendment No. 3: Appropriates $804,573,000 for Construction, General instead of $807,846,000 as proposed by the House and $778,456,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees understand that the Acting Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works determined on September 1, 1995, that the Army Corps of Engineers will cost share the project for design deficiency correction of the Klamath-Glen Levee in Del Norte County, California, under the same financial terms as the original construction. This is in accordance with the technical conclusions of the Initial Appraisal Report of the San Francisco District Engineer, entitled "Terwer Creek Erosion, Klamath-Glen Levee, Klamath River, Del Norte County, California", March 1994. In view of this determination, and so that the necessary repairs can begin as quickly as possible, the Secretary of the Army is directed to utilize funds appropriated in this or prior appropriations Acts for the project.

The Corps of Engineers may allocate up to $150,000 of the funds provided for the Central and Southern Florida Project Review Study or from other sources, for the purpose of initiating a study to determine whether the construction of a wastewater reuse facility in Dade County, Florida, should be incorporated within the overall project authorization upon receipt of necessary approval. Such reuse facility would be intended to increase the supply of surface water to the Everglades system and Everglades National Park, in turn benefiting recreation and enhancing fish and wildlife.

The conference agreement includes $78,800,000 for the Columbia River Juvenile Fish Mitigation, Washington and Oregon, program as proposed by the Senate instead of $68,800,000 as proposed by the House. Of the funds provided, $1,000,000 is available for advanced planning and design for public and private facilities affected by the operation of the John Day project at minimum pool levels. The conferees share the concern of both the Senate and the House regarding the costs and justification for the John Day drawdown as an effective method for salmon recovery. To date, the conferees have not been provided with any scientific evidence supporting the drawdown; therefore, the Administration is directed to provide scientific justification of the project as an effective means of salmon recovery along with any further requests for funding. Considering the extraordinary cost of completing this project, if the Administration does not find significant benefits, the proposal should be abandoned altogether. The conferees also note that the mitigation necessary to lower John Day Reservoir to minimum operating pool will require specific authorization from Congress.

The conferees understand that rapid and substantial improvement in fish passage in the Federal Columbia River power system is a high priority. Accordingly, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to independently evaluate annually the performance of the Corps of Engineers in achieving improvements in fish passage and to provide these evaluations to the Committees on Appropriations. The conferees further direct the Corps and the Bonneville Power Administration, in consultation with the National Marine Fisheries Service, to develop a set of recommendations for improving the system by which fish passage improvements are designed, tested and implemented at the Federal projects. These improvements should seek to shorten the time requirements, reduce the costs, and improve the biological success of fish passage projects. The Corps and BPA should submit these recommendations to the Committees on Appropriations within six months of enactment of this Act and should proceed to implement immediately reforms for which they have the authority.

The Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, is directed to design and construct a Regional Visitors Center in the vicinity of Shreveport, Louisiana, to provide information to the public on the Red River Basin, national and local water resources development of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, and the Red River Waterway Project. The Regional Visitors Center is to be constructed using funds appropriated for construction of the Red River Waterway Project, and will be operated and maintained using funds appropriated for operation and maintenance of the waterway.

The conferees wish to emphasize their continued support for the Corps of Engineers Continuing Authorities Programs. These programs, which require only modest amounts of budgetary resources, have proven to be of great value and are particularly important to many small communities throughout the Nation. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, to continue the planning, engineering, and design of projects under all of the continuing authorities programs whether or not they will be approved for construction by the end of fiscal year 1996, initiate new projects under normal procedures for the continuing authorities programs, and continue budgeting these programs in fiscal year 1997 and beyond.

For the Emergency Streambank and Erosion Control (Section 14) program, the conferees direct the Corps of Engineers to undertake the projects identified in the House Report. In addition, the conference agreement includes $242,000 for the project to provide erosion protection for the Russell-Allison Levee along the Wabash River in Lawrence County, Illinois, and $325,000 for repair of the Ohio River levee in Marietta, Ohio. For the Small Flood Control Projects (Section 205) program, the conferees direct the Corps of Engineers to undertake the projects identified in the House and Senate Reports. In addition, the conference agreement including $200,000 for the Corps of Engineers to initiate and complete a feasibility study to control flooding at the town of Sumava Resorts, Indiana, and $65,000 for a feasibility study of the Bellepoint floodwall, Frankfort, Kentucky, project. For the Small Beach Erosion Control (Section 103) program, the conferees direct the Corps of Engineers to undertake the Aqua Hedionda Lagoon project in Carlsbad, California, as described in the House Report. For the Project Modifications for the Improvement of the Environment (Section 1135) program, the conference agreement includes funds for the projects identified in the House Report and also includes $100,000 for the St. Paul Harbor, Alaska, project and $370,000 for the Valdez Harbor, Alaska, project. For the Small Navigation Projects (Section 107) program, the conference agreement includes $1,000,000 for the Ouizinkie Harbor, Alaska, project, $500,000 for the Larsen Bay Harbor, Alaska, project, $200,000 for the Williamsburg, Alaska project, and $250,000 for the Tatitlik Harbor, Alaska, project.

Amendment No. 4: The conference agreement includes language in the bill for the following projects, which were funded at the same level in the House and Senate bills:

Sacramento River Flood Control Project (Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District), California ($300,000); Harlan, Kentucky ($12,000,000); Williamsburg, Kentucky ($4,100,000); Middlesboro, Kentucky ($1,600,000); Salyersville, Kentucky ($500,000); Glen Foerd, Pennsylvania ($200,000); Wallisville, Texas ($5,000,000); and Red River Emergency Bank Protection, Arkansas and Louisiana ($6,600,000).

The conference agreement restores House language stricken by the Senate providing funds for the San Timoteo Creek feature of the Santa Ana River Mainstem, California, project ($5,000,000), and the Indiana Shoreline Erosion, Indiana, project, ($1,500,000).

The conference agreement provides $13,348,000 for the Lake Pontchartrain and Vicinity (Hurricane Protection), Louisiana, project instead of $11,848,000 as proposed by the House and $11,838,000 as proposed by the Senate, provides $2,500,000 for the Red River below Denison Dam, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas, project instead of $3,800,000 as proposed by the House and $2,000,000 as proposed by the Senate; and provides $4,100,000 for the Broad Top Region, Pennsylvania, project as proposed by the House instead of $2,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement includes language proposed by the Senate which provides $3,800,000 for repair and extension of the Homer Spit, Alaska, project; provides $6,000,000 for the McClellan-Kerr Arkansas River Navigation System, Arkansas, project, of which $4,900,000 is for the Montgomery Point Lock and Dam; provides $700,000 for the Arkansas City, Kansas project and waives section 902 of Public Law 99–662; provides $670,000 for the Winfield, Kansas, project; provides $2,300,000 for the Ouachita River Levees, Louisiana, project; provides $710,000 for the Roughans Point, Massachusetts, project; provides $850,000 for the Marshall, Minnesota, project; provides $1,000,000 for the Ste. Genevieve, Missouri, project, provides; $1,100,000 for the Virginia Beach Erosion Control and Hurricane Protection, Virginia, project; provides $200,000 for the Hatfield Bottom, West Virginia, project; provides $2,000,000 for the Upper Mingo, West Virginia, project; and provides that $1,120,000 shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Interior for performing operation and maintenance activities at the Columbia River Fishing Access Sites to be constructed in Oregon and Washington.

The conferees have also included language in the bill that directs the Secretary of the Army to acquire all or part of the Little Holland Tract in California for wetlands restoration and waterfowl and fishery habitat enhancement and/or mitigation purposes conditioned on a determination made by the Secretary that acquisition is in the Federal interest; and language that provides $3,500,000 for the South Central Pennsylvania Environmental Restoration project.

The conferees are aware of the need for continued emergency construction on the Red River between Index, Arkansas, and Shreveport, Louisiana. However, due to bank caving problems that may be induced by the previously funded Sulfur Revetment now under construction, the conference agreement includes $6,600,000 to initiate and complete design and construction of the Canale Revetment in lieu of the Dickson Revetment.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, to extend the levee identified in Plan B of the approved draft specific project report for Williamsburg, Kentucky, dated April 1993, by approximately 2,000 feet upstream using funds provided for this project.

For the Lake Pontchartrain and Vicinity (Hurricane Protection) project, the conference agreement includes an additional $4,000,000 to continue construction of parallel protection along the Orleans and London Avenue outfall canals, and an additional $1,500,000 for the project to intercept and convey landside runoff from Jefferson Parish lakefront levees. The conferees agree that the landside runoff project is not a separable element of the Lake Pontchartrain and Vicinity (Hurricane Protection) project and direct that future budget requests for the Lake Pontchartrain and Vicinity (Hurricane Protection) project include funding for landside runnoff.

The amount provided for the Red River below Denison Dam project includes $500,000 to continue the Bowie County Levee, Texas, portion of the project. The conferees direct the Corps of Engineers to continue to prepare plans and specifications for restoration or replacement of the Bowie County Levee as authorized by the Flood Control Act of 1946 for incorporation into the Federal levee system to provide the same level of protection as the adjoining Miller County Levee in Arkansas under the terms and conditions of section 3 of the Flood Control Act of 1936, Public Law 74–738.

The funds to be transferred to the Secretary of the Interior for Columbia River Fishing Access Sites provide for the capitalized operation and maintenance costs for phase I sites. In addition, the conference agreement includes $600,000 for engineering and design of an additional six Bonneville pool sites planned under phase II.

On September 22, 1995, the Acting Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works advised the House and Senate Committees of a proposal to enter into a Section 215 agreement with the city of Arkansas City, Kansas, to provide for a credit toward the local contribution for certain work to be performed by the city in connection with the authorized Arkansas City flood control project. The conferees have no objection to that proposal and the Secretary may immediately execute the agreement with the understanding that the credit will not exceed the statutory limit of Section 215 of Public Law 90–483, as amended.

FLOOD CONTROL, MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND TRIBUTARIES, ARKANSAS, ILLINOIS, KENTUCKY, LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI, MISSOURI, AND TENNESSEE

Due to the severe budgetary situation, the conference agreement includes; $307,885,000 for the Flood Control, Mississippi River and Tributaries, project, which is the same as the amount provided by the House and the Senate and $11,365,000 below the budget request. At the same time, the conferees recognize the importance of this project to the Nation. The conferees agree that the reductions made to the individual features within the Mississippi River and Tributaries project were made without prejudice and expect the Corps of Engineers to manage the project, including the reprogramming of funds where necessary, to derive the maximum benefit from the funds provided.

The conferees are aware that the Corps of Engineers no longer requires the use of lands in the Vidalia, Louisiana, area previously used for casting and storage of articulated concrete mats used for construction of the Mississippi River and Tributaries project. In the interest of public safety and environmental restoration, the conferees direct the Corps of Engineers to use up to $900,000 of the funds available for the Mississippi River and Tributaries project to return lands to acceptable environmental condition now that the casting operations have ceased.

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE, GENERAL

Amendment No. 5: Appropriates $1,703,697,000 for Operation and Maintenance, General instead of $1,712,123,000 as proposed by the House and $1,696,998,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees recognize that flooding in the wake of Typhoon Oscar, which resulted in a Presidential disaster declaration in Southcentral Alaska, devastated the harbor at Seward, Alaska, just as the winter season was approaching. The Corps of Engineers is, therefore, encouraged to expedite work using available funds, including such contractual economies of effort with the City of Seward and the State of Alaska as are necessary in the judgment of the District Engineer, to restore full use to the port and port facilities impacted by the flooding.

The conference agreement includes $280,000 for the Pearl River, Mississippi and Louisiana, project, the same as the budget request. These funds are to be used to maintain the project in caretaker status and correct any safety problems, including lighting and boat trolley system improvements, at Pool's Bluff Sill and other lock locations.

Upon resolution of the status of the section 401 permit, the Corps of Engineers may use $250,000 of available funds to resume design work on the proposed expansion of the Renard Isle confined disposal facility at Green Bay Harbor, Wisconsin.

Amendment No. 6: Provides $5,926,000 for the Raystown Lake, Pennsylvania, project as proposed by the House instead of $3,426,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 7: Inserts language proposed by the Senate which directs the Secretary of the Army to maintain a minimum conservation pool of 475.5 feet at the Wister Lake, Oklahoma, project.

REGULATORY PROGRAM

The conferees agree with the language contained in the House and Senate Reports for the Regulatory Program of the Corps of Engineers. In addition, the conferees understand that the Corps of Engineers has under review an application by the City of East Chicago, Indiana, for the construction of a breakwater in Lake Michigan. The conferees expect the Corps to work with the city toward an expeditious resolution to the permitting process.

GENERAL EXPENSES

Amendment No. 8: Appropriates $151,500,000 for General Expenses instead of $150,000,000 as proposed by the House and $153,000,000 as proposed by the Senate and provides that the funds shall remain available until expended as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 9: Restores language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate limiting the funds available for general administration and related functions in the Office of the Chief of Engineers with an amendment providing that not to exceed $62,000,000 shall be available for that purpose instead of $60,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 10: Inserts language proposed by the Senate which provides that the plan for reducing the number of division offices which the Secretary of the Army is directed to develop and submit to the Congress shall be submitted to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate and the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and amends language contained in the House and Senate bills which provides that the division office plan shall not change the function of any district office by adding the words "any civil" before "function". This amendment is necessary to clarify that it is not the intent of the conferees to prohibit the Corps of Engineers from making necessary adjustments in mission and function of districts handling military construction to accommodate the shrinking military workload.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 11: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate which provides that the Corps of Engineers shall advertise for competitive bid at least 7,500,000 cubic yards of the hopper dredge volume accomplished with Government-owned dredges in fiscal year 1992 and which further provides that none of the funds available to the Corps of Engineers may be used to undertake improvements or major repair of the hopper dredge McFARLAND and inserts similar language proposed by the Senate. The Senate language differs from the House language in that it permits the Corps of Engineers to expend funds to maintain the McFARLAND's current operational condition and in that it includes an additional subsection relating to the use of the four Corps of Engineers hopper dredges, which has been amended by the conference agreement to provide that if any of the Corps' hopper dredges is removed from normal service for repair or rehabilitation, the Secretary of the Army shall not significantly alter the operating schedules of the remaining dredges.

Amendment No. 12: Inserts language proposed by the Senate which provides that none of the funds appropriated in this Act or otherwise available to the Corps of Engineers may be used for activities associated with moving the Corps' headquarters office to the Southeast Federal Center with an amendment which clarifies that this limitation on the use of funds does not apply to the use of funds required to process any Department of the Army permits, and makes technical corrections to Section 102, which modifies the authorization for the Manistique Harbor, Michigan, project.

Amendment No. 13: Inserts language proposed by the Senate which modifies the authorization for the Petersburg, West Virginia, project by increasing the total estimated cost to $26,600,000, with an estimated first Federal cost of $19,195,000 and an estimated first non-Federal cost of $7,405,000.

Amendment No. 14: Inserts language proposed by the Senate which authorizes the Secretary of the Army to accept from a non-Federal sponsor additional lands, not to exceed 300 acres, at the Cooper Lake and Channels, Texas, project and further authorizes the Secretary, upon acceptance of those lands, to redesignate an amount of mitigation lands, not to exceed 300 acres, to recreation purposes. The amendment also provides that the lands accepted from the non-Federal sponsor shall provide habitat value at least equal to that provided by the lands redesignated to recreation purposes and that all costs of work to be undertaken pursuant to the amendment shall be borne by the donating sponsor.

Amendment No. 15: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which directs the Secretary of the Army to take such actions as are necessary to obtain and maintain an elevation of 977 feet above sea level at the Lake Traverse, South Dakota and Minnesota, project and inserts the new sections described below.

Section 106 authorizes the Secretary of the Army to undertake the Indianapolis, Indiana, project authorized by Section 5 of Public Law 74–738 as modified to include certain riverfront alterations as described in the Corps of Engineers Central Indianapolis Waterfront Concept Master Plan, dated February, 1994. Non-Federal funds expended on or after the date of the Corps of Engineers report on items and outlined for construction in the Corps' document shall be applied to the non-Federal cost-sharing requirements.

Section 107 modifies section 313 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1992, the South Central Pennsylvania Environmental Restoration Infrastructure and Resource Protection Development Pilot Program. The modification includes changes to the consultation requirements to reflect a revised geographic scope, an increase in the authorized funding level, and several technical changes. The conferees have also included $3,500,000 under the Construction, General account to accomplish high priority work under the section 313 authority.

Section 108 authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Army to proceed with engineering, design, and construction of projects to provide for flood control and improvements to rainfall drainage systems in Jefferson, Orleans, and St. Tammany Parishes in Louisiana. The conferees are aware of the disastrous floods due to torrential rainfalls that occurred in southeast Louisiana in May of 1995, which resulted in the loss of seven lives, inundation of over 35,000 homes, and estimated property and infrastructure losses exceeding $3,000,000,000. This event produced the second highest number of flood insurance claims ever for a flood event. In addition, between 1978 and 1989, flood insurance claims for this area totaled $227,000,000. Therefore, because of the urgent need to prevent such disasters from recurring, the conferees have directed the Secretary of the Army to proceed immediately with economically justified flood control improvements that have been identified in reports of the Corps of Engineers' New Orleans District Engineer. No further feasibility studies are required for the projects authorized in this section. The conferees intend that the cost-sharing requirement between the Federal and non-Federal interests be consistent with the provisions for flood control and hurricane protection projects, as appropriate, in the Water Resources Development Act of 1986, except that the non-Federal sponsor shall receive credit, as part of the non-Federal share of the cost of these projects, for any work accomplished subsequent to those reports as determined by the Secretary of the Army to be a compatible and integral part of the projects. The projects include, but are not limited to, pumping station and channel improvements in Jefferson and Orleans Parishes, channel improvements along Mile Creek in Covington, hurricane protection along the Lake Pontchartrain shoreline in Mandeville, and hurricane protection and improved drainage in the Schneider Canal area in Slidell. An amount of $25,000,000 has been authorized for the Corps to proceed with work on these projects.

Section 109 directs the Secretary of the Army to convey land at the Dewey Lake, Kentucky, project to the City of Prestonsburg, Kentucky, for the development of public use recreational facilities and to further regional economic development.

Amendment No. 16: Inserts language proposed by the Senate which authorizes the Secretary of the Army to undertake the Coos Bay, Oregon, project in accordance with the Report of the Chief of Engineers, dated June 30, 1994, at a total cost of $14,541,000, with an estimated Federal cost of $10,777,000 and an estimated non-Federal cost of $3,764,000, and changes the section number.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

The summary tables at the end of this title set forth the conference agreement with respect to the individual appropriations, programs and activities of the Bureau of Reclamation. Additional items of conference agreement are discussed below.

GENERAL INVESTIGATIONS

Amendment No. 17: Appropriates $12,684,000 for General Investigations instead of $13,114,000 as proposed by the House and $11,234,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 18: Deletes language proposed by the Senate providing $300,000 for the completion of the feasibility study of alternatives for meeting drinking water needs on the Cheyenne River Sioux Reservation and surrounding communities in South Dakota. Funding for this project ($150,000) is included in the amount appropriated in Amendment No. 17.

CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Amendment No. 19: Appropriates $411,046,000 for Construction Program instead of $417,301,000 as proposed by the House and $390,461,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement includes $12,069,000 for Miscellaneous Project Programs of the Central Valley Project, California, which includes $200,000 for the Salmon Stamp Program as described in the House Report, $250,000 for the Colusa Basin Drainage District Management Project, and $5,750,000 for the unscreened diversions program, which is $250,000 less than the budget request.

The conferees have provided $6,540,000 for the Sacramento River Division of the Central Valley Project, California. The amount provided includes: $3,000,000 for the completion of engineering and design and initiation of construction of a new fish screen and fish recovery facilities at the Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District's Hamilton City Pumping Plant; $1,000,000 for the continuation of the pilot research pumping facility evaluation; $500,000 for the program to find solutions for passage for endangered and threatened fish at the Red Bluff Diversion Dam; $865,000 for the installation and evaluation of alternative fish guidance systems at Reclamation District 108 and Reclamation District 1004; and $300,000 for the Winter-Run Chinook Salmon Captive Broodstock Program.

The conference agreement includes $5,067,000 for the Trinity River Restoration Program, California, the same as the budget request and the amount provided in the House and Senate bills. Included in this total is $500,000 to carry out the interagency agreement between the Bureau of Reclamation and the Hoopa Valley Tribe regarding the Cooperative for Comprehensive Fisheries Management and funds necessary to complete the Environmental Impact Statement in support of the instream flow decision the Secretary of the Interior is required to render in 1996.

On July 17, 1995, one of the eight spillway gates at Folsom Dam in California failed resulting in an uncontrolled flow of 40,000 cubic feet per second of water from the reservoir. The total loss of water was about 360,000 acre-feet, which is approximately 35% of total reservoir capacity. The conferees are aware that the Bureau of Reclamation has begun work to design a replacement for the damaged gate, with the goal of having the replacement gate installed in 1996. Because of the timing of this event, no funds were included in either the House bill or the Senate bill to accomplish this work. The conferees agree that the Bureau of Reclamation may reprogram up to $6,000,000 of the funds available to it in fiscal year 1996, upon notification of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees, for the removal and replacement of the damaged gate and the remediation of the remaining spillway gates at Folsom Dam. If additional funds are required in fiscal year 1996 to complete the work, the Bureau of Reclamation should request those funds following the normal reprogramming procedures.

On August 22, 1995, the Department of the Interior submitted to the House and Senate subcommittees a request to reprogram $5,000,000 to the Los Angeles Area Water Reclamation and Reuse, California, project. Because of the unanticipated funding needs which have arisen, including the need to repair Folsom Dam in California and the need to make additional dam safety repairs at Ochoco Dam in Oregon, the conferees have agreed to defer, without prejudice, action on this reprogramming request.

The conference agreement includes $1,500,000 for the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation as proposed by the Senate. The House had deleted the funds requested by the Administration for this program. Within the amounts provided for the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation, $500,000 shall be made available to support the Spring Run and Coho Salmon Programs approved by the House under the Central Valley Project, Miscellaneous Project Programs, California, and $100,000 shall be made available to support the Kaweah River Delta Corridor Project. The conferees are concerned about certain grants that have been made by the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation to organizations known to be hostile to the interests of private landowners and those engaged in the productive and lawful use of public lands. The conferees have included the funding cited above for the Foundation based upon the understanding that its grant award procedures have been considerably tightened, and that the Foundation will make a concerted effort to avoid making further grants to the types of organizations described above. The Foundation's performance in this regard will be closely monitored by the Committees during the coming year.

The conference agreement includes $5,000,000 for the Wetlands Development Program. From within that amount, the conferees direct that $3,600,000 be utilized to continue the Caddo Lake wetlands project in Texas.

The conferees agree with the language contained in the House Report regarding the Rillito Creek, Arizona, High Plains Groundwater Recharge Demonstration project. In addition, the conference agreement includes $500,000 for the Bureau of Reclamation to continue the Equus Beds recharge project in Kansas.

Amendment No. 20: Provides that $94,225,000 of the funds appropriated under the Construction Program shall be available for transfer to the Lower Colorado River Basin Development Fund for construction of the Central Arizona Project as proposed by the House instead of $92,725,000 as proposed by the Senate.

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

Amendment No. 21: Appropriates $273,076,000 for Operation and Maintenance instead of $278,759,000 as proposed by the House and $267,393,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Due to the budgetary situation, the conferees have provided $273,076,000 for the Bureau of Reclamation's operation and maintenance program, which is $15,683,000 below the budget request and $1,224,000 below the amount appropriated in fiscal year 1995. The conferees expect the Bureau of Reclamation to use the flexibility available to it in managing the operation and maintenance program to ensure that the most critical maintenance needs are met. In that regard, the conferees agree with the language contained in the House Report regarding the growth in the Associated Operation and Maintenance Programs and expect the Bureau of Reclamation to derive a significant share of the reduction below the budget request from the various Associated O&M Programs in order to retain as much money as possible for operation and maintenance of projects.

The conferees note that the backlog in replacements, additions, and extraordinary maintenance items continues to grow for the Central Valley Project in California. In addition, the conferees are concerned that the Bureau of Reclamation has failed to comply with the directive to submit a plan, by February of 1995, for reducing the backlog in replacements, additions, and extraordinary maintenance items in a timely manner and direct that this previously requested plan be submitted as soon as possible. The conference agreement does include $4,625,000 for replacements, additions, and extraordinary maintenance items, the same as the budget request. The conferees urge the Bureau of Reclamation to continue its efforts to reach consensus with the canal authorities on the manner that those funds are allocated. The conference agreement also includes $5,454,000 for operation and maintenance of the Trinity River Division. The amount provided includes sufficient funds to continue the monitoring and tagging tasks, repair of winter damage, and sediment control needed for continued management of the Trinity River fishery.

The conferees have been informed that landowners and farmers suffered flooding and destruction of crops in March 1995 from waters of the Arroyo Pasajaro in Fresno County, California. The waters were diverted from the San Luis Canal, jointly operated by the Bureau of Reclamation and the State of California. The conferees direct the Bureau to evaluate the damage and report back to Congress on whether Federal responsibility is involved and if steps should be taken to provide compensation to those suffering damage.

CENTRAL VALLEY PROJECT RESTORATION FUND

The conferees direct that the $1,000,000 requested for the San Joaquin River Basin Resource Management Initiative, and any funds remaining from previous fiscal years, not be expended for that purpose. This action is consistent with action of the Congress during consideration of H.R. 1158. In the reports accompanying that bill, the Bureau of Reclamation was directed not to obligate any additional funds in fiscal year 1995 for the San Joaquin River Basin Resource Management Initiative.

The conference agreement includes $12,281,000 for the Shasta Dam Temperature Control Device, $1,000,000 above the budget request.

TITLE III

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

The summary tables at the end of this title set forth the conference agreement with respect to the individual appropriations, programs, and activities of the Department of Energy. Additional items of conference agreements are discussed below.

FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT LEVELS

The Department of Energy has announced a strategic alignment initiative which would reduce the number of Federal employees by 27 percent over five years. The Department has provided a summary of recommended employment levels and proposed reductions by organization for fiscal year 1996. The conferees expect the Department to make these proposed employment reductions in those areas where the conference agreement does not reduce employment levels below those requested by the Department. The Department is to report to the Committees on Appropriations the actual employment levels as of March 1996 compared to the fiscal year 1995 baseline and the Department's proposed employment levels.

SUPPORT SERVICE CONTRACTORS

The conferees are aware of the extensive use of support service contractors by the Department of Energy at headquarters and the field offices. In many instances these contractors are performing inherently governmental functions such as assisting in program management and program execution duties, representing program organizations at meetings inside and outside the Department, preparing briefing materials, newsletters, and budget justifications, and providing daily administrative and clerical support.

There are clearly instances where it is cost-effective to use support service contractors to support Federal programs. This would include functions such as custodial services, guard services, operation of emergency communications centers and mail rooms, and facility and grounds maintenance. In addition to these types of commercial services, there are situations where technical expertise is needed to augment Federal efforts. These technical services would include such tasks as automated data processing systems development for the Department's corporate financial, procurement, and personnel systems, systems review and reliability analyses, and economic and environmental analyses. These tasks are characterized by specific project schedules, milestones, and deliverables.

The conferees have no objection to continuing support service contracts which can be documented to be cost-effective and which provide specific technical expertise not available in the Federal work force at the Department. However, the Department has increasingly used support service contractors to augment the Federal work force for nonspecific functions. This may be done to circumvent Federal employment ceilings or funding constraints or because it is easier to hire an outside contractor than to manage properly the existing Federal work force.

After excluding those support service contracts which are documented to reflect the cost benefits of contracting for the service, and those contracts which provide specific technical expertise tied to a schedule and a deliverable, the conferees expect funding for all other support service contracts to decrease by 50 percent in fiscal year 1996. All other categories of support service contracts should be reduced by 15 percent in accordance with the Department's strategic alignment initiative. The Department is directed to submit semi-annual reports on the use of all support services contracts at headquarters and the field. By organization, appropriation, and program, this report should include the name of the contractor, fiscal year 1996 funding, number of employers, and a brief description of the work performed.

DEPARTMENTAL BUDGET JUSTIFICATIONS

The Department does not budget for Federal employees in a consistent manner throughout the whole organization. Using existing budget justification materials, it is difficult to determine where each Department of energy employee is located and the costs associated with each. To alleviate these discrepancies, in the fiscal year 1997 budget request the Department is directed to include all salaries and related expenses in the program that manages the employee. In addition to salaries and benefits, the personnel cost for each employee should include all related costs such as space rental, utilities, materials and supplies, telecommunications, and building maintenance. The administrative services group will determine the amount of these costs which should be charged to each program organization to ensure consistency in budgeting.

Within each appropriation account, each organization should have one program direction line for all full-time equivalent employees (FTEs), both field and headquarters, and provide object class information for all expenses. No Federal employees are to be funded in program accounts. Any difference between the average cost of the fully loaded FTE between specific programs should be explained in the budget justification.

ENERGY SUPPLY, RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES

Amendment No. 22: Appropriates $2,727,407,000 for Energy Supply, Research and Development Activities instead of $2,576,700,000 (less $1,000,000) as proposed by the House and $2,793,324,000 as proposed by the Senate, and deletes language proposed by the Senate providing no more than $7,500,000 for termination of the Gas Turbine-Modular Helium Reactor program.

SOLAR AND RENEWABLE ENERGY PROGRAMS

Funding of $2,000,000 for the solar international program is to be allocated to nongovernmental organizations which are active in joint implementation activities to develop specific international energy projects.

Funding of $400,000 is provided to study the feasibility of piping treated effluent from Santa Rosa to the Geysers for injection.

The conferees have provided $55,300,000 for biofuels energy systems. An amount of $27,650,000 is allocated for the categories of biochemical and thermochemical conversion, of which $3,000,000 is for the Federal share of a 50/50 cost-shared biomass ethanol production plant in Gridley, California, and the amount also includes the request for capital equipment. With the remaining funds, the conferees support and fully fund the biomass power projects in Vermont and Hawaii, and have provided from the remainder of available funds $3,940,000 for the regional biomass program.

The conferees have not provided funding for the ocean thermal energy systems program, nor technical assistance and other support for the Kotzebue, Alaska, project for a wind energy system.

Within the total funding provided for solar energy, the conferees have included $2,988,000, the same as the budget request, for the renewable energy production incentive (REPI) program. The conferees urge the Department to fully fund both tier 1 and tier 2 projects as outlined in its recently published regulations. REPI program funding shall be available only for so long as the tax credit for electricity produced from certain renewable sources or the energy investment credit for solar and geothermal property (authorized by sections 1914 and 1916 of the Energy Policy Act of 1992, respectively) remain in effect.

Within funds available for hydrogen research, $250,000 shall be made available to an institution where expertise in electrochemical (fuel cells), thermochemical and photochemical reactions for hydrogen production may be synergistically studied and the application to gas storage and alternate vehicle technology may be integrated.

The conferees have provided $1,500,000 for the hydropower program which includes funding to support the cost-shared program to develop an advanced energy-efficient turbine which reduces environmental impacts on fish species.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

The conferees realize that sufficient funding has not been provided to complete all tasks as proposed in the Department's budget request for the advanced light water reactor program. Therefore, the conferees urge the Department to apply funds within the light water reactor program to cost-effectively complete essential activities.

Termination funding of $7,500,000, the same as the budget request, has been provided for the orderly close-out of the gas turbine-modular helium reactor program. An orderly close-out shall include only the summary documentation of existing technical data and information. All design, development, and test programs shall be terminated.

The conference agreement provides $25,000,000 for electrometallurgical research and development in the technology development program for Defense Environmental Restoration and Waste Management. As recommended by the National Academy of Sciences' assessment of the electrometallurgical approach for treating spent nuclear fuel, the conferees expect the Department to develop a plan to support the EBR–II demonstration using this technology. If this is successful, the Department should review the program for application to other types of spent fuel and waste management issues.

No funding for the Soviet-designed reactor safety program is included in the Energy Supply, Research and Development appropriation account. Funding for this activity has been included in the Other Defense Activities appropriation account.

ISOTOPES

The conferees agree to provide a total of $3,000,000—$1,000,000 in fiscal year 1996 in addition to $2,000,000 from funds appropriated for this purpose in fiscal year 1995—to continue development of the National Biomedical Tracer Facility (NBTF). This funding should be used to acquire three site specific conceptual designs from among the strongest submissions received during the project definition study. Additionally, the Department should assess all permanent or interim upgrade NBTF proposals, including any from national laboratories, according to a consistent set of evaluation criteria including the capacity to produce a wide range of isotopes for medical and research purposes; research, technology transfer, education and training capabilities; and overall cost effectiveness considering lifetime costs of the facility as well as public-private partnerships and cost-sharing by state and local partners.

The conferees support using up to $750,000 of available funds within this account for completion of the Hanford medical isotopes business planning and program development project.

ENVIRONMENT, SAFETY AND HEALTH

The Radiation Effects Research Foundation (RERF) is a private foundation co-funded by the governments of the United States and Japan to study the effects of radiation on the survivors of the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombings. Since 1946, the National Academy of Sciences has provided support and oversight of scientific research on the consequences of the acute radiation exposures suffered by the population of these two cities, pursuant to an international agreement that co-funds activities at a 50–50 cost share, but this work has been threatened by the dramatically declining value of the dollar versus the yen. The conferees direct the Administration to continue to work with the National Academy of Sciences to achieve additional cost savings in this program and with the Japanese government to review areas for cost savings to reflect U.S. budgetary constraints. The appropriate committees should be informed of any funding changes before they become effective.

The conferees are also interested in the assessment of the continuing effectiveness and value of this program that is being conducted by a scientific committee jointly appointed by the U.S. and Japanese governments, and expect the Department to review the continued funding for this activity and report to the appropriate Congressional committees prior to hearings on the fiscal year 1997 budget and upon completion of the international scientific committee's review.

ENERGY RESEARCH

Biological and environmental research

The conferees support the important work conducted at the Inhalation Toxicology Research Institute. The conferees further understand that the Institute is reviewing ways to reduce its operating costs to the Department of Energy and to increase access to its facilities by other Federal and non-Federal entities having research needs. The conferees support these efforts to reduce costs and to meet both Federal and non-Federal needs and requirements.

Any general reductions to this account should be allocated equitably across all program elements without terminating any programs unilaterally.

Fusion

The conferees have provided $244,144,000, an increase of $15,000,000 over the House recommendation, for the fusion energy program. This funding is to support a program in plasma science and fusion technology, and continue United States participation in the engineering design activities phase of the International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor project to which the United States is committed through fiscal year 1998. The conferees do not agree with the Senate language which recommended transferring computer work, termination, severance and separation costs to other activities within the Department, and transferring the heavy ion fusion program to defense activities.

With little prospect for increased funding for the fusion base program over the next several years, it will be necessary for the program to restructure its strategy, content and near-to-medium-term objectives. The restructured program should emphasize continued development of fusion science, increased attention to concept improvement and alternative approaches to fusion, and development and testing of the low-activation structural materials so important for fusion's attractiveness as an energy source.

The Department of Energy, with participation of the fusion community and the Fusion Energy Advisory Committee, is instructed to prepare a strategic plan to implement such a restructured program, to be completed by December 31, 1995. This plan should assume a constant level of effort in the base program for the next several years; as appropriate, it should be integrated with plans of the international fusion program; and it should address the institutional makeup of a domestic program consistent with the funding assumptions.

The conferees believe that, because of the stringent budget realities facing this Nation, the promise of fusion energy can only be realized through international collaboration. The high cost of fusion development points to the increasing importance of international cooperation as a means of designing, building, and financing major magnetic fusion facilities in the future. Because the United States has committed to such an approach, it is crucial that a restructuring of the fusion program maintain a strong domestic base and not undermine our credibility as a reliable international partner.

Basic energy sciences

The conferees make no recommendation with regard to the siting of the new spallation source project. The Department of Energy shall make that determination in a fair and unbiased manner. The conferees direct the Department of Energy to evaluate opportunities to upgrade existing reactors and spallation sources as cost-effective means of providing neutrons in the near term for the scientific community while the next generation source is developed. This evaluation shall be available prior to the Appropriations Committee's hearings on the Department's fiscal year 1997 budget submission.

For purposes of reprogrammings during fiscal year 1996, funding may be reallocated by the Department among all operating accounts in basic energy sciences other than program direction.

Other energy research activities

The conferees agree that to the extent non-program specific general plant projects and general plant equipment are required for the Oak Ridge National Laboratory and the Oak Ridge Institute for Science and Education, they are to be funded within the Basic Energy Science and Biological and Environmental Research programs, respectively.

The conference agreement provides $18,000,000 for the laboratory technology transfer program. Within this funding, up to $1,500,000 is available for severance costs for 17 current employees. The conferees recommend that the Department identify and complete the most promising cooperative research and development agreements during fiscal year 1996.

ENERGY SUPPORT ACTIVITIES

University science and education programs

The conferees have provided $20,000,000 for this portion of the Department's science and education activities. None of the funds in this account may be used for salaries and expenses other than up to $1,100,000 which is available for severance costs for the 27 employees currently managing this program.

In addition to this individual program, the Department of Energy spends well over $100,000,000 throughout all programs to support science and education activities. The conferees continue to support science and education activities funded directly by programs and which have a direct correlation to programmatic needs. The conferees do not agree to fund a separate bureaucracy set up to manage only a small portion of the science and education activities of the Department. In fiscal year 1996, these activities are to be managed by the Office of Energy Research as they were from 1977 to 1993. In that way, this science and education program will be closely coupled with the Department's research programs, and the number of employees needed to support the program will be significantly reduced.

The conference agreement does not contain specific funding directions for science and education activities, but urges the Department to consider the views express in the Senate report. The conferees also encourage the Secretary of Energy to enter into an agreement with a qualified minority women's model institution of excellence to support curriculum development, research, training and other activities related to energy research and environmental restoration and waste management.

ENVIRONMENTAL RESTORATION AND WASTE MANAGEMENT

(NON–DEFENSE)

The conferees agree with the House report language on the Wayne, New Jersey project.

INDIAN ENERGY RESOURCES

From within available funds for the Energy Supply, Research and Development appropriation account, $8,600,000 is provided for Indian energy resources. The funding should be allocated to provide $6,100,000 for continued preconstruction activities for the Navajo transmission project, and $2,000,000 for the Haida Alaska Native Village Corporation's Reynolds Creek hydroelectric project. The conference agreement includes $500,000 for the Crow Energy Project, instead of $2,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. The Department is encouraged to work through the Western Area Technology Center In Butte, Montana, to provide any and all assistance in making the Crow energy project a success.

Amendment No. 23: Deletes language proposed by the Senate providing that within available funds $56,000,000 may be available to continue operation of the Tokamak Fusion Test Reactor.

Amendment No. 24: Deletes language proposed by the Senate providing that within the amount for Indian Energy Resource projects, $2,000,000 may be made available to fund the Crow energy resources programs.

Amendment No. 25: Deletes language proposed by the House providing $44,772,000 to implement provisions of section 1211 of the Energy Policy Act of 1992.

Amendment No. 26: Deletes language proposed by the Senate allocating additional funds for renewable energy resources and reducing departmental administration funding.

URANIUM SUPPLY AND ENRICHMENT ACTIVITIES

The conference agreement adjusts the allocation of funding for implementation of the depleted uranium hexafluoride cylinders and maintenance program. These adjustments will accelerate cleaning and painting of corroded cylinders at the three gaseous diffusion plant sites and construction of a new cylinder storage yard. These activities have been accommodated by reallocating funding provided in the House and Senate recommendations.

GENERAL SCIENCE AND RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

Amendment No. 27: Appropriates $981,000,000 for General Science and Research Activities instead of $991,000,000 as proposed by the House and $971,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

NUCLEAR WASTE DISPOSAL FUND

Amendment No. 28: Appropriates $151,600,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $226,600,000 as proposed by the House and deletes language proposed by the Senate that authorizes construction of an interim storage facility for spent nuclear fuel.

The conferees agree on the importance of continuing the existing scientific work at Yucca Mountain to determine the ultimate feasibility and licensability of the permanent repository at that site. The conferees direct the Department to refocus the repository program on completing the core scientific activities at Yucca Mountain. The Department should complete excavation of the necessary portions of the exploratory tunnel and the scientific tests needed to assess the performance of the repository. It should defer preparation and filing of a license application for the repository with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission until a later date. The Department's goal should be to collect the scientific information needed to determine the suitability of the Yucca Mountain site and to complete a conceptual design for the repository and waste package for later submission to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

ATOMIC ENERGY DEFENSE ACTIVITIES

Weapons activities

Amendment No. 29: Appropriates $3,460,314,000 for Weapons Activities instead of $3,273,014,000 as proposed by the House and $3,751,719,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement provides $1,078,403,000 for core stockpile stewardship activities which includes an additional $40,000,000 for the accelerated strategic computing initiative (ASCI). The conferees also support the enhanced surveillance and dual revalidation programs.

Funding of $37,400,000, the same as the budget request, is provided for project 96–D–111, the National Ignition Facility. Full funding for all inertial confinement fusion program participants is provided as requested in the Department's budget justification.

The conference agreement provides an increase of $106,000,000 over the House recommendation for stockpile management to provide for enhanced stockpile surveillance, advanced manufacturing, and core stockpile management activities. However, the conferees believe it is premature to initiate long-term capital improvements in advance of the outcome of the stockpile stewardship/management programmatic environmental impact statement process currently underway. The conferees have not provided specific site funding, but support fundamental initiatives in advanced manufacturing, and additional emphasis on advanced computerized manufacturing and dual revalidation techniques.

The conferees have provided $115,000,000 for program direction activities. The conferees support the liquefied gaseous spill test facility and the facility's modeling support center under the Department's emergency management program funded in the Other Defense Activities appropriation account.

The conference agreement includes the use of $209,744,000 in prior year balances, an increase of $123,400,000 over the budget request which included the use of $86,344,000.

DEFENSE ENVIRONMENTAL RESTORATION AND WASTE MANAGEMENT

Amendment No. 30: Appropriates $5,557,532,000 for Defense Environmental Restoration and Waste Management instead of $5,265,478,000 a proposed by the House and $5,989,750,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The tables accompanying this conference agreement reallocate funding for several construction projects as requested by the Department to reflect the most recent programmatic and site assumptions for fiscal year 1996 activities.

Budget reductions should be taken in those areas which will have the least impact on ongoing cleanup activities. The conferees seek to the extent possible to protect funding necessary to meet the cleanup milestones established in compliance agreements with other Federal agencies, states, and local agencies, by directing the cuts against support service contracts, excessive Headquarters and field oversight, large uncosted balances, and by reducing other Department administrative expenses such as travel.

The conferees direct that, to the maximum extent practicable, funding reductions be taken against Headquarters personnel and activities. Headquarters employees should be reviewing and auditing field and contractor activities and holding the contractors responsible for meeting performance goals and milestones, not micromanaging each step of the process from Headquarters through the financial plan process and activity data sheets. A critical review of Headquarters' approval processes for various activities would yield a wealth of non-value added administrative steps which serve primarily to delay, prolong, and diffuse responsibility for direct and timely cleanup activities. Thus, the conferees expect funding for Headquarters' organizations to be severely curtailed during execution of the fiscal year 1996 program.

The conferees also believe that legislative reforms in the Department's cleanup program are long overdue, and will work with the legislative committees to ensure that significant changes are made in the cleanup program.

The Department has indicated that the environmental management organization plans to hire an additional 315 Federal employees in fiscal year 1996. The conferees do not agree with this strategy. Every witness outside of the Department who testified on this program stated that one of the management problems was too many employees. While the conferees are sympathetic that the program may not have the correct mix of technical skills in the current work force, they are not amenable to the concept of hiring 10% more employees for this program in fiscal year 1996. Thus, the Department is directed not to exceed the current Federal employee ceiling and hire new employees only as current employees leave.

The conference agreement provides $1,635,973,000 for environmental restoration. An additional $60,000,000 has been provided to accelerate cleanup activities and reduce current landlord costs and outyear funding requirements. The conferees strongly support efforts at sites such as Fernald, Ohio, and Rocky Flats, Colorado, which have developed detailed plans to expedite cleanup actions and reduce costs to the taxpayer.

The conferees are in agreement with the Senate recommendation to accelerate certain activities at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory. Within the waste management account, funding is provided for preconstruction activities such as design and engineering work on additional capacity for dry storage of spent nuclear fuel and an advanced mixed waste treatment facility. The conference agreement also provides funding of $42,000,000 for project 96–D–406, the nuclear fuels canister storage building and stabilization facility in Richland, Washington.

The conferees agree with the concern expressed by the Senate that the Department is not providing sufficient attention and resources to longer term basic science research which needs to be done to ultimately reduce cleanup costs. The current technology development program continues to favor near-term applied research efforts while failing to utilize the existing basic research infrastructure within the Department and the Office of Energy Research. As a result of this, the conferees direct that at least $50,000,000 of the technology development funding provided to the environmental management program in fiscal year 1996 be managed by the Office of Energy Research and used to develop a program that takes advantage of laboratory and university expertise. This funding is to be used to stimulate the required basic research, development and demonstration efforts to seek new and innovative cleanup methods to replace current conventional approaches which are often costly and ineffective.

In the technology development program, $25,000,000 has been provided for electrometallurgical research and development. The conferees have also included sufficient funding for the Department to prepare a report on the potential of using pentaborane for environmental remediation or other uses, the estimated costs of the effort, and potential advantages and disadvantages of the proposal. The Department's activities in this area are to be confined to the preparation of this report.

The conferees expect the Department to direct more resources toward activities surrounding storage, treatment, and disposal of spent nuclear fuel currently stored at Department of Energy sites.

The conferees fully support the mission of the Hazardous Materials Training Center at the Hanford site in Richland, Washington, and direct the Department to adequately fund the requested operating budget from the compliance and coordination account.

The conferees understand the need for economic development funding to support local communities adversely impacted by Department of Energy programs and to transition communities which have lost jobs due to programmatic changes at facilities, but are concerned that cleanup funds are being used for economic development activities. With that understanding, the conferees have provided $82,500,000 in the worker and community transition program under Other Defense Activities which was established and authorized to fund such activities, and expect all economic development activities to be funded from that program.

The conference agreement provides not more than $12,000,000 for public accountability activities in the analysis, education and risk management program. The Department is expected to review requests for this funding to reduce duplication of efforts by various groups and excessive costs. None of these funds may be used for reimbursement of travel expenses of individuals traveling to Washington, DC.

The conference agreement includes funding to maintain State health studies in South Carolina, Tennessee, and Colorado at the $7,300,000 level in fiscal year 1996. These funds are in addition to the $9,950,000 for dose reconstruction or other health studies including those conducted under a Memorandum of Understanding between the Department of Health and Human Services and DOE's Office of Environment, Safety and Health. Additionally, the conferees direct that all of these studies shall continue to be administered by the Office of Environment, Safety and Health.

The conference agreement supports the Hanford environmental dose reconstruction project and health information network at the budget request level, and continues the Hanford thyroid study at $1,700,000, the same as the fiscal year 1995 level.

The conferees are aware that the Draft Environmental Impact Statement prepared by the Department of Energy on the Proposed Nuclear Weapons Nonproliferation Policy Concerning Foreign Research Reactor Spent Nuclear Fuel includes as an option the importation of foreign spent nuclear fuel through civilian ports. The conferees are concerned that some of these ports may not have the security or the emergency management capabilities needed to safely handle weapons grade or highly irradiated nuclear material and that the designation of some of these ports as a port of entry would necessitate that the spent nuclear fuel be transported through highly populated metropolitan areas. The Department of Energy should take into consideration a port's willingness to be designated as a port of entry for the foreign spent nuclear fuel as one of the determining factors in the final selection process and to the maximum extent feasible, the conferees direct the Department of Energy to utilize military ports or civilian ports which have expressed an interest in receiving the spent fuel.

The conference agreement includes the use of $667,240,000 of prior year balances, an increase of $390,298,000 over the budget request, which included the use of $276,942,000.

OTHER DEFENSE ACTIVITIES

Amendment No. 31: Appropriates $1,373,212,000 for Other Defense Activities instead of $1,323,841,000 as proposed by the House and $1,439,112,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees have provided $30,000,000 for the Soviet-designed reactor safety program, as proposed by the Senate, and $10,000,000 for the Industrial Partnering Program. The conference agreement also provides $3,600,000 to continue the Department's role in the North Korean spent fuel project.

NUCLEAR SAFEGUARDS AND SECURITY

The conferees are deeply concerned about the recent direction in Executive Order 12958 to "automatically declassify" and publicly release documents containing National Security Information within five years whether or not the records have been reviewed. Automatic declassification creates a substantial and unnecessary risk that information, including information regarding U.S. nuclear weapons, will be inadvertently disclosed to potential proliferators. Clearly such disclosure fundamentally undermines U.S. nonproliferation efforts, and could effect grave damage to U.S. national security. The conferees believe that the automatic declassification of national security records that could contain Restricted Data constitutes a violation of the legal protections for Restricted Data mandated by the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended. Although the conferees recognize that the Order provides an exemption from automatic declassification for Restricted Data, the conferees do not see how such an exemption can be effectively implemented since the National Security Information records slated for automatic release have a high probability of containing some Restricted Data intermixed within the National Security Information. Thus, short of a Department of Energy review of all National Security Information records believed by the Department to have a probability of containing Restricted Data, there is no way to ensure the protection of Restricted Data materials consistent with the provisions of the Atomic Energy Act.

Given the potential impact to national security through the inappropriate release of Restricted Data, the conferees believe the rush to automatically declassify sensitive documents is not in the national interest. Therefore, the conferees strongly urge the President to review and revise Executive Order 12958 regarding Classified National Security Information, and exempt from automatic declassification all National Security Information files, including files of other agencies, earmarked by the Department of Energy as potentially containing Restricted Data.

FUNDING ADJUSTMENTS

The conferees direct the use of $70,000,000 of prior year balances from this account, an increase of $57,000,000 from the budget request of $13,000,000. The increase is to be taken against unobligated and uncosted balances remaining in the Materials Support program at the end of fiscal year 1995.

Amendment No. 32: Deletes language proposed by the Senate providing $4,952,000 for project 96–D–463, electrical and utility systems upgrade at the Idaho Chemical Processing Plant in Idaho. Funding for this project has been included in the Defense Environmental Restoration and Waste Management appropriation account.

DEFENSE NUCLEAR WASTE DISPOSAL

Amendment No. 33: Appropriates $248,400,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $198,400,000 as proposed by the House.

Since passage of the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982, as amended, the nuclear waste fund has incurred costs for activities related to disposal of high-level waste generated from the atomic energy defense activities of the Department of Energy. At the end of fiscal year 1994, the balance owed by the Federal Government to the nuclear waste fund was $664,000,000 (including principal and interest). Through fiscal year 1995, a total of $361,930,000 has been paid to the nuclear waste fund through the Defense Nuclear Waste Disposal appropriation account.

During fiscal year 1995, the defense contribution to the nuclear waste fund was reestimated to the current amount of $660,000,000. The recommendation of the conferees is to provide $248,400,000 in fiscal year 1996 which will reduce the deficit to $538,000,000 at the end of the fiscal year.

Amendment No. 34: Inserts language providing that $85,000,000 shall be available only for an interim storage facility and only upon the enactment of statutory authority instead of language proposed by the Senate clarifying the use of the funds appropriated in the Defense Nuclear Waste Disposal appropriation account.

DEPARTMENTAL ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 35: Appropriates $366,697,000 for Departmental Administration instead of $362,259,000 as proposed by the House and $377,126,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 36: Applies revenues of $122,306,000 for use in the Departmental Administration account as proposed by the House instead of $137,306,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 37: Provides a net appropriation of $244,391,000 for a final year estimate of Departmental Administration expenditures instead of $239,944,000 as proposed by the House and $239,820,000 as proposed by the Senate.

While the conferees realize that this funding level for the Departmental Administration account will cause reductions in existing personnel at the Department of Energy, it should be noted that the Secretary of Energy has initiated a strategic alignment process which will also lead to downsizing of the Department by 27 percent over the next five years. The conference agreement assumes a 15-percent reduction in the number of employees during fiscal year 1996 from the fiscal year 1995 baseline. To the extent possible the additional reductions should be targeted to correspond with reductions in other programmatic areas in this bill. Solar and renewables, fusion, nuclear energy, technology transfer, and science and education programs are a few of the areas funded below fiscal year 1995. Support and administrative workload and staff focused on these areas should see a corresponding reduction as should offices for activities such as quality management and employee and contractor protection which have grown significantly in the last two years.

Reduced funding for this account was first proposed by the House of Representatives in June of this year, but the Department made no effort to prepare for the possibility that actual funding reductions would be implemented on October 1, 1995. Thus, the impact of these reductions exceeds that which may have occurred had the Department taken them seriously several months ago. Another example of this was the rescission of $20,000,000 of fiscal year 1995 funding which the Department chose to allocate solely to contractual services rather than personnel or programmatic areas. This was ultimately short-sighted and has amplified the impact of the fiscal year 1996 reduction.

SECRETARIAL TRAVEL

In response to concerns about the breadth and scope of Secretarial travel, the conferees issue directions and impose limitations on appropriated funds as follows:

1. Beginning in fiscal year 1997, the Department is instructed to provide sufficient detail in its budget justifications for the Office of the Secretary to provide for identification of resources budgeted for secretarial travel.
2. Costs to support travel of the Secretary, any special assistants funded through the Office of the Secretary, and any security detail accompanying the Secretary are to be absorbed within the line item for the Office of the Secretary.
3. The Department is instructed to notify the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations of any internal reprogrammings which are executed to directly or indirectly support departmental travel, regardless of the amount.
4. No funds provided by this Act may be used to host or subsidize the travel of any non-Federal participants in secretarial missions.
5. The Department is instructed to provide semi-annual reports on secretarial travel to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations. In addition to providing a full financial accounting of trips, these reports should identify: travel dates and destinations, all persons accompanying or advancing the Secretary, and the purpose and results of each trip.

OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR GENERAL

Amendment No. 38: Appropriates $25,000,000 for the Office of the Department of Energy Inspector General as proposed by the Senate instead of $26,000,000 as proposed by the House. From within available funds, the Office of Contractor Employee Protection is to be funded in this account.

POWER MARKETING ADMINISTRATION

BONNEVILLE POWER ADMINISTRATION

Recent actions by the Bonneville Power Administration have led to concerns that the Bonneville Power Administration may not make its Treasury payment in fiscal year 1996. The conferees cannot state more strongly that failure by Bonneville to make the full annual payment to Treasury will seriously jeopardize its credibility with Congress and will lead to more involvement by Congress in the management and decision-making processes of the agency.

The conferees are also concerned that Bonneville's much touted cost cutting measures are more words than action. For example, Bonneville has indicated its intent to downsize, but plans to reduce its Federal work force by little more than eight percent over three years. That is less than annual attrition rates, and less than the Department of Energy has proposed for other program organizations.

FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION

Amendment No. 39: Appropriates $131,290,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $132,290,000 as proposed by the House.

The conference agreement provides $131,290,000 for the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Revenues are established at a rate equal to the amount provided for program activities, resulting in a net appropriation of zero.

The conferees recognize that Commission workload with respect to the regulation of natural gas and oil is declining as those industries become more competitive and, therefore, concurs with the House and Senate Committees' recommendations to reduce staff in the natural gas and oil pipelines program. A 20-percent reduction over the next two years is recommended.

The conferees recognize the value in maintaining the current staffing level for the electric power program. This is necessary to respond to a significant increase in workload due to the Commission's efforts to establish a competitive wholesale bulk power market for electricity similar to what has been accomplished in the natural gas area.

To mitigate the impact of the recommended funding reduction, the conferees encourage the Commission to employ additional authority from prior years' unexpended balances, as needed.

The conferees direct the Commission to not approve the transfer of electric generating facilities at Scott Dam at Lake Pillsbury in Lake County, California, or Cape Horn Dam in Mendocino County, California, unless the Commission determines that such transfer will not adversely affect any existing water rights and will not substantially change flow levels in the Russian and Eel Rivers.

Amendment No. 40: Applies revenues of $131,290,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $132,290,000 as proposed by the House.

INDEPENDENT AGENCIES

APPALACHIAN REGIONAL COMMISSION

Amendment No. 41: Appropriates $170,000,000 instead of $142,000,000 as proposed by the House and $182,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Of the total amount appropriated, $57,355,000 is provided for area development, $3,645,000 is provided for salaries and expenses, and $109,000,000 is provided for the highway program.

The conferees direct that the Commission establish new area development allocation criteria which place greater emphasis on assistance to the more severely distressed counties.

DELAWARE RIVER BASIN COMMISSION

Amendment No. 42: Appropriates $343,000 for Salaries and Expenses instead of $440,000 as proposed by the Senate and appropriates $428,000 as a contribution to the Delaware River Basin Commission instead of $478,000 as proposed by the Senate and deletes language related to the compensation of the United States Commissioner as proposed by the Senate. The House included no similar provision.

The conferees agree to provide final year funding for the Delaware River Basin Commission. Funding is provided to facilitate an orderly transition to financial self-sufficiency of the compact states and an orderly termination of the Office of the Federal Commissioner. Committees of authorizing jurisdiction will have an opportunity during fiscal year 1996 to address any new institutional arrangements or revisions to the Delaware River Basin Compact that are necessary or desirable due to the prospective termination of Federal funding.

INTERSTATE COMMISSION ON THE POTOMAC RIVER BASIN

Amendment No. 43: Appropriates $511,000 as proposed by the Senate. The House included no similar provision.

The conferees agree to provide final year funding for the Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin. Funding is provided to facilitate an orderly transition to financial self-sufficiency of the compact states. Committees of authorizing jurisdiction will have an opportunity during fiscal year 1996 to address any new institutional arrangements or revisions to the compact creating the Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin that are necessary or desirable due to the prospective termination of Federal funding.

Amendment No. 47: Appropriates $2,531,000 as proposed by the House instead of $2,664,000 as proposed by the Senate.

SUSQUEHANNA RIVER BASIN COMMISSION

Amendment No. 48: Appropriates $318,000 for Salaries and Expenses instead of $280,000 as proposed by the Senate and appropriates $250,000 as a contribution to the Susquehanna River Basin Commission instead of $288,000 as proposed by the Senate and deletes language relating to the compensation of the United States Commissioner as proposed by the Senate. The House included no similar provision.

The conferees agree to provide final year funding for the Susquehanna River Basin Commission. Funding is provided to facilitate an orderly transition to financial self-sufficiency of the compact states and an orderly termination of the Office of the Federal Commissioner. Committees of authorizing jurisdiction will have an opportunity during fiscal year 1996 to address any new institutional arrangements or revisions to the Susquehanna River Basin Compact that are necessary or desirable due to the prospective termination of Federal funding.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Amendment No. 49: Appropriates $109,169,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority instead of $103,339,000 as proposed by the House and $110,339,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The appropriation is to be distributed among TVA programs as follows: $71,169,000 for stewardship and land and water; $5,000,000 for Land Between the Lakes; $16,000,000 for economic development; and $17,000,000 for the environmental research center.

In conjunction with its efforts to reduce the need for future appropriations at Land Between the Lakes through reductions, savings and efficiencies, TVA may continue to use its flexibility to allocate up to an additional $1,000,000 from its Stewardship funds to LBL. This flexibility will allow TVA, if the need arises due to a lack of funds or other emergency and/or crisis situations, to allocate additional funding to promote the facilitation of LBL's transition to increased financial self-sufficiency.

Amendment No. 50: Includes language proposed by the Senate that requires the Tennessee Valley Authority to submit to Congress a plan for obtaining funding for the Environmental Research Center from other sources amended to extend the deadline for submission of such plan and to delete limitations on expenditures for the TVA Environmental Research Center.

TITLE V

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 51: Deletes language proposed by the House repealing Sec. 505 of Public Law 102-377 which prohibits the use of funds to conduct studies relating to changes in pricing hydroelectric power by the six Federal public power authorities and Sec. 208 of Public Law 99-349 which prohibits the use of funds by the executive branch to solicit proposals, prepare studies, or draft proposals to transfer out of Federal ownership the Federal power marketing administrations located within the contiguous 48 states, but accepts House language repealing Sec. 510 of Public Law 101-514 which prohibits the use of funds by the executive branch to change the employment levels determined by the administrators of the Federal power marketing administrations to be necessary to carry out their responsibilities. The conferees agree that the statutory limitations do not prohibit the Legislative Branch from initiating or conducting studies or collecting information regarding the sale or transfer of the power marketing administrations to non-Federal ownership.

The conference agreement also inserts language which extends the due date for the report required to be submitted by Title 30 of Public Law 102-575, the Western Water Policy Review Act of 1992. This extension is required because of the delay by the Administration in establishing the Western Water Policy Review Advisory Commission. The Bureau of Reclamation may use up to $800,000 of available funds in support of the work of the Commission.

Amendment No. 52: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate providing that no funds may be used for programs, projects, or activities not in compliance with applicable Federal law relating to risk assessment, protection of property rights, or unfunded mandates and inserts language which extends the authorization for the Trinity River Restoration Program of the Central Valley Project, California, for one year. The conferees are aware that the House Resources Committee currently has under consideration legislation to extend the authorization for this program. This temporary extension will permit work to continue on this important program pending action by the authorizing committee.

Amendment No. 53: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate reducing the Nuclear Waste Disposal Fund by $1,000, and inserts language that directs the Secretary of the Interior to proceed without delay with construction of those facilities of the Animas-La Plata Project, Colorado and New Mexico, identified for construction in the Final Biological Opinion for the project dated October 25, 1991.

Amendment No. 54: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate which provides that none of the funds available in the Act for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Upper Mississippi River—Illinios Waterway Navigation Study may be used to study any portion of the Mississippi River above Lock and Dam 14.

The conferees believe that the language contained in the House-passed bill could restrict the ability of the Corps of Engineers to undertake a comprehensive study of the navigation needs on the Upper Mississippi River and Illinois Waterway and have, therefore, agreed to delete the language. The conferees do agree, however, with the intent of the language and direct that the Corps of Engineers not study any large-scale improvements on the Upper Mississippi River above Lock and Dam 14.

Amendment No. 55: Deletes language inserted by the Senate pertaining to the amount of fish and wildlife costs that the Bonneville Power Administration could incur, and inserts language amending Public Law 88-552 and the Pacific Northwest Electric Power Planning and Conservation Act to permit the Bonneville Power Administration to sell excess Federal power outside the Pacific Northwest; requiring the Northwest Power and Conservation Planning Council to provide a report to Congress; authorizing the Corps of Engineers to procure goods through Bonneville using the authorities available to the Administrator; maintaining the residential exchange power program through fiscal year 1997; providing Bonneville Power Administration employees with a voluntary separation incentive up to $25,000; and authorizing these authorities to extend beyond the fiscal year.

The conferees are deeply concerned over the escalating and uncoordinated fish and wildlife costs imposed on the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) and its customers due to Endangered Species Act compliance. The conferees are concerned that the current inability to control BPA's fish and wildlife costs may result in the shifting of costs—both directly and indirectly—to the Nation's taxpayers and to non-Federal interests on the Columbia and Snake River system. Such non-Federal interests include the region's electric ratepayers, agriculture, non-Federal hydroelectric projects owners, river users, reservoir users, water interests, and others. The conferees strongly urge BPA and the Administration to resist the temptation to shift fish and wildlife costs onto the Nation's taxpayers and these non-Federal interests.

The conferees understand that there is a nearly unanimous call from affected parties—user groups, and ratepayers—in the region of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana to start the review of the Pacific Northwest Power Planning and Conservation Act. The provisions of the Northwest Power Act that deserve careful consideration include, but are not limited to, containing the region's fish and wildlife costs, coordinating fish and wildlife expenditures, and granting the region the ability to make the decisions with respect to such costs. The conferees, therefore, urge a renewed review of the Northwest Power Act within the authorizing committees in the next session of Congress in an effort to answer these and other important issues confronting the region.

The conferees understand the Administration is taking steps to control fish and wildlife costs as an interim measure. In addition, the conferees direct the agencies involved to enter into a Memorandum of Agreement establishing an overall salmon recovery budget, and detailing the manner in which such budget will be implemented.

Sale of Excess Federal Power.—Excess power may be generated by routine power operations, or fish and wildlife operations, of either the Federal Columbia River Power System or other electric power plants from which Bonneville is contractually obligated to acquire electric power.

This section removes restrictions from power made excess to BPA contractual obligations by: 1) a customer's decision to remove load from Bonneville, 2) hydrosystem operations, or 3) purchases for the benefit of fish and wildlife. This gives BPA greater flexibility in marketing, to increase its revenue and its competitiveness.

The legislation applies the term "excess power" to this power. Currently, Bonneville's authorizing legislation severely limits Bonneville's flexibility to market such power, putting the agency at a marketing disadvantage and restricting potential revenues. Bonneville may sell excess power without, among other things, the regional preference call back provisions of 60 days for energy sales and 60 months for capacity sales, and without the Bonneville Project Act prohibition on resale of Federal power by private entities not in the business of selling power in the retail market. Surplus power which is surplus for reasons other than the reasons stated above will continue to be governed by existing marketing restrictions.

Bonneville is allowed greater flexibility to provide Pacific Northwest preference notice to regional customers for out-of-region sales. This flexibility may include shorter notice periods and less detailed information on inprogress negotiations. Notice periods may be very short for short-term sales (for example, notice to accommodate hourly sales) and for transactions that must be negotiated quickly. BPA may also provide seasonal notices with price ranges requesting interested parties to contact BPA to purchase power. In all cases, prior to sales outside the Pacific Northwest, Bonneville would continue to offer power first to Northwest utilities and industries purchasing power from Bonneville. Bonneville would offer excess power first to regional customers under the same essential rate, terms and conditions as for the proposed out-of-region sale. The Administrator has discretion in making this determination given that the rate may depend on terms and conditions for one purchaser that would be inapplicable to another purchaser. The rate, as under current law, will continue to be the price that BPA applies to the proposed sale within the parameters of the applicable rate schedule and based on the terms and conditions of the sale.

This legislation poses no significant risk or cost to Bonneville's regional customers because the only power sold outside the region without the restrictions is power abandoned by regional customers and excess power generated or purchased for the benefit of fish and wildlife. No other amount of power can be sold outside the region without such restrictions. Regional customers will continue to receive first right to purchase excess power before it is sold outside the region.

Within 90 days, the Bonneville Power Administration, with the concurrence of the Secretary of Energy, shall deliver a report on the sale of excess Federal power provision to the House Commerce Committee, House Resources Committee, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, and the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations. This report will be one of the factors considered in the comprehensive review of the Bonneville Power Administration.

Residential Exchange.—Establishes the total amount of benefits available for residential and small farm consumers of utilities participating in the residential exchange program under section 5(c) of the Pacific Northwest Power Planning and Conservation Act for fiscal year 1997. All residential exchange benefits will continue to be passed through in their entirety to the eligible residential and small farm consumers of the respective utilities. The conferees recognize the authority of the Bonneville Power Administration to implement in lieu transactions, among other actions, which could effectively terminate the residential exchange after 2001. Consistent with the regional review, Bonneville and its customers should work together to gradually phase out the residential exchange program by October 1, 2001. This should result in total fiscal year 1997 benefits to these consumers being approximately equivalent to the benefits they received in fiscal year 1996.

In order to maintain a sound financial position, the conferees urge, to the extent practicable, BPA to take such actions as are necessary to assure the proposed rate for public utilities and direct services industries are not increased from the initial proposal. In a further effort to prevent load loss, the conferees urge Bonneville to pursue load commitments from its public utility customers at an appropriate level which assures Bonneville's continued financial viability and recognizes customers' desires for load diversification and to capture economies of scale by pooling their resources.

Amendment No. 56: Inserts a provision which would repeal section 7 of the Magnetic Fusion Engineering Act as proposed by the Senate, but does not repeal section 3131(c) of Public Law 101-510, the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991, as proposed by the Senate because this was an erroneous citation.

Amendment No. 57: Deletes language proposed by the Senate expressing the sense of the Senate on the conference on S. 4, the Line Item Veto Act.

Amendment No. 58: Deletes language proposed by the Senate requiring reductions in energy costs of agency facilities.

Amendment No. 59: Inserts language proposed by the Senate regarding the regulation of water levels in Rainy Lake and Namakan Lake in Minnesota, and changes the section number.

TITLE VI—MIDDLE EAST PEACE FACILITATION ACT OF 1995

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 601. This title may be cited as the "Middle East Peace Facilitation Act of 1995".

FINDINGS

SEC. 602. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Palestine Liberation Organization (hereafter the "P.L.O.") has recognized the State of Israel's right to exist in peace and security, accepted United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, committed itself to the peace process and peaceful coexistence with Israel, free from violence and all other acts which endanger peace and stability, and assumed responsibility over all P.L.O. elements and personnel in order to assure their compliance, prevent violations, and discipline violators;

(2) Israel has recognized the P.L.O. as the representative of the Palestinian people;

(3) Israel and the P.L.O. signed a Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements (hereafter the "Declaration of Principles") on September 13, 1993 at the White House;

(4) Israel and the P.L.O. signed an Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area (hereafter the "Gaza-Jericho Agreement") on May 4, 1994 which established a Palestinian Authority for the Gaza and Jericho areas;

(5) Israel and the P.L.O. signed an Agreement on Preparatory Transfer of Powers and Responsibilities (hereafter the "Early Empowerment Agreement") on August 29, 1994 which provided for the transfer to the Palestinian Authority of certain powers and responsibilities in the West Bank outside of the Jericho Area;

(6) under the terms of the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and Gaza (hereafter the "Interim Agreement) signed on September 28, 1995, the Declaration of Principles, the Gaza-Jericho Agreement and the Early Empowerment Agreement, the powers and responsibilities of the Palestinian Authority are to be assumed by an elected Palestinian Council with jurisdiction in the West Bank and Gaza Strip in accordance with the Interim Agreement;

(7) permanent status negotiations relating to the West Bank and Gaza Strip are scheduled to begin by May 1996;

(8) the Congress has, since the conclusion of the Declaration of Principles and the P.L.O.'s renunciation of terrorism, provided authorities to the President to suspend certain statutory restrictions relating to the P.L.O., subject to Presidential certifications that the P.L.O. has continued to abide by commitments made in and in connection with or resulting from the good faith implementation of, the Declaration of Principles;

(9) the P.L.O. commitments relevant to Presidential certifications have included commitments to renounce and condemn terrorism, to submit to the Palestinian National Council for former approval the necessary changes to those articles of the Palestinian Covenant which call for Israel's destruction, and to prevent acts of terrorism and hostilities against Israel; and

(10) the United States is resolute in its determination to ensure that in providing assistance to Palestinians living under the jurisdiction of the Palestinian Authority or elsewhere, the beneficiaries of such assistance shall be held to the same standard of financial accountability and management control as any other recipient of United States assistance.

SENSE OF CONGRESS

SEC. 603. It is the sense of the Congress that the P.L.O. must do far more to demonstrate an irrevocable denunciation of terrorism and ensure a peaceful settlement of the Middle East dispute, and in particular it must—

(1) submit to the Palestinian National Council for formal approval the necessary changes to those articles of the Palestinian National Covenant which call for Israel's destruction;

(2) make greater efforts to pre-empt acts of terror, discipline violators and contribute to stemming the violence that has resulted in the deaths of over 140 Israeli and United States citizens since the signing of the Declaration of Principles;

(3) prohibit participation in its activities and in the Palestinian Authority and its successors by any groups or individuals which continue to promote and commit acts of terrorism;

(4) cease all anti-Israel rhetoric, which potentially undermines the peace process;

(5) confiscate all unlicensed weapons;

(6) transfer and cooperate in transfer proceedings relating to any person accused by Israel to acts of terrorism; and

(7) respect civil liberties, human rights and democratic norms.

OVERSEAS PRIVATE INVESTMENT CORPORATION

PROGRAM ACCOUNT

Amendment No. 6: Deletes Senate language which allowed for the transfer of funds from the OPIC noncredit account in order to fund program activities. The House language provides for an appropriation from the general fund of the Treasury.

INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

CONTRIBUTION TO THE INTERNATIONAL FINANCE CORPORATION

CONTRIBUTION TO THE ENTERPRISE FOR THE AMERICAS MULTILATERAL INVESTMENT FUND

Amendment No. 7: Deletes House language providing appropriations for the International Finance Corporations and for the Contribution to the Enterprise for the Americas Multilateral Investment Fund. These matters are addressed in amendments no. 79, 82, and 88.

TITLE II—BILATERAL ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE FUNDS APPROPRIATED TO THE PRESIDENT

AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CHILD SURVIVAL AND DISEASE PROGRAMS

Amendment No. 8: Inserts language providing that not less than $484,000,000 of the funds appropriated in title II, and in title IV under "International Organizations and Programs", shall be available for Child Survival and Disease Programs. The House had proposed an appropriation of $592,660,000 for a "Children and Disease Programs Fund". The Senate bill contained no provision on this matter.

The managers support the maintenance of child survival ($300,000,000), infectious disease programs, and funding for UNICEF ($100,000,000), as indicated in the House report. In addition to funding for child survival programs included in the earmark in the conference agreement, $30,000,000 would be available from "International Disaster Assistance" and $16,000,000 would be provided from "Economic Support Fund" for programs in Egypt.

The managers support the House and Senate report language regarding the need for targeted polio eradication efforts, and recommend that $20,000,000 be made available for purchase and delivery of polio vaccines. The managers urge that funding for HIV/AIDS be maintained at the current level.

The conferees believe that basic education programs are essential both to the well-being of the world's children and to achieving the long-term economic goals of economic growth and trade. In particular, girls' education has multiple benefits, including improved child survival and overall family health. The conferees define basic education to include early childhood and primary education. The conferees strongly believe that strong support for these programs should be maintained and that $108,000,000 should be maintained for children's basic education programs.

DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE

Amendment No. 9: Inserts language designating a combined development assistance account "Development Assistance" instead of "Development Assistance Fund" as proposed by the House and "Economic Assistance" as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 10: Appropriates $1,675,000,000 for "Development Assistance". The House had proposed that funding for development assistance activities by appropriated in three accounts, "Development Assistance Fund", "Children and Disease Programs Fund" and "Development Fund for Africa". The Senate proposed that development assistance activities, certain other activities, and non-Camp David funding from "Economic Support Fund" be appropriated in an account entitled "Economic Assistance". The conference agreement includes development assistance activities, including support for the Inter-American Foundation and the African Development Foundation, in one account and returns non-Camp David funding to "Economic Support Fund".

Funds are recommended for the continued participation of AID in the International Cooperative Biodiversity Group program at a level as close to the current level as possible.

The conferees continue to support the University Development Linkages Program. In addition, the conferees endorse the House report language regarding a proposal to establish an electronic interconnection involving colleges and universities in Latin America.

The conferees urge that the Office of Energy, Environment and Technology at AID be funded at the current level and recommend that AID continue funding for Office of Energy, Environment and Technology activities that promote power sector privatization, innovative technologies, renewable energy, and energy efficiency. The conferees reaffirm support for programs that promote economic development, reduce environmental pollution, and enhance United States industrial leadership in these areas.

The managers suggest that AID maintain the current dollar level of support for agriculture and agricultural research, including but not limited to, $20,000,000 for the collaborative research support program. Also, because of the importance of livestock to the economies of developing countries and to women-run households, the conferees urge AID to support appropriate livestock research.

The conferees urge AID to give a high priority to programs that directly support sustainable economic growth in developing countries. In that regard, the managers urge that AID expand efforts to institutionalize community participation at the local level through core support for organizations that promote self-governance. In addition, organizations such as the Institute for Liberty and Democracy can help stimulate private sector-led growth by helping to apply to other settings the experiences in Peru in generating economic growth through land titling, removal of cumbersome regulations on business, and guaranteeing security of investment.

The managers support the AID Economic Growth Center's emphasis on economic and institutional reform. The managers encourage the Growth Center to identify the most serious domestic government barriers preventing AID recipients from achieving high levels of growth and recommend that AID propose appropriate free-market solutions.

The managers endorse the House report language regarding the need to maintain development assistance support for Latin America.

The managers support funding for management and training programs with ports in the developing world. The conferees urge AID and the State Department to work with U.S. ports and private port organizations, such as the International Port Development Council, Inc., to leverage the skills and expertise of U.S. seaport managers to improve port infrastructure overseas. Bilateral port cooperation will expand U.S. trade opportunities and improve the ability of developing countries to participate in the modern, global economy.

The conferees reaffirm their strong support for U.S. assistance programs that recognize the central role played by women in fostering economic development. The conferees urge AID to sustain support for the Office of Women in Development, including the continued provision of funds from the NIS assistance program.

Amendment No. 11: Inserts language providing that funds for the Inter-American Foundation and the African Development Foundation shall be made available (and apportioned directly to said foundations) from funds appropriated in "Development Assistance". Up to $20,000,000 may be made available for the Inter-American Foundation and up to $11,500,000 may be made available for the African Development Foundation. Senate language on the proportionality of funds made available through the account is deleted.

The conference agreement also provides that up to $25,000,000 may be made available to implement section 667 of the Foreign Assistance Act, and that not less than 65 percent of the funds made available for family planning assistance shall be made available directly to the Agency for International Development's central Office of Population and shall be programmed by that office for family planning activities. The Senate had proposed that not less than $350,000,000 be made available for the latter activities.

The conference agreement also includes Senate language regarding the relative funding levels for activities of private and voluntary organizations and cooperatives, but does not include Senate language requiring a reprogramming notification to waive such language. House language on this matter is addressed in amendment No. 21.

FAMILY PLANNING ASSISTANCE

Amendment No. 12: Inserts language that defines the term "motivate" for purposes of obligating funds available for family planning assistance. The conference agreement modifies Senate language by removing the words "including abortion". This change is not intended to narrow the scope of any of the pregnancy options included in last year's act. The House bill did not address this matter.

DEVELOPMENT FUND FOR AFRICA

Amendment No. 13: Deletes House language referring to the "Development Fund for Africa". The conference agreement does not include a separate appropriations account for this fund, and the reference is no longer necessary. This matter is further addressed in amendments no. 10, 11 and 17.

INTERNATIONAL FUND FOR AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

Amendment No. 14: Inserts Senate language increasing the limitation on funds that may be transferred to "International Organizations and Programs" for a contribution to the International Fund for Agricultural Development from $15,000,000, as proposed by the House, to $30,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 15: Deletes Senate language regarding a prohibition on funds for Zaire and an earmark for the International Fertilizer Development Center. The prohibition on funding for Zaire is addressed in amendment no. 36.

The managers support funding for the center as proposed in the Senate amendment.

UNITED STATES TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRAINING INSTITUTE

Amendment No. 16: Inserts language providing that not less than $650,000 should be provided for support of the United States Telecommunications Training Institute. The Senate language would have mandated funding at $800,000. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

DEVELOPMENT FUND FOR AFRICA

Amendment No. 17: Deletes House language providing for a separate "Development Fund for Africa" account. Funding for this purpose, and a statutory reference to "Development Fund for Africa", has been included in "Development Assistance" in amendments no. 10 and 11.

The merger of bilateral development assistance funding into a single appropriations account is designed to allow the Administration the flexibility to respond to changing priorities with fewer resources. However, it does not indicate a lessening of interest in Africa; the managers expect that a major portion of the resources provided in the "Development Assistance" account will be committed to programs in sub-Saharan Africa, and have included bill language to require the President to seek to ensure that the amount of funds available for Africa for development assistance in fiscal year 1996 is in substantially the same proportion to the total amount available for development assistance as the funding provided in fiscal year 1995. Activities in Africa should be managed under the authorities of chapter 10 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

The managers anticipate that AID will continue the reforms undertaken under the Development Fund for Africa that focus its limited funds on a smaller number of countries where the governments are committed to development policies that will promote equitable and sustainable economic growth. Concurrently, the managers expect that Africa humanitarian resources will be managed in a way that promotes long-term development, as development resources are programmed to minimize short-term crises. The Greater Horn of Africa initiative is a good example of such an effort.

CYPRUS

Amendment No. 18: Inserts language earmarking $15,000,000 for Cyprus to be used only for scholarships, scholarship administrative costs, bicommunal projects, and measures aimed at reunification. The conference agreement is similar to Senate language, but allows for funds to be derived from both "Development Assistance" and "Economic Support Fund", and provides authority to use funds for administrative costs.

BURMA

Amendment No. 19: Inserts language providing that not less than $2,380,000 of the funds appropriated in "Development Assistance" and in "Economic Support Fund" will be available for programs in Burma. These funds would be used to strengthen democracy, support humanitarian assistance, and provide for support to a nongovernmental organization for a crop substitution project in Burma.

For the past two years, the conferees have urged the Administration to provide meaningful levels of assistance to refugees and exiles supporting the restoration of democracy in Burma. Although the Administration agreed in writing to obligate no less than $1,000,000 in such support for fiscal year 1995, the commitment to the Congress was not fulfilled.

The release of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi represents a unique opportunity to support initiatives to implement the results of the 1990 elections and strengthen free market principles and practices. The conferees have designated not less than $2,380,000 to support students, organizations, and ethnic groups, including the Karen, Karenni, and Kachin dedicated to these goals. The conferees direct AID and the Department of State, in consultation with the Congress, to prepare a report sixty days after enactment of this Act on a plan for the expenditure of these resources.

PRIVATE AND VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

Amendment No. 20: Inserts Senate language allowing the Administrator of AID to waive, on a case-by-case basis, the requirement that no funds may be made available to private and voluntary organizations which obtain less than 20 percent of total funding for international activities from sources other than the United States government. The managers agree such authority should only be used in emergency or extraordinary situations, and that the Administrator should report to the Committees on Appropriations each time the waiver is used.

Amendment No. 21: Restores House language stating that funds appropriated or otherwise made available under title II should be made available to private and voluntary organizations at a level which is equivalent to the level provided in fiscal year 1995. This matter is also addressed in amendment no. 11.

INTERNATIONAL DISASTER ASSISTANCE

Amendment No. 22: Appropriates $181,000,000 for disaster assistance instead of $200,000,000 as proposed by the House and $175,000,000 as proposed by the Senate in amendment no. 29.

The conference agreement also inserts Senate language (proposed in amendment no. 29) providing that $40,000,000 should be made available for emergency humanitarian assistance in the former Yugoslavia (of which not less than $6,000,000 shall be available only for Kosova) and modifies such language to allow these funds to come from any appropriations account within title II of this Act.

DEBT RESTRUCTURING

Amendment No. 23: Deletes Senate language earmarking funds for "Debt restricting" from "Economic Assistance", and restores House language providing for a direct appropriation of such funds.

Amendment No. 24: Appropriates $10,000,000 for "Debt Restructuring" instead of $7,000,000 as proposed by the House or earmarking such funds from "Economic Assistance" as proposed by the Senate. The conference agreement also restores House language allowing for debt restructuring of loans owed to the United States as a result of concessional loans made to eligible Latin American and Caribbean countries. The managers endorse the House report language regarding the need to reduce the debt burden on countries participating in debt restructuring, and expect individual reports on the expected new debt that would be assumed by any country proposed for such restructuring including the rationale justifying such additional debt.

MICRO AND SMALL ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM ACCOUNT

Amendment No. 25: Appropriates $1,500,000 for subsidy costs of micro and small enterprise development loans and $500,000 for administrative expenses as proposed by the House instead of earmarking such funds from "Economic Assistance" as proposed by the Senate.

Although the conferees have not designated a specific funding level for microenterprise lending programs, the conferees note a strong bipartisan commitment to these activities. The conferees support the program's emphasis on micro-loans for self-employment as a means to lift the poorest people from poverty. The conferees believe that these programs promote sustainable, market-based development at relatively little cost and deserve support substantially consistent with last year's level. The conferees urge AID, consistent with its Microenterprise Initiative, to allocate up to one-half of its microenterprise funds to poverty lending programs that provide loans of less than $300.

Amendment No. 26: Inserts Senate language allowing up to 70 percent of the principal amount of a micro loan to be guaranteed notwithstanding section 108 of the Foreign Assistance Act.

Amendment No. 27: Inserts Senate language making funds available for obligation until September 30, 1997.

HOUSING GUARANTY PROGRAM ACCOUNT

Amendment No. 28: Appropriates $4,000,000 for the subsidy cost of guaranteed loans. The House had proposed no funding for this purpose, and the Senate had proposed $8,000,000, to be derived from funds appropriated in "Economic Assistance". The conference agreement also includes $7,000,000 as proposed by the House for the administrative costs of the housing guaranty program, instead of earmarking such funds from "Economic Assistance" as proposed by the Senate.

INTERNATIONAL DISASTER ASSISTANCE AND ASSISTANCE TO PAKISTAN

Amendment No. 29: Deletes Senate language providing an appropriation of $175,000,000 for "International Disaster Assistance" and requiring that $40,000,000 of such funds should be made available for emergency humanitarian assistance to the former Yugoslavia. These matters are addressed in amendment no. 22.

Also, deletes Senate language clarifying restrictions on assistance to Pakistan. This matter is addressed in amendment no. 145.

OPERATING EXPENSES OF THE AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Amendment No. 30: Appropriates $465,750,000 for operating expenses of the Agency for International Development as proposed by the House instead of $490,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. The conferees expect the Committees on Appropriations to be informed any time prior to the exercise of the authority to use up to $25,000,000, as provided for under amendment no. 11, for purposes of section 667 of the Foreign Assistance Act.

Amendment No. 31: Inserts language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate that would limit to $1,475,000 the amount of funds available for printing costs, and limit to $25,000 the cost of any individual report without the approval of the Administrator.

The conference agreement also includes new language, similar to Senate language from amendment no. 1, that would prohibit the use of any funds in this Act to relocate the Agency for International Development to the Federal Triangle. The managers expect AID to assess the need for such a move, and to report to the Committees on Appropriations on future plans for a move, if warranted, at a lower cost and with lower rental payments. The prohibitive cost of the proposed relocation to the Federal Triangle building, including exorbitant rental costs, was the primary reason for the decision to prohibit the use of funds for the move.

OPERATING EXPENSES OF THE AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

OFFICE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL

Amendment No. 32: Appropriates $30,200,000 for the operating expenses of the Inspector General as proposed by the Senate instead of $35,200,000 as proposed by the House and makes such funds available for two fiscal years. The managers anticipate that the Inspector General will use deobligated prior year funds in order to maintain an adequate program level.

ECONOMIC SUPPORT FUND

Amendment No. 33: Deletes Senate language inserting "Middle East Fund", and restores House language designating the account "Economic Support Fund".

Amendment No. 34: Appropriates $2,340,000,000 for "Economic Support Fund" instead of $2,300,000,000 as proposed by the House and $2,015,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 35: Inserts language earmarking $1,200,000,000 for Israel on a grant basis and $815,000,000 for Egypt on a grant basis of which not less than $200,000,000 shall be provided by Commodity Import Program assistance, provides that the President assure such assistance does not cause an adverse impact on the total level of non-military exports from the United States to Israel and Egypt, links aid to Egypt and Israel in great measure to their continued participation in the Camp David Accords, and authorizes the use of local currency for increasing the endowment of the American University in Cairo and for projects and programs which promote the preservation and restoration of Egyptian antiquities. This assistance, which utilizes only local currency generated by our foreign assistance program, is a "no-cost" way of fostering U.S. values in a region of the world that is vital to our national interests. This will be the third time Congress has approved a replenishment for the A.U.C. endowment, and the second time Congress has approved assistance for the preservation of Egyptian antiquities. The managers expect the administration to utilize this authority by providing at least the amounts detailed in the legislation. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

Amendment No. 36: Restores House language which prohibits assistance to Zaire.

INTERNATIONAL FUND FOR IRELAND

Amendment No. 37: Appropriates up to $19,600,000 for the International Fund for Ireland as proposed by the House. The Senate bill did not contain a provision on this matter.

The conferees strongly urge the International Fund for Ireland to take every step possible to ensure that all recipients of Fund support are promoting equality of opportunity and non-discrimination in employment.

The conferees note the formation of a distance learning consortium that includes six universities from the United States, Northern Ireland, and the Irish Republic, and suggest that an allocation be provided for support of this service to business and investment in Ireland.

ASSISTANCE FOR EASTERN EUROPE AND THE BALTIC STATES

Amendment No. 38: Inserts a subsection designation as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 39: Appropriates $324,000,000 for "Assistance for Eastern Europe and the Baltic States" as proposed by the House instead of $335,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 40: Inserts a subsection designation as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 41: Inserts a subsection designation as proposed by the Senate.

ASSISTANCE FOR THE NEW INDEPENDENT STATES OF THE FORMER SOVIET UNION

Amendment No. 42: Appropriates $641,000,000 for assistance for the New Independent States of the former Soviet Union (NIS) instead of $580,000,000 as proposed by the House and $705,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees expect that not more than $195,000,000 of the total amount made available under this heading should be provided to Russia in 1996 in consideration of the fact that Russia has been allocated more than 60 percent of the funds obligated under this heading since fiscal year 1993. This matter is addressed in amendment no. 47.

Amendment No. 43: Inserts House language regarding a presidential national security waiver that was deleted by the Senate, and modifies a reference to the Helsinki Final Act.

Amendment No. 44: Deletes Senate language permitting funds to be used for defense conversion.

Amendment No. 45: Inserts language requiring that projects in the NIS should employ in key positions individuals with prior experience in the region and relevant language skills, instead of requiring that organizations previously functioning in the region be given priority in grants and contracts as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 46: Inserts language directing that the Agency for International Development encourage and give significant weight to cost-sharing in its awards of grants and contracts to assist privatization activities within the New Independent States of the former Soviet Union. The House language mandated cost-sharing on a 1 to 1 basis. The conference agreement is not intended to disadvantage private and voluntary organization, but to encourage, to the extent feasible, use of their own resources when implementing private sector programs.

OMNIBUS II PRIVATIZATION PROJECT CONTRACT

The managers support the open competition for contracts under the Omnibus II Privatization Project that resulted in an appreciable number of base contract awards to new and/or small businesses. However, they note that the actual number of task orders awarded to small and new contractors is disappointingly small. The managers direct USAID to take immediate measures to ensure that all awardees receive a fair proportion of task order awards and a chance to perform. A level playing field must be implemented for the competition process as many small and new businesses find it impossible to successfully compete for task orders against large and established USAID contractors. The use of dollar goals and competitions limited to new and/or small firms should be utilized, if necessary, to expand access beyond the Washington D.C. region. The Assistant Administrator for Europe and the New Independent States, in consultation with the Coordinator for Assistance to the NIS, should report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations on progress toward opening the task order process to small businesses and firms not currently under USAID contract, no later than February 15, 1996.

Amendment No. 47: Inserts language providing various directives regarding the allocation and use of funds appropriated for assistance to Ukraine, Russia, Armenia and other independent states of the former Soviet Union. The House bill contained no provisions on this matter other than those addressed in amendments no. 151, 152, and 160.

Inserts language proposed by the Senate with regard to retention of interest by enterprise funds and language allowing any enterprise fund established with respect to more than one country to establish advisory councils in lieu of the appointment of host country nationals to its board of director.

The language also includes Senate provisions that not less than $225,000,000 shall be made available for Ukraine, not less than $85,000,000 shall be made available for Armenia, and that not less than $15,000,000 shall be made available for a Trans-Caucasus Enterprise Fund.

Obligation of funds for Russia is made contingent on a determination by the President that the Government of Russia has terminated implementation of arrangements to provide Iran with certain goods and services related to nuclear programs in Iran. The managers also included a provision allowing the President to waive the provisions of the subsection on national security grounds. The House had no similar provision.

The managers strongly support a program of assistance to the New Independent States that reflects a shift in emphasis toward Ukraine, Armenia, Moldovia, Georgia, the Kyrgyz Republic, and other states that the United States is encouraging to move toward free markets and democracy.

Recent progress by Armenia in carrying out economic reforms is noted by the managers. Because of concern about the impact of the continuing economic blockade and conflict in the region, the conferees have provided $85,000,000 for technical and humanitarian assistance requested by the Government of Armenia, including food, fuel, and medical supplies and services. The managers expect the projects and activities undertaken under this subsection to be in addition to the projects and activities included in the 1996 congressional justification documents.

The managers support funding for the Russian, Eurasian, and East European Research and Training Program (Title VIII) from both the NIS and Eastern Europe and Baltic assistance accounts. The program is intended to assure that broad-based regional expertise is available to both policy managers and the academic community. To the maximum extent possible, funding for this program is recommended at the fiscal year 1995 level. The conference agreement also assumes continuation of other graduate fellowship, partnership, and training projects in the region, such as the Central and Eastern European Graduate fellowship program. Regional student exchange programs, in general, should be distributed equitably among high school, college, and graduate categories.

NIS NON-PROLIFERATION

The managers agree that the Soviet-Designed Reactor Safety Program and implementation of the Russian agreement to cease production of weapons-grade plutonium are essential elements of our foreign and nonproliferation policies. In administering the NIS assistance programs, the Coordinator and AID are urged to expeditiously transfer funds to other federal agencies that are engaged in implementing these non-proliferation programs.

UKRAINE

The managers have provided $225,000,000 for Ukraine, conditioned on additional progress with respect to economic reform. Of this amount, $50,000,000 has been provided to reduce uncertainties in Ukraine's energy supply that have severely impeded its economic recovery and renewed development. The conference agreement assumes that $30,000,000 is to be expended for technical assistance in the energy sector, including assistance to develop regulatory institutions for managing the purchase, licensing, and use of nuclear fuel. The managers urge that none of these funds be used to purchase or pay for oil, natural gas, or nuclear fuel.

Historically, Ukraine has been dependent upon Russia for the technical management of nuclear facilities. As a result, during the Chernobyl crisis, local technicians were not sufficiently skilled, nor prepared to take any action independent of guidance from Moscow. Ongoing concern about the adequacy of safety measures and equipment in Ukraine's nuclear plants has motivated the conferees to recommend that $20,000,000 be made available to meet a request from the Government of Ukraine for the purchase, installation, and training to operate new display and control systems that have the capability to monitor and shut down a facility before a crisis occurs.

The managers have also provided $22,000,000 to strengthen small and medium businesses. Learning from the experience of Russia, the conferees conclude that mass privatization efforts alone do not generate sufficient jobs and income during a period of radical economic and social transition. The managers also support continued assistance to strengthen independent print and broadcast media that appear capable of becoming financially self-sufficient. The availability of accurate, timely information during the current period of transition is key to maintaining support of necessary economic and political reforms.

The conferees continue to view with concern the decision of the Committee for the Implementation of Textile Agreements (CITA) to impose restrictive quotas on textile imports from Ukraine. Testimony earlier this year before the House Committee by the Coordinator of United States Assistance in the New Independent States suggested that every effort should be undertaken to encourage a market economy in Ukraine.

CRIME IN EASTERN EUROPE AND RUSSIA

The managers have provided not less than $12,600,000 for activities in support of training and investigations related to international crime in Central and Eastern Europe, Ukraine and Russia. This is a minimum amount, and the coordinators of aid to Eastern Europe and the NIS should make this a top priority in allocating funds if additional amounts are required.

Corruption and violent crimes have increased markedly over the past year in much of the region, with estimates of many thousands of criminal organizations that are rapidly expanding narcotics smuggling, banking and insurance fraud, extortion and kidnapping activities into Western Europe and the United States. The conferees are particularly concerned about an escalation in the number of reported incidents of smuggling of fissile and nuclear-related materials that could be used by international terrorists.

The managers also inserted a provision allowing the President, under certain limited conditions, to provide only humanitarian assistance for the Government of Azerbaijan for the exclusive use of refugees and displaced persons within Azerbaijan.

INDEPENDENT AGENCY

Amendment No. 48: Inserts language providing for the heading "Independent Agency" instead of "Independent Agencies" as proposed by the House. The Senate amendment deleted the heading.

AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT FOUNDATION

Amendment No. 49: Deletes House language providing an appropriation of $11,500,000 for the African Development Foundation. This matter is further addressed in amendments no. 10 and 11.

INTER-AMERICAN FOUNDATION

Amendment No. 50: Deletes House language providing an appropriation of $20,000,000 for the Inter-American Foundation. This matter is further addressed in amendments no. 10 and 11.

PEACE CORPS

Amendment No. 51: Appropriates $205,000,000 for the Peace Corps instead of $210,000,000 as proposed by the House and $200,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers expect that the Peace Corps and the Trade and Development Agency will receive by transfer from funds appropriated for assistance for the NIS the cost of fiscal year 1996 activities and operations in the NIS.

Amendment No. 52: Inserts Senate language making funds for the Peace Corps available until September 30, 1997.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL

Amendment No. 53: Appropriates $115,000,000 for "International Narcotics Control" instead of $113,000,000 as proposed by the House and $150,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. Authority to transfer additional funds to this account is provided in amendment no. 175.

Amendment No. 54: Deletes language proposed by the Senate earmarking $1,800,000 for a Federal Bureau of Investigation Legal Attaché office in Cairo, Egypt, and $5,000,000 for the Federal Bureau of Investigation and Secret Service to establish and maintain offices in the Triborder area of Argentina, Brazil, and Paraguay.

MIGRATION AND REFUGEE ASSISTANCE

Amendment No. 55: Inserts language allowing the use of funds appropriated under this heading to be used for salaries and expenses of personnel and dependents as authorized by the Foreign Service Act of 1980, and for allowances as authorized by sections 5921 through 5925 of title 5, United States Code. Deletes language proposed by the Senate that would have allowed funds to be used for salaries and expenses of personnel assigned to the Bureau charged with carrying out the Migration and Refugee Assistance Act.

The managers agree that funds for salaries and expenses should be made available for the same purposes as they were made available under this heading in fiscal year 1995, and should not be made available for other purposes.

Since 1991 the United States has provided humanitarian assistance for Tibetan refugees living in exile, and the conferees expect that such support be continued.

Amendment No. 56: Inserts Senate language making available not more than $12,000,000 for administrative expenses.

Amendment No. 57: Deletes House language limiting funds for salaries and expenses of personnel assigned to the Bureau charged with carrying out the Migration and Refugee Assistance Act.

Amendment No. 58: Inserts Senate language earmarking not less than $80,000,000 for refugees from the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe and other refugees resettling in Israel. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

REFUGEE RESETTLEMENT ASSISTANCE

Amendment No. 59: Appropriates $5,000,000 for "Refugee Resettlement Assistance" as proposed by the House. The Senate bill did not contain a provision on this matter.

ANTI-TERRORISM ASSISTANCE

Amendment No. 60: Appropriates $16,000,000 for "Anti-Terrorism Assistance" instead of $17,000,000 as proposed by the House and $15,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

TITLE III—MILITARY ASSISTANCE FUNDS APPROPRIATED TO THE PRESIDENT

INTERNATIONAL MILITARY EDUCATION AND TRAINING

Amendment No. 61: Appropriates $39,000,000 as proposed by the House instead of $19,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. The Senate supported full funding for IMET in fiscal year 1996 but proposed $19,000,000 from this Act and $20,000,000 from the Department of Defense.

Amendment No. 62: Inserts Senate language adding Guatemala as a nation prohibited from receiving IMET funding. This matter is also addressed in amendments no. 63 and 176.

Amendment No. 63: Deletes language proposed by the House permitting expanded IMET training only for Guatemala and retains House language permitting expanded IMET training only for Indonesia. The managers have agreed to permit "expanded" IMET assistance for Indonesia because they believe that expanded IMET could address some of the human rights concerns associated with the Indonesian military. The conferees expect the IMET courses to focus on human rights, military justice, and civilian management and control of the armed forces, and the courses should include members of the Indonesian legislature and representatives from nongovernmental organizations.

FOREIGN MILITARY FINANCING PROGRAM

Amendment No. 64: Appropriates $3,208,390,000 instead of $3,211,279,000 as proposed by the House and $3,207,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 65: Inserts Senate language earmarking not less than $1,800,000,000 for grants only for Israel and not less than $1,300,000,000 for grants only for Egypt. Inserts language proposed in both House and Senate bills making funds available for advanced weapons systems of which not less than $475,000,000 shall be available for procurement in Israel of defense articles and services, including research and development, and deletes Senate language making funds available for advanced fighter aircraft programs and up to $150,000,000 for research and development in the United States.

CENTRAL EUROPE

The conferees note that Poland, the Czech Republic, Hungary, and the Slovak Republic are all considering the replacement of many of their Air Forces' high performance aircraft. The managers urge the Administration to take steps to ensure that U.S.-produced aircraft can compete effectively for these sales. For this reason, the conferees urge the administration to support any possible sale of high performance U.S. fighter aircraft to these nations.

ALIZA MARCUS

The managers are concerned that Aliza Marcus, a Reuters journalist and U.S. citizen, is being tried in Turkey on charges of "provoking racial hatred" for reporting on the Turkish military's forced evaluation and destruction of villages in southeastern Turkey. The conferees recognize Turkey's legitimate right to combat terrorism, and expect that the government of Turkey will protect freedom of expression and information by interceding with the military-sponsored State Security Courts on behalf of Aliza Marcus.

Amendment No. 72: Inserts a limitation of $23,250,000 for expenses for administering military assistance instead of $24,000,000 as provided by the House and $22,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The language also permits subscription for the callable capital portion of the United States share of increases in the capital stock of the North American Development Bank totaling $318,750,000 as proposed by the House and the Senate. The appropriation for the Multilateral Investment Fund contained in the Senate amendment is addressed in amendment no. 82.

INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS AND PROGRAMS

Amendment No. 89: Appropriates $285,000,000 for "International Organizations and Programs" instead of $155,000,000 as proposed by the House and $260,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. Within these funds, the managers expect that $100,000,000 will be made available for a grant to UNICEF.

The conferees recognize the vital role UNDP plays as the coordinating agency for United Nations activities in support of sustainable development worldwide.

Amendment No. 90: Deletes an earmark of $3,000,000 for the World Food Program that was proposed by the Senate. The conferees urge the Secretary of State to provide $3,000,000 for the World Food Program in fiscal year 1996, the same amount prior conferees have urged in the past two statements of managers. The conferees recognize that the World Food Program plays an essential role in providing food and other aid to the neediest people in the world, especially in conflict zones such as Bosnia and parts of sub-Saharan Africa.

No funds are available for KEDO funding for administrative expenses and heavy fuel oil costs beyond the total amount included for KEDO in the fiscal year 1996 congressional presentation. The conference agreement further provides that these funds may only be made available if the President determines and certifies in writing to the Congress that certain specific actions have been undertaken in support of the Agreed Framework with North Korea. The managers agree that none of the funds in this bill that are made available for KEDO in fiscal year 1996 may be used to contribute to the lightwater nuclear reactors being provided to North Korea under the terms of the Agreed Framework. This matter is also addressed in amendment no. 164.

Amendment No. 95: Deletes Senate language earmarking $1,500,000 for the United Nations Fund for Victims of Torture. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

The conferees urge the Secretary of State to provide a total of $2,250,000 for the United Nations Fund for Victims of Torture and the United Nations Development Fund for Women in fiscal 1996.

COMMERCE AND TRADE

Amendment No. 105: Inserts Senate language regarding notifications on actions authorized by this section.

NOTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS

Amendment No. 106: Inserts language subjecting "Development Assistance" to the notification requirements of this section. The House had proposed that such requirements be applied to "Child Survival and Disease Programs Fund", "Development Assistance Fund", and "Development Fund for Africa". The Senate had deleted these accounts from the notification requirements and had inserted a new account, "Economic Assistance". The notification requirements now conform to the account structure contained in the conference agreement.

Amendment No. 107: Restores House language which includes "Economic Support Fund" in the notification requirements of section 515.

Amendment No. 108: Restores House language which subjected "Inter-American Foundation" and "African Development Foundation" to the notification requirements of section 515.

Amendment No. 118: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate that exempts Indonesia from the special notification requirements of section 520 for the purpose of obligating or expending funds for development assistance activities. This exemption is no longer necessary, since Indonesia is no longer subject to the special notification requirements of section 520.

Child Survival and AIDS Activities

Amendment No. 119: Deletes Senate language inserting the words "Family Planning" in the heading of this section.

Prohibition Against Direct Funding to Certain Countries

Amendment No. 120: Deletes Senate language requiring the President to certify that withholding indirect funding for certain countries would be contrary to the national security interest of the United States prior to the obligation of funds. The conference agreement would require the certification to be made based on the national interest of the United States.

Authorization Requirement

Amendment No. 121: Inserts Senate language waiving the provisions of section 10 of Public Law 91-672 and section 15 of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 for funds appropriated by this Act. The House bill would have subjected the funds to the provisions of these sections.

SUPPORT FOR AUTHORIZATION PROCESS

The managers regret that they must recommend waiving the statutory authorization requirement for most programs in this bill in order to avoid passing what would be in effect a partial year appropriation.

The Committees on International Relations and Foreign Relations have gone to great lengths this year to end the decade-long stalemate over foreign aid authorizations. The majority of the managers have supported that effort and will continue to do so. Only through the enactment of an authorization bill for foreign aid will the Committees on Appropriations be able to benefit from formal legislative guidance as they apportion the spending allocations for programs under their jurisdiction.

Under the current situation, in which the House has passed an authorization for foreign assistance and the Senate is attempting to complete action on its counterpart measure under an agreement to limit time for further consideration, the managers have been asked by members of authorization committees to include in the conference report substantial legislation such as the Middle East Peace Facilitation Act and the NATO Participation Act, as well as extension of the au pair program. In addition, the managers have gone to some effort to conform spending levels to authorization levels passed by the House or reported in the Senate, taking into consideration that the two authorization bills contain differing ceilings in many accounts.

Prohibition on Bilateral Assistance to Terrorist Countries

Amendment No. 122: Inserts Senate language prohibiting bilateral assistance to terrorist countries.

Commercial Leasing of Defense Articles

Amendment No. 123: Deletes an excess "and".

Competitive Insurance

Authority to Assist Bosnia-Herzegovina

Amendment No. 131: Inserts Senate language authorizing the President to transfer to the government of Bosnia-Hercegovina, without reimbursement and subject to prior notification of the Committees on Appropriations, defense articles from the stocks of the Defense Department and defense services of the Department of Defense of an aggregate value not to exceed $100,000,000. The House bill contained a limitation of $50,000,000 on the value of such articles and services.

Restrictions on the Termination of Sanctions Against Serbia and Montenegro

Amendment No. 132: Inserts language allowing the President to waive the provisions of section 540A only for the purposes of meeting emergency humanitarian assistance or to achieve a negotiated settlement of the conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina that is acceptable to the parties.

In addition, the conference agreement includes language proposed by the Senate expanding the authority of section 660(b) of the Foreign Assistance Act to allow police training with respect to sanctions monitoring and enforcement, and to reconstitute civilian police authority under certain circumstances. The conferees recognize that there may be instances when there is no practical alternative to utilizing U.S. military personnel to conduct short-term training of civilian police. The conferees intend that any such use of U.S. military personnel for police training should be on a limited, short-term basis.

Special Authorities

Amendment No. 133: Deletes Haiti from the list of countries and programs for which funds are made available notwithstanding any other provision of law, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 134: Restores House language, stricken by the Senate, that would have deleted displaced Burmese from the list of countries and programs for which funds are made available notwithstanding any other provision of law.

Amendment No. 135: Inserts language which requires the President to terminate assistance to the military of any country or organization that he determines is cooperating, tactically or strategically, with the Khmer Rouge in their military operations, or to the military of which the President determines is not taking steps to prevent a pattern or practice of commercial relations with the Khmer Rouge. The conferees are concerned by reports that Thai military personnel are engaging in cooperative commercial relations with the Khmer Rouge in the export of timber and gems. The conferees believe that meaningful efforts should be made by the government of Thailand and the Thai military to halt this source of income for the Khmer Rouge.

Anti-Narcotics Activities

Amendment No. 136: Restores House language allowing funds appropriated in "Economic Support Fund" to be used for administration of justice programs in Latin America and the Caribbean. The Senate language would have stricken the reference to "Economic Support Fund" and replaced it with a reference to "Economic Assistance". The disposition of this amendment conforms with the conference agreement on the account structure for bilateral assistance.

Eligibility for Assistance

Amendment No. 137: Deletes Senate language referring to titles I and II of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954.

Earmarks

Amendment No. 138: Inserts Senate language governing the application of earmarks contained in the conference agreement. The House bill did not contain this language, since it contained no earmarks.

Amendment No. 139: Inserts Senate language changing the heading to include the words "and Earmarks".

Excess Defense Articles

Amendment No. 140: Deletes House provision which requires that excess defense articles transferred to Jordan be subject to section 534 of this Act and inserts language making Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania eligible for receipt of lethal excess defense articles.

Amendment No. 141: Deletes Senate language which allows the President to transfer lethal excess defense articles to Estonia. This matter is addressed in amendment No. 140.

Prohibition on Publicity or Propaganda

Amendment No. 142: Inserts language limiting use of funds for development education to $750,000,000 instead of a funding prohibition as proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate.

Export Financing Transfer Authorities

Amendment No. 143: Deletes Senate Language changing the reference for export financing agencies from title I to title IV. Title I of the bill contains the funding for export financing agencies.

Landmines

Amendment No. 144: Inserts Senate language which amends the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1993 to extend by one year the existing moratorium on transfers of antipersonnel landmines under the authorities of the Foreign Assistance Act and the Arms Export Control Act.

Pakistan

Amendment No. 145: Deletes House language requiring a GAO report, and inserts language which amends section 620E of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 regarding Pakistan as follows: allows the transfer of military equipment to Pakistan (other than F-16 aircraft) contracted for prior to October 1, 1990; provides that the restrictions in section 620E continue to apply to contracts for the delivery of F-16 aircraft; provides that the prohibitions in section 620E do not apply to assistance provided for counternarcotics purposes, military to military contact, IMET training, humanitarian and civic assistance, peacekeeping (except that lethal military equipment can only be leased or loaned), and antiterrorism activities; and provides further that the President may release Pakistan of storage costs for item purchased but not delivered and may reimburse Pakistan for such amounts paid provided that such payments have no budgetary impact.

The conferees believe that in light of this important administration policy initiative, the administration should provide to the Committees on Appropriations, not later than April 1, 1996, a report on conventional force reduction and non-proliferation in south Asia. This report should include an assessment of the strategic and conventional balance in the region, efforts taken by the United States to achieve regional agreement on nuclear non-proliferation and conventional force reductions, the role of United States aid in achieving these objectives, and progress being made by nations in the region in meeting U.S. non-proliferation objectives. This report should be unclassified to the extent possible, with a classified addendum if required.

The conferees also note that the State Department has determined that the Pressler amendment prohibition applies to government to government sales of military equipment while the commercial sale of military equipment is subject to especially rigorous case by case license review. The conferees believe that certain items which may promote border security and stability, such as border surveillance equipment, radar, and radar warning receivers should be reviewed, consistent with current law, in light of their contribution as confidence building measures contributing to security in border areas in the region.

Restrictions Concerning the Palestinian Authority

Amendment No. 146: Inserts Senate language replacing the word "subsection" with the word "restriction".

Limitation on Assistance to Countries That Restrict the Transport or Delivery of United States Humanitarian Assistance

Amendment No. 147: Restores House language stricken by the Senate which prohibits funds for any country if the government of such country prohibits or otherwise restricts, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of United States humanitarian assistance and further provides the President waiver authority if he determines it to be in the national security interest. This matter is addressed in amendment No. 174.

Non-overtime Differential Pay

Amendment No. 148: Deletes language proposed by the Senate that would allow a Foreign Service Officer who is a criminal investigator for the AID Office of Inspector General to receive non-overtime differential pay.

References to Authorization Acts

Prohibition on Funding for Abortion

Amendment No. 150: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House agree to recede from their disagreement in a technical sense only. The substance of the House amendment will be addressed by the House managers during further consideration by the House of amendment no. 115, an amendment in disagreement.

Withholding of Assistance to Countries Supporting Nuclear Plant in Cuba

Amendment No. 151: Inserts Senate language providing a subsection designation and heading for the first subsection.

Amendment No. 152: Inserts language providing for several exceptions to the withholding of funds to any country that supports the completion of the nuclear facility at Juragua, near Cienfuegos, Cuba. The exceptions include assistance to meet urgent humanitarian needs, including disaster assistance and refugee relief; democratic political reform and rule of law activities; the creation of private sector and nongovernmental organizations that are independent of government control; the development of a free market economic system; and assistance for the purposes described in the Cooperative Threat Reduction Act of 1993 (Nunn-Lugar). The conference agreement deletes subsection (c) of the Senate amendment, regarding definitions.

Limitation on Funds for Haiti

Amendment No. 153: Restores House language stricken by the Senate prohibiting assistance for Haiti when it is made known to the President that the Government of Haiti is controlled by a regime holding power through means other than the democratic elections scheduled for calendar year 1995 and held in substantial compliance with the requirements of the 1987 Constitution of Haiti.

Purchase of American Made Equipment and Products

Amendment No. 154: Restores House language stricken by the Senate that expresses the Sense of the Congress that all equipment and products purchased with funds made available by this Act should be American-made. The language also requires that, to the greatest extent practicable, each entity receiving financial assistance or funding through this Act should be provided a notice describing the Sense of the Congress provision.

Limitation on Assistance to Turkey

Amendment No. 155: Inserts a limitation of $33,500,000 for ESF for Turkey instead of the House limitation of $21,000,000.

Limitation of Funds for the North American Development Bank

Amendment No. 156: Inserts language limiting the use of community adjustment and investment programs of the North American Development Bank to those set out in the binational agreement under which the Bank was established. The Senate bill contained no provision on this matter.

The managers direct that funds appropriated for the North American Development Bank's Community Adjustment and Investment Program (CAIP) be limited to the purposes as defined in the binational agreement establishing the Bank, specifically adjustment assistance and investment relate to trade. The conferees expect CAIP funds to be restricted to communities or businesses that can clearly demonstrate adverse foreign trade-induced economic impact and that otherwise cannot secure financing from commercial lenders. It is further expected that projects in trade-impacted communities should focus on job creation, job retention, and retooling.

The managers do not recommend funding for the Bank in order for it to serve as a pass-through for existing federal programs. The managers oppose the use of CAIP funds for personnel or operating expenses of other federal entities participating in CAIP projects. The Committees on Appropriations will closely monitor compliance with these directives when considering fiscal year 1997 funding for the Bank.

To increase accountability, the managers recommend that the North American Development Bank make the final determination regarding both CAIP eligibility criteria and endorsement of projects for financing on a case-by-case basis.

Limitation on Funds for Burma

Amendment No. 157: Restores House language stricken by the Senate prohibiting funds in this Act from being used for international narcotics control or crop substitution assistance for the government of Burma. The Senate amendment would have allowed such assistance if the Secretary of State certified that it was fully consistent with United States human rights concerns in Burma and serve a vital United States national interest. The Senate amendment also extended to such assistance the reporting requirements of chapter 8 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act.

Asian Development Bank and International Development Association

Amendment No. 158: Inserts language to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe to the fourth general capital increase of the Asian Development Bank and authorizes appropriations of $66,614,647 over the multi-year period. Also, inserts a new section 572 providing the authority for the Secretary of the Treasury to make a contribution of $700,000,000 to the International Development Association. The amount is the same as the appropriation for IDA in amendment no. 78.

SPECIAL DEBT RELIEF FOR THE POOREST

Amendment No. 159: Inserts language proposed by the Senate authorizing the President to reduce debt provided to certain countries under the Foreign Assistance Act and the Arms Export Control Act. In addition, the conference agreement inserts language authorizing the President to engage in debt buybacks and sales, including debt-for-equity swaps, debt-for-development swaps, or debt-for-nature swaps. The inclusion of such language is consistent with the House language contained in the conference agreement on "Debt Restructuring" in amendment no. 24.

LIMITATION ON FUNDS FOR RUSSIA

Amendment No. 160: Strikes House language limiting the amount of fund under the heading "Assistance for the New Independent States of the Former Soviet Union" that may be made available for Russia as proposed by the Senate. The managers expect that not more than $195,000,000 of the total amount made available in this bill for the former Soviet Union should be provided to Russia in fiscal year 1996.

LIMITATION ON ASSISTANCE TO MEXICO

Amendment No. 161: Deletes language contained in the House bill and stricken by the Senate limiting assistance to Mexico.

The managers expect the United States government to continue to urge the government of Mexico to take actions to reduce the amount of illegal drug entering the United States from Mexico, and to take effective law enforcement actions to deal with illegal drug activities, especially illegal narcotics trafficking.

HUMAN RIGHTS IN ETHIOPIA

Amendment No. 162: Deletes House language requiring the State Department to closely monitor and take into account human rights progress in Ethiopia as it obligates fiscal year 1996 assistance for that country. The managers expect the Department of State to continue to be attentive to this important issue.

BASIC EDUCATION OF CHILDREN

Amendment No. 163: Deletes House language providing that not more than $108,000,000 from the AID "Children and Disease Programs Fund" may be used for basic education for children. The conference agreement does not contain such a fund.

KOREAN PENINSULA ENERGY DEVELOPMENT ORGANIZATION

Amendment No. 164: Deletes Senate language. This matter is addressed in amendment no. 94.

DRAWDOWN AUTHORITY FOR JORDAN

Amendment No. 165: Inserts Senate language which provides that the President may direct the drawdown of up to $100,000,000 of defense articles, service and training from the Department of Defense for Jordan.

An important opportunity exists to promote the ongoing Arab-Israeli peace process which the administration can seize without the need for additional appropriated funds. Jordan's signing of a treaty of peace with Israel and its break with Iraq has now exposed Jordan to the risks of peace. Jordan's assumption of these burdens should be acknowledged by including Jordan with Israel and Egypt for the statutory designation of a major "non-NATO" ally. Further, the administration should honor this increased risk to Jordan's security brought about by its break with Iraq and accepting peace with Israel by carefully reviewing the Government of Jordan's request to acquire up to 80 Egyptian-American built M1A1 tanks to address its near-term security needs.

FEDERAL PROHIBITION OF FEMALE GENITAL MULTILATION

Amendment No. 166: Deletes Senate language amending chapter 7 of title 18, United States Code, imposing fines and criminal penalties on those who violate the provisions of the proposed amendment regarding female mutilation. The Senate amendment would have also required the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct information and education activities regarding female mutilation.

The managers urge the authorization committees of the Congress to review this issue as soon as possible, and to report legislation as appropriate.

LIBERIA

Amendment No. 167: Inserts language, amending Public Law 102–270, that would exempt Liberia from the provisions of section 620(q) of the Foreign Assistance Act and section 512 of this Act. The new language would exempt assistance to Liberia from provisions of these sections for funds appropriated in this Act. The Senate amendment would have provided a permanent exemption for Liberia from these sections, and also included language expressing the sense of the Congress regarding the peace process in Liberia. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

ANNUAL REPORT ON ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL GROWTH

Amendment No. 168: Inserts language which requires the President to submit an annual report to the appropriate committees providing a concise overview of the prospects for economic and social growth on a broad, equitable and sustainable basis in countries receiving assistance under title II of this Act, to include criteria regarding wage and price controls, State ownership production and distribution, State control of financial institutions, trade and investment, capital and profit repatriation, tax and private property protections and a country's commitment to stimulate education, health and human development. The report shall be submitted with the Administration's annual congressional presentation for appropriations.

BUY AMERICA PROVISIONS FOR MAPPING & SURVEYING SERVICES

Amendment No. 169: Inserts Senate language requiring that, to the maximum extent possible, the funds provided in this Act shall be used to provide surveying and mapping related services through contracts entered into through competitive bidding to qualified United States contractors. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

ENERGY SAVINGS AT FEDERAL FACILITIES

Amendment No. 170: Deletes Senate language requiring agencies funded in this Act to achieve certain specified energy savings. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

REPORTS REGARDING HONG KONG

Amendment No. 171: Inserts language requiring a March 31, 1996 report on Hong Kong consistent with the provisions of the United States-Hong Kong Policy Act of 1992, and includes Senate language regarding the content of said report. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

HONDURAS

Amendment No. 172: Deletes Senate language regarding Honduras.

The conferees note that during the 1980's, a secret Honduran army death squad known as Battalion 316 allegedly engaged in a campaign of systematically kidnapping, torturing and murdering suspected subversives. Victims included Honduran students, teachers, labor leaders, and journalists. Also, in 1993 there were reportedly 184 unsolved cases of persons who were allegedly "disappeared", and are presumed dead. The conferees urge the President to order the expedited declassification of any documents in the possession of the United States Government pertaining to persons who allegedly "disappeared" in Honduras, and promptly make such documents available to Honduran authorities who are seeking to determine the fate of these individuals.

REPORT ON RUSSIAN MILITARY OPERATIONS

Amendment No. 173: Deletes Senate language which requires the President to declassify and resubmit to the Congress no later than three months after the date of enactment a report on Russian military operations as required by section 528 of Public Law 103–236.

The conferees request that the Administration submit to Congress a declassified version of the report submitted pursuant to section 528 of P.L. 103–236. The conferees understand declassification will be to the maximum extent possible.

The report shall also provide an unclassified assessment of: (a) Russian compliance with the Russian-Moldovan agreement of October 24, 1994; (b) allegations of Russian involvement in the September 1994 coup attempt against the Azerbaijan government; (c) the Russian deployment of troops of the Ministry of Defense, Ministry of Interior, or any other security agency to secure the borders of the New Independent States (NIS) of the former Soviet Union; (d) Russian efforts to integrate the security, defense and intelligence forces of the government of the NIS; and (e) compliance with the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe.

LIMITATION ON ASSISTANCE TO COUNTRIES THAT RESTRICT THE TRANSPORT OF DELIVERY OF UNITED STATES HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE

Amendment No. 174: Deletes Senate language which prohibits funds for any country if the government of such country prohibits or otherwise restricts, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of United States humanitarian assistance. This matter is addressed in amendment No. 147.

Amendment No. 175: Inserts language providing that up to $20,000,000 of the funds made available through "Development Assistance" or "Economic Support Fund" may be transferred to "International Narcotics Control". Senate language would have required such a transfer from funds made available to the Agency for International Development. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

GUATEMALA

Amendment No. 176: Deletes Senate language and inserts new language which allows the Guatemalan military to receive expanded IMET only, or FMF funds only if the President certifies that the Guatemalan military is cooperating with efforts to resolve human rights abuses. The prohibitions included in this section shall not apply to funds made available to implement a cease-fire or peace agreement. Any funds made available are subject to the regular notification procedures of the Committees on Appropriations. This matter is addressed in amendment No. 63.

The conferees commend the Guatemalan President for his efforts to negotiate a peaceful settlement of the civil war in Guatemala and to improve respect for human rights and the rule of law. The conferees are disturbed by reports that members of the military and security forces continue to commit human rights abuses including several cases involving American citizens. The conferees have included a provision which conditions aid to the military and security forces on their cooperation in resolving human rights abuses which their members are alleged to have committed, ordered or attempted to thwart the investigation of. The conferees intend that the cases listed in the April 7, 1995 bipartisan letter to President Clinton by twelve members of the U.S. Senate, as well as the murder of U.S. Ambassador John Gordon Mein, should be among those of particular concern.

PERU AND NARCOTICS

Amendment No. 177: Deletes Senate language making a number of findings regarding actions by the government of Peru involving illegal drug activities, and expressing the sense of the Senate on the provision of military equipment to Peru for drug interdiction activities. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

ASSISTANCE TO TURKEY

Amendment No. 178: Deletes Senate language earmarking $5,000,000 of ESF funds for Turkey to promote economic growth, cultural and ethnic tolerance, human rights activities, and non-governmental organizations in southeastern Turkey.

HONG KONG ELECTIONS

Amendment No. 179: Deletes Senate language making a number of findings regarding elections in Hong Kong, and expressing the sense of the Congress regarding various aspects of these elections. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

SENSE OF THE SENATE ON THAILAND

Amendment No. 180: Deletes Senate sense of the Senate language regarding the Government of Thailand's relations with the Khmer Rouge.

EXTENSION OF TIED AID CREDIT PROGRAM

Amendment No. 181: Inserts Senate language extending through 1997 the authority of the Export-Import Bank to conduct tied aid credit programs. Deletes Senate language authorizing a demonstration project.

CONVENTIONAL WEAPONS REVIEW

Amendment No. 182: Inserts Senate language which requires that for a period of one year beginning three years after the date of enactment of this Act, the United States shall not use antipersonnel landmines except along internationally recognized national borders or in demilitarized zones within a perimeter marked area that is monitored by military personnel and protected by adequate means to ensure the exclusion of civilians. The managers agree that this issue must be closely monitored in the period leading up to the moratorium's implementation and that the case of Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, must be carefully reviewed in light of the moratorium's application to this especially sensitive facility.

The conferees recognize the global crisis caused by unexploded landmines. According to the Department of State, there are an estimated 80,000,000 to 110,000,000 landmines deployed in 62 countries. As a result, the conferees urge the President to actively encourage other governments to join the U.S. in solving the global landmine problem by implementing moratoria on the use of antipersonnel landmines similar to the U.S. moratorium as a step toward the elimination of antipersonnel landmines.

The conferees recommend that the U.S. should not sell, license for export, or otherwise transfer defense articles and services to any foreign government which, as determined by the President, sells, exports or otherwise transfers antipersonnel landmines.

EXTENSION OF AU PAIR PROGRAMS

Amendment No. 183: Inserts language extending the authority for the Au Pair program of the U.S. Information Agency through fiscal year 1996. The Senate amendment would have extended such authority through fiscal year 1998. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

AUTHORIZATION REQUIREMENT

Amendment No. 184: Deletes Senate language regarding authorization requirements for funds provided in this Act. This matter is addressed in amendment No. 121.

CROATIAN-AMERICAN ENTERPRISE FUND

Amendment No. 185: Deletes Senate language authorizing the creation of a Croatian-American Enterprise Fund. The language would also have earmarked $12,000,000 for such fund from "Assistance for Eastern Europe and the Baltic States".

SANCTIONS AGAINST COUNTRIES HARBORING WAR CRIMINALS

Amendment No. 186: Inserts language that would not allow funds appropriated in this Act to be made available for the government of any country that is knowingly granting sanctuary to war criminals. Such criminals would include those indicted by the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia or the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, or Nazi war criminals. The Senate language would have restricted bilateral and multilateral assistance provided in such fiscal year for any country which harbored war criminals. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

RUSSIAN COMPLIANCE WITH THE CFE TREATY AND PRIORITIES FOR MODIFYING EXISTING ARMS AGREEMENTS

Amendment No. 187: Deletes Senate language. The conferees consider compliance with the terms of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (CFE) an important priority in U.S. relations with the Russian Federation. The conferees believe the Treaty provides adequate means by which the Russian Federation can meet its military requirements for treaty limited equipment in the flank zones defined by Article V of the Treaty. The conferees strongly believe that efforts by the Government of Russia to modify CFE Treaty obligations, including those regarding movement or deployment of treaty limited equipment on the flanks, must be resolved through negotiations, not unilateral reinterpretation.

Amendment No. 188: This matter is dealt with in Amendment No. 192.

LIMITATION ON ASSISTANCE TO HAITI

Amendment No. 189: Deletes Senate language and inserts language which prohibits the availability of funds for Haiti unless the President determines that the government of Haiti is conducting thorough investigations of political and extrajudicial killings and cooperating with U.S. authorities in the investigation of political and extrajudicial killings. The managers agree that nothing in subsection (a) shall be construed to restrict the provision of humanitarian or electoral assistance to Haiti. The President may waive the requirements of this section if he determines and certifies to the appropriate committees of Congress that it is the national interest of the United States or necessary to ensure the safe and timely withdrawal of American forces from Haiti.

LIMITATION ON FUNDS TO THE TERRITORY OF THE BOSNIA-CROAT FEDERATION

Amendment No. 190: Inserts Senate language limiting United States assistance to Bosnia and Herzegovina (other than refugee and disaster assistance, and assistance for restoration of certain infrastructure) to the territory of the Bosnia-Croat Federation. The House bill contained no provision on this matter.

PLAN RECOMMENDING A STRATEGIC REORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Amendment No. 191: Deletes Senate language requiring a plan for a strategic reorganization of the United Nations.

On the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the United Nations, the conferees concur with the Administration's stated intention to implement significant management and financial reforms. Accordingly the conferees request a report to be submitted in conjunction with the fiscal year 1997 budget request regarding reorganization of the United Nations. The report should include proposals to achieve (a) reductions in the number of agencies within the UN system including proposals to abolish, consolidate or restructure financing mechanisms for agencies with low priority; (b) the identification and strengthening of core agencies; (c) the increased cooperation and elimination of duplication between UN headquarters and offices in Geneva and the merger of technical cooperation functions of various UN agencies; (d) the consolidation of the UN emergency response mechanisms by merging functions in relevant agencies; and (e) improvements in the administrative and management capabilities of the Secretary General.

NATO PARTICIPATION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1995

Amendment No. 192: Inserts language which amends the NATO Participation Act of 1994 and provides that the President should evaluate the degree to which any country emerging from communist domination which has expressed its interest in joining NATO meets certain specified criteria. The President may within 60 days designate one or more of these countries as eligible to receive assistance under the program established by the NATO Participation Act of 1994.

TITLE VI—MIDDLE EAST PEACE FACILITATION ACT OF 1995

Inserts additional language to the Senate proposed "Middle East Peace Facilitation Act of 1995" (which extends the authority of the President to waive certain provisions of law to facilitate the provision of U.S. assistance in support of the Middle East peace process). The House provisions increase accountability and provide additional detailed oversight over the provision of U.S. funds in support of the Middle East peace process, either directly or indirectly, to the P.L.O., the Palestinian Authority, and successor entities. The managers further agree to extend the President's authority to suspend certain provisions of law from twelve months to eighteen months.

The managers believe that the information provided pursuant to section 604(b)(5)(E) should be as extensive as possible and in accordance with AID's normal accounting practices. With respect to section 604(b)(5)(F), this section does not require a detailed listing of all statements of senior officials of the PLO, the Palestinian Authority and successor entities but rather an assessment of such statements, with attribution of those specific statements which best reflects the issues of concern described in this subparagraph. The managers also note that the reference to Jerusalem in section 604(c)(9) is not intended to suggest that the Palestinian Authority will operate in Jerusalem under the Interim Agreement; rather this section emphasizes the managers' concern that the PLO not purport to affect the status of Jerusalem.

TO IMPOSE SANCTIONS AGAINST BURMA, AND COUNTRIES ASSISTING BURMA, UNLESS BURMA OBSERVES HUMAN RIGHTS AND PERMITS POLITICAL FREEDOM

Amendment No. 193: Deletes Senate language imposing sanctions against Burma and countries assisting Burma.

SENATE—Thursday, October 26, 1995

The Senate met at 9 a.m., and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Gracious Lord, the divine Potter of our lives, our days are in Your hands. Shape the clay as You have planned. May the day work out exactly as You have arranged it for Your glory and our growth. We say with the psalmist, "I delight to do Your will, O my God, and Your law is within my heart."—Psalm 40:8. We long to know what is best for our Nation. Now at the beginning of the day, we commit to You the challenges and decisions of this day. We desire to glorify You, so show us what You desire. With inspired intentionality, we put our relationship with You first and make our primary goal what is best for our Nation. In the name of the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Amen.

THE BALANCED BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1995

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Brown modified amendment No. 2949 (to instructions of motion to commit), instructions that the committee should consider the findings of the trustees of the Federal Insurance Trust Fund.

Abraham amendment No. 2950, to establish beneficiary incentive programs to collect information on fraud and abuse against the Medicare Program and to collect information on program efficiency.

Bradley motion to commit the bill to the Committee on Finance with instructions.

Nickles/Brown amendment No. 2958 (to Bradley motion to commit the bill), to increase the earned income tax credit for families.

Mr. WELLSTONE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHCROFT). The Senator from Minnesota.

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of the motion by Senator BRADLEY. Let me start out by saying, last night I think we had a good technical discussion and an important policy discussion. I must say, I think all of my colleagues are enormously impressed with Senator BRADLEY's mastery of the material.

Mr. President, what I would like to do today in the 5 minutes that I have, is to talk about this vote before us in a slightly different context. I say to my colleague from Wisconsin, my good friend, I have been thinking about the first class I will teach again at the college or university, community college, or University of Minnesota. In this class, which I hope to teach in 7 years from now, the first lecture is going to be about this week. It is going to start out with a definition of politics, and I am going to say politics is, in part, about values and what we all care about, and we can have honest disagreements.

The second part of the lecture I am going to give when I go back to teaching is going to be titled: Who decides? Who is asked to sacrifice? And how do these decisions take place? That really summarizes this motion that the Senator from New Jersey has offered, which I am so proud to be a cosponsor of.

A question: Who decides that we are going to have $245 billion of tax giveaways to people already high-income and wealthy, least in need of those breaks? And whose parents, or whose children, go without adequate health care? It is that simple. Or, Mr. President—and this refers to some amendments that I will later on make sure that colleagues vote on—who decides that we are going to, essentially, leave untouched this area of corporate welfare, that if you have a $5 million estate, you are going to get a tax cut, as my colleague from New Jersey pointed out last night, to the tune of $1.7 million?

But at the same time that you have that kind of tax giveaway, at the same time you have special tax loopholes and breaks for oil companies, or insurance companies, or you have citizens who work abroad in other countries that do not have to pay any taxes on the first $70,000 they make, or special breaks for pharmaceutical companies and, at the same time, Mr. President—and there is no better example—a $5 million estate. How many people ever have that, and you get a $1.7 million tax break.

Who decides that we are going to have that kind of tax giveaway to the wealthiest of the wealthiest citizens in this country, and not those whose children go hungry and whose children are not able to afford a higher education?

In the lecture that I give, when I teach again, I am going to continue to raise these questions. I will ask the question: Who decides that we are going to raise taxes for more than 200,000 people in Minnesota, families in Minnesota, with incomes under $30,000 a year, hard-pressed people and, at the same time, we are going to let the one person in my State—or maybe two—with a $5 million estate get $1.7 million in a tax giveaway?

We make choices here, and these are the questions: Who decides? Who benefits? Who is asked to sacrifice?

In my State of Minnesota, I say to my colleague from New Jersey, we have an interesting situation where back in 1991 we decided that we would have a 15-percent EITC at the State level, tied to the Federal EITC. So working families in Minnesota get an added benefit.

The final point in my lecture: How did this decision get made? I would tell you that what we have going on here in the U.S. Senate is deficit reduction based on the path of least political resistance, deficit reduction in inverse relationship to economic justice. If you have the big bucks, if you have a $5 million estate, you get the tax breaks. If you are low or moderate income, your taxes are raised, or you cannot afford health care, or you cannot afford to send your kid to college.

Mr. President, it is clear that the big givers are getting their way. The heavy hitters are getting their way. All these large financial institutions and corporations are not asked to tighten their belts at all. Mr. President, what we have here is decisionmaking, democracy for the few, not democracy for the many.

This motion brings back some fairness and justice to this process.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the senior Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KOHL. I thank the Senator. Mr. President, I rise today as a strong supporter and original cosponsor of Senator BRADLEY's motion. It presents a straightforward tradeoff to the Senate. It says restore the tax credit for lower income working families in exchange for cutting some of the tax breaks available to healthy corporations.

Before I get into the arguments for this motion, I want to say a brief word on this budget, in general.

Mr. President, like many of my colleagues, I cannot agree with the priorities established in the budget bill before us today. But what I find more disturbing than the bill itself is the partisan and destructive direction the debate over this budget has taken.

We have polarized in extreme political positions firing slogans and half-truths at each other. The two parties agree on many basic principles that could underpin a balanced budget plan. There are billions of dollars and miles of middle ground between the Democratic and Republican budget battle stations. Yet we have chosen to stay locked in our traditional partisan positions.

I want to use the few minutes I have today to talk about the ample room for compromise in the current budget debate. I want to remind my colleagues about the principles that bring us together as public servants—rather than those that drive us apart into our partisan political camps.

First, we believe in balancing the budget. This is a year in which a majority of the Senators voted for a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution and a vast majority voted for a 7-year balanced budget plan. Whether we talk about 7 or 10 years, most of us agree it is time to stop adding to our national debt. Whether we cut defense or domestic programs, most of us agree that Government should spend less.

Second, we believe that the growth of spending on Medicare and Medicaid must be restrained and doing so will involve difficult cuts. I have heard no one deny that the aging of our population and out-of-control health care costs have put into jeopardy these two basic health care programs. I do not think anyone is seriously suggesting that we can continue to let them grow at their current rates.

How much we cut this year, how much we put back into Medicare and Medicaid, how we make those cuts are all legitimate items for debate. Whether cuts need to occur at all is not debatable.

Third, we believe that our economy needs to grow and grow in a manner that rewards families who choose work over welfare. A huge majority of this Senate just voted for a welfare bill—a bill included in the budget before us—that radically changes welfare into a flexible program that moves people into jobs. A majority of those who have served in this and past Congresses have support the earned income tax credit, a tax incentive for families that work. Encouraging work—rewarding work—supporting working families. These ideas are not Democratic or Republican. They are American.

On these three points of agreement alone, we could build a credible balanced budget plan. And if we did that, this Congress would be praised for its responsibility, its leadership, and its service.

Furthermore, producing a bipartisan budget plan—without partisan bickering, without vetoes, without shutting the government, without press conference—would respond to what people outside the beltway are demanding I strongly believe that Americans want to see us debate the budget, not use it to divide our country.

Americans are sickened by the hostile rhetoric, the blind partisanship, the misleading use of figures and facts. They are demanding some honesty, some comity, and some real attempts to craft a balanced budget that a huge majority of them and us can support.

That said, Mr. President, the budget before us is not the place to start a fruitful debate on balancing the budget. It has been written without the input of our party, the President, or any outside witnesses brought in for public hearings. It contains too many tradeoffs that I believe are unfair and unbalanced—and that I believe most Americans would believe are unfair and unbalanced.

Mr. President a report recently released by the Census Bureau showed the gap between our wealthiest families and low-income families growing to the widest point recorded since the Bureau began taking such measurements in 1967. That income disparity is a cancer that is eating away at economic productivity and the standard of living in this country. Any responsible balanced budget plan would take it into account and would certainly not make it worse.

The budget before us makes it worse. The bottom 51 percent of tax filers—those with incomes of less than $30,000—would be worse off under the Senate package than under current law, according to Joint Tax Committee data. Further, wealthy taxpayers—those with incomes above $200,000—would gain an average of $5,088 per taxpayer in the year 2000. How can I justify asking a sacrifice from so many while I myself would get a big tax break under this bill?

Mr. President, this basic unfairness—this basic unbalance—is the primary reason I will vote against this budget, and why I do not believe it can form the basis for the compromise we so sorely need. I can and will ask and stand for sacrifices for the common good as long as they are shared sacrifices. But I will not support a bill that imposes real pain on many to provide gain for a few.

Mr. President, I am afraid that we are missing an historic opportunity because of our focus on short-term political benefit. If we gave up our infatuation with sound bites and brinkmanship, we have the chance to pass a balanced budget, to undo the economic damage of the last decade. As this debate proceeds, I urge my colleagues on both sides to move toward the position most Americans have already taken: Stop tearing each other down and start building a future for this country with a bipartisan and fair balanced budget.

Mr. President, like many of my colleagues, I cannot agree with the priorities established in the budget bill before us today. But what I find more disturbing than the bill itself is the partisan and destructive direction the debate over this budget has taken. We have polarized in extreme political positions, firing slogans, and half-truths at each other. Americans are sick of the blind partisanship and misleading use of figures and facts. They are demanding some honesty, some cooperation, and some real attempts to craft a balanced budget that a huge majority of them and us can support.

That said, Mr. President, the budget before us is not the place to start a fruitful debate on balancing the budget. It has been written without the input of both parties, the President, or any outside witnesses brought in for public hearings. It contains too many tradeoffs that I believe are unfair and unabalanced—and that I believe most Americans would believe are unfair and unbalanced.

Mr. President, this basic unfairness—this basic unabalance—is the primary reason I will vote against this budget, and why I do not believe it can form the basis for the compromise we so sorely need. I can and will ask for sacrifices for the common good as long as they are shared sacrifices. But I will not support a bill that imposes real pain on many to provide gain for a few. I cannot justify asking for a sacrifice from so many when I, myself, would get a big tax break under this bill.

Our time is limited, so let me offer three brief arguments for the amendment on the earned income credit before us.

First, the amendment would make the balanced budget plan more fair. According to Joint Tax Committee data, the budget before us makes most taxpayers with incomes of $30,000 or less worse off than they are under current law. Compare that with the top 1 percent of taxpayers—those with incomes above $200,000—who would receive a tax break of an average of $5,088 under this budget plan.

The primary reason for this imbalance is the cut in the earned income tax credit [EIC]—the only tax break targeted to low-income working families.

No one here would claim that balancing the budget is easy or can be done without sacrifices by many people. However, how can we ask a majority of the taxpayers to accept a balanced budget plan in which they lose and a small, wealthy minority wins? That is not balanced, and, once it is fully understood, I do not believe it will be supported by most Americans.

Second, the amendment before us keeps a bipartisan promise we made to working families. The EIC was enacted during the Ford administration and supported by every President since then. The EIC represents a bipartisan commitment to keeping low-income working families with children above the poverty line. In short, the EIC makes work pays better than welfare.

I have heard almost every Member of this body talk about the importance of moving people from welfare to work. And we need to do that in a manner that is not bureaucratic and not burdensome to business. The EIC does this. If we cannot agree in this body to keep our promise to working families by preserving the EIC, I am afraid there is going to be very little we can agree on.

Finally, the amendment before us cuts fat without cutting muscle. Some have characterized the EIC as a program plagued by uncontrolled growth and fraud. If that were the case, we should certainly cut it back dramatically. But that is not the case.

Only 5 percent of the cuts in the EIC proposed by the budget are related to fraud—and our amendment keeps those cuts intact. The rest of the cuts re reductions in taxes that go directly to working families.

The average annual Federal tax hike proposed in this budget for the 262,000 Wisconsin families who get the EIC would be $457. No one, I hope, is claiming those families—many of whom make around $12,000 a year—are defrauding the Government. No one, I hope, is suggesting that their one tax credit ought to be first on the budget chopping block.

Mr. President, we are all agreed that we have to balance the budget, and to do that, we have to reduce entitlement spending. But we have to do so in a way that makes sense and is fair. Cutting an established bipartisan tax credit that encourages work over welfare does not make sense. Cutting it while increasing tax breaks for corporations and the wealthy is not fair. I urge my colleagues to support the Bradley motion.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to speak out against the Republican proposal to raise taxes on working families and in support of the Democratic amendment. The Republican tax plan raises taxes on families making $30,000 while give a big fat tax cut to people with $5 million estates.

We talk a lot about getting people off welfare. But I believe if we are serious about moving people from welfare to work, then work must pay them enough to pay the bills. When mom or dad works 40 hours a week they should be able to pay the bills. They should be rewarded for working hard. The earned income tax credit does that, it rewards hard work by families. It allows these struggling families to have hope for a better future.

Yes, we talk a lot about welfare reform. We talk a lot about family values. But look what we do. I believe what we explicitly state as our values we should implicitly reflect in our public policy. What is our public policy? This Senate is already on record against even debating an increase in the minimum wage. And now this Senate is about to approve cutting a tax credit that helps these very same working men and women who depend on the minimum wage.

What are we saying to these families? We are saying even as you struggle and work hard, we are going to raise your taxes. And why? Is it because we want to balance the budget? That is what the Republicans say, but that is not the truth. The only reason we are raising taxes on working families and slashing Medicare is so that the Republicans can pass a big tax cut for people making $100,000 or $200,000 a year.

Mr. President. In order to fund a capital gains tax cut for the wealthy, the plan before us would cut the earned income tax credit by $42 billion and call it reform. It would increase the tax deductions for capital gains by $33 billion and call it fair.

The earned income tax credit is designed to reward work. For every dollar a low income worker earns at a job, he or she receives a tax credit. The size of the credit ranges from 7 cents to 36 cents per dollar, based on your family size. This credit is gradually phased-out as income rises so that there is always an incentive to earn more and work more. In short, the EITC helps to offset the heavy burden that taxes can place on a family that counts every single penny. It is tied only to income that is earned on a job. It provides a tax break to those who need it most, low-wage earners.

But all of this is being changed by this reconciliation bill. Single workers will be cut off. Families with one or two kids will have their credit reduced and their taxes increased.

And what does this mean? To the people of my State of Maryland it means tougher times. These cuts in the EITC mean that over 270,000 Maryland taxpayers will pay more while those at the top pay less. These cuts in the EITC mean that by 2002, people of my State will pay an average of $345 more in taxes. It means that 120,000 Maryland families with two kids will have their tax bill go up by $474 a year.

Lets talk about what this tax increase means to real people. For Rhonda Clark, a 26-year-old mother from Baltimore, it means that even though she has worked hard to get off welfare and to raise her two young kids, even though she has played by the rules, life is about to get harder. For Rhonda, this tax increase means she will have less money to pay for child care for her two young kids. Inflation will go up, but Rhonda's tax credit will be reduced in 1996 by $367.

The EITC has a long history of bipartisan support. But that is about to change too. This tax credit has been endorsed and expanded by Presidents and Congresses of both parties. President Ronald Reagan called it, "The best antipoverty, the best profamily, the best job creation measure to come out of Congress." This credit rewards work. It is a bonus for the good guys because it is based on hard work. We should be praising it today. Not attacking it. Not cutting off workers, cutting off families, and cutting off hope.

Let us reflect in our public policy what we have stated as our values. Let us keep faith with working families by supporting the earned income tax credit.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the earned income tax credit is a valuable tax credit for our working families. As enacted by the Congress in 1993, the EITC would provide a tax credit for over 21 million workers and their families this coming year. Working families with earnings of up to $28,500 per year would be eligible. These are families who play by the rules and work hard each day to get by. These are the same families who are disproportionately affected by the Republican cuts in domestic spending.

The earned income tax credit is the result of a bipartisan effort to create a disincentive to people from remaining on public assistance rather than working at lower wage jobs, and was hopefully a major aspect of welfare reform. President Reagan called it the "best antipoverty, the best pro-family, the best job creation measure to come out of Congress." Reagan proposed a significant expansion of the credit in the 1986 tax reform bill.

The House of Representatives has proposed a $23 billion tax increase on these same families by repealing the 1993 earned income tax credit expansion for families with two or more children, and by denying the EITC to families without children. Fourteen million EITC recipients—nearly half of the EITC recipients with children—would be adversely affected. Families with two or more children would be hardest hit.

The proposal before the Senate makes even more severe cuts. The proposal would increase taxes on 17 million households to raise $42 billion. A report by the Treasury Department shows that under the Senate proposal, 21 percent of families currently eligible for the EITC would lose their eligibility by the year 2005.

On a national level, the proposal will mean an immediate $300 average tax increase. For the 7.4 million families with two or more children, a $410 tax increase will occur. And the average tax increase will continue to go up over time, reaching $644 by the year 2005. These families include 18.5 million children.

In Massachusetts, 194,000 working families would face an average tax increase of $321 in the year 2002. For families with two or more children, the increase would reach $440.

Two-thirds of the proposed tax increase in the EITC would be achieved by repealing the final phase of the 1993 expansion for families with two or more children—an expansion promoted by President Reagan in 1986 and President Bush in 1990.

Also included in the Republican bill is a proposal to tax social security payments received by approximately 1 million widowed, retired, and disabled taxpayers who care for about 2 million of their own children, grandchildren, or other children. These social security recipients would face an average increase of $850.

The 1993 expansion was designed to keep a family of four with a parent working at the minimum wage above the poverty level, assuming the family also received food stamps. And we still haven't been able to achieve that.

The standard of living of working families has continued to deteriorate since 1979. In 1996, the real value of the minimum wage will decline to its lowest level in 40 years. Without an increase in the minimum wage, the EITC must do the job of raising the after tax incomes of working families.

We have heard too much rhetoric about the level of fraud and abuse. The facts do not bear out these accusations. Any fraud and abuse that had taken place has been largely eliminated through steps taken by the IRS to reduce erroneous claims. There is no more fraud and abuse with this credit than there is in capital gains claims of the rich.

Other improvements to the credit have been made consistently over the past several years. Most recently, it was altered to deny eligibility to those with $2,500 or more of taxable interest and dividends.

There has also been too much rhetoric about the fact that the rate of growth of the EITC is out of control. That is not the case. With the 1996 expansion, the CBO projects that the EITC will grow at less than 4.5 percent per year. This growth is due largely to inflation. As a percentage of gross domestic product, the cost of the EITC will decline after 1997.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise in strong support for the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

It restores $43 billion in cuts over the next 7 years in the earned income tax credit in the Senate Republican reconciliation bill.

At a time when many working Americans are struggling to make ends meet, the Senate Republican budget would hike Federal taxes on low- and moderate-income working families. It would also raise some State taxes on these same working families.

This is a double whammy on working families.

This Federal tax increase will also raise taxes in seven States that have a State earned income tax credit tied to the Federal credit, including my home State of Vermont.

This bill will raise both State and Federal taxes on 27,000 Vermont working families earning less than $28,500 a year.

As a result of this double tax jeopardy, working Vermonters will lose $64 million in Federal earned income tax credit benefits and an additional $16 million in State earned income tax credit benefits over the next 7 years.

On average, about 63 percent of Vermont taxpayers would see their taxes rise under this bill because of these earned income tax credit cuts.

Under the Senate bill, a Vermont family of four earning $15,610 a year, the 1995 poverty line, would lose $4,500 of earned income tax credit benefits over the next 7 years—$3,600 cut in the Federal earned income tax credit and $900 cut in the State earned income tax credit.

A Vermont family of four making $22,000 a year would fare even worse—suffering a loss of $1,208 in State earned income tax credit and a loss of $4,831 in Federal earned income tax credit over the next 7 years.

It is very doubtful that the Vermont General Assembly can afford to increase the State earned income tax credit to make up this loss, with even more Federal cuts on the way.

Workers are treading water or worse against the rising tide of inflation and low wages. Now is not the time to cut a tax credit that will raise Federal and State taxes on low- and moderate-income families.

Instead, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment to restore the earned income tax credit.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, as the Senate debates S. 1357, the fiscal year 1996 budget reconciliation bill, I am concerned that the tax changes and spending priorities put forward seek to balance the budget on the backs of senior citizens, working families, the working poor, and our Nation's children. The Republican proposal for a $270 billion cut in Medicare, a $182 billion reduction in Medicaid, and a $43 million tax hike for families earning under $30,000 a year to finance $245 billion in tax giveaways—over half to individuals earning over $100,000 annually—clearly outlines the No. 1 priority of the Republican plan: Tax relief for a privileged few.

The details of the legislation stand in stark contrast to the intended goal of reducing the Federal budget deficit. The fears I expressed during debate on the budget resolution have been confirmed; the brunt of deficit reduction in this bill comes at the expense of our responsibility to make work pay, the education and well-being of our youth, the retirement security of our parents, and our commitment to long-term investments in productivity, education, and job training. This approach is shortsighted and threatens to reverse progress made in genuine deficit reduction and tax fairness over the past years.

The tax increases contained in the reconciliation bill hit hardest on working American families. In particular, the $43 billion reduction in the earned income tax credit [EITC] will raise taxes for 17 million working Americans and their families. The most effective way to improve the economic well-being of the middle class and working poor is to promote policies that reward work and lessen dependency. Resources should be focused on economic policies and public investments that enhance productivity, create on well-paying, skilled private sector jobs, and restore economic mobility and prosperity to working Americans.

Yet the Republican plan cuts the earned income tax credit by $43 billion over 7 years; reversing longstanding bipartisan support for policies that make work pay. The earned income tax credit helps low-and-middle-income working families who have seen their wages decline since the 1980's and serves as a safety net for middle-class families confronted with a sudden loss of income. The EITC helps these families through economic difficulties and encourages policies that make work pay.

Mr. President, despite the tremendous number of new jobs created last year and the 2-year decline in the national unemployment rate, the earnings of many Americans have remained stagnant. In fact, over the last decade most working families have seen their standard of living erode. People are working harder and longer to make ends meet. The number of working poor families and individuals living at or below the poverty line continues to grow.

The 1993 expansion of the EITC was designed to lift a family of four, in which a parent works full-time, year-round at the minimum wage, to the poverty line. This $43 billion tax increase on millions of working families—many just above the poverty line who are struggling to work, raise their families, and avoid welfare, will destroy an important incentive that encourages work and self-sufficiency. The proposed cut in the EITC would increase Federal income taxes on millions of low-income working families with children. The Treasury Department estimates that 17 million low-income American taxpayers will see an immediate tax increase averaging $281 per year under the Republican proposal. When fully implemented, the Republican proposal would boost the average tax bill for working taxpayers by $457 per year.

In 1996, working families with more than one child will see their EITC reduced by $270. A working family with two children earning $20,000 or less would see a $372 tax hike. Working poor families with one child and taxpayers without children also will see a tax increase under the GOP plan. The elderly, disabled, and retired who receive Social Security and have an average income under $10,000 will see their taxes climb by an average of $859 under the Republican plan. Over 1 million low-income working families—and over 2 million children—would suffer as a direct result of this proposal.

Working families with children that have low and moderate incomes face three strikes under this bill. The reduction in the earned income tax credit, cuts in Medicaid, and ineligibility for the $500 per child tax credit will hit millions of working families and millions of children hard. Over 30 million children, 44 percent of our Nation's young people, would receive no benefit or only partial credit and not the full $500 proposed.

Mr. President, what message are we sending to working men and women? By raising income taxes on millions of Americans struggling to make ends meet and committed to work over welfare and making tax breaks paramount, the Republican reconciliation plan establishes disincentives to hard work and threatens the economic security of millions of American families.

I urge the defeat of S. 1357.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Washington State.

Mrs. MURRAY. Thank you, Mr. President. It is always a pleasure to be working with my colleague from New Jersey, Senator BRADLEY. It is unfortunate, though, today, that what we are trying to do is to fix the Republican budget and attempt to restore the earned income tax credit.

Mr. President, this Republican budget will cut $43 billion from the earned income tax credit, and in so doing, this budget will be raising taxes on those earning less than $30,000 a year.

I have to tell you, this is totally incomprehensible to me that while the Republicans are touting this budget and all the glory of its tax cuts, they are raising taxes on hard-working American families.

Where is the logic in this? As one of my colleagues recently stated, this is nothing more than reverse Robin Hood—taking from the poor in order to pay for tax breaks for the most wealthy in America.

The impact of this proposal is astounding. The numbers are staggering. This budget will raise taxes on 17 million families across America. In my home State, low-income working families with two children will see a $452 tax increase in 2002 and a $522 tax increase in 2005.

What kind of message does this proposal send to our hard-working families? Does it provide security and hope? Or does it tell them they are on their own? Does it tell these families that are working to stay above the poverty line that we no longer reward hard work and support their efforts?

Mr. President, the EITC has always received bipartisan support because it is a commonsense tax credit. It rewards work. It provides a real incentive. It gives people the means to move from the welfare rolls to the work force.

As we all know, in 1986, Ronald Reagan praised the EITC. I remember him saying, "It is the best antipoverty, best profamily, best job creation measure to come out of Congress."

As in President Reagan's day, many of today's hard-working American families are trying to make end's meet, send their kids to school and provide some hope for the future. Average Americans are worried today about their jobs. They are anxious about their cost of education. And there is genuine concern out there about the costs of health care. It is astounding that the other side has chosen this time to reduce the EITC.

Mr. President, this tax increase is not a big deal to some of our colleagues here in the Senate, but, believe me, these are real increases to average Americans.

As I have said many times throughout this budget process—I will say it again now—this budget has no conscience nor provides any hope. It hurts the little guy, those who need help, those who are struggling to make a living and provide for their children, and it rewards the rich.

Taking away this tax credit adds insult to injury. The EITC keeps people off welfare. It offsets other forms of formal assistance. It gives American parents the security they need to enter the work force.

We cannot balance the budget on our working poor, our elderly and our children, and we cannot justify cutting taxes for the wealthy while increasing taxes on the poor. We should put things back in perspective and help those who really need our help.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment. It tells working families we are in their corner. It says we are against increasing their taxes and we are for insuring their financial security.

I commend my colleague from New Jersey and urge all of our colleagues to support this sound, commonsense amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, in 1993, Congress decided to give a 3-year tax cut to families earning under $30,000 a year. That is the earned income tax credit.

What the other side attempted to do is to say, "Do not give these working families earning under $30,000 a year the third year of their tax cut." That is essentially what this debate is about.

As I said last night, I would oppose their effort to raise taxes on families earning under $30,000 a year if it was a free-standing amendment; but in the context of this debate it is virtually unconscionable because of the estate tax provision in this bill. I have not heard anyone on the other side defend this provision. If you have a $5 million estate you pay $1.7 million less in estate tax because of the changes in this bill. I have not heard one person on the other side of the aisle stand up and credibly defend why we should give less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the estates in this country a $1.7 million tax cut while we are raising taxes on families earning under $30,000 a year. I have not heard that defense. Maybe it exists. I have not heard it.

The distinguished Senator from New Mexico read a letter from the Joint Tax Committee, as if the letter clinched the case. And the letter of course says that 72 percent of the tax benefits in this bill go to families earning under $75,000 a year. That is true. One does not dispute that. But that is not a refutation of the fact that taxes are increased on families earning under $30,000 a year. It means that the tax cut for those with incomes between $30,000 and $75,000 is large enough to offset the tax increase for those earning under $30,000.

Then, finally, there was this nice phrase here in the letter from the Joint Tax Committee, "Only 1.5 percent of all households will have an income tax increase;" an income tax increase.

Mr. President, people who earned under $30,000 a year last year paid $114 billion in Federal taxes. Guess how much of the $114 billion was income tax? It was $12 billion. Mr. President $12 billion out of the $114 billion was income tax.

What other taxes do they pay? They are working people. They pay Social Security taxes. For years we heard from the other side that the cruelest tax of all is the tax on working Americans, the Social Security tax. What they are doing is essentially raising the effect of the Social Security tax on those working people, because the earned income tax credit offsets Social Security taxes and income taxes and excise taxes paid by families earning under $30,000 a year. And the Joint Tax Committee did not refute that. The letter refers only to income taxes, not Social Security taxes.

So let us be clear here. Let us be clear. There has not been one refutation of the fact that the earned income tax credit offsets Social Security taxes. And when you repeal it, you are essentially raising Social Security taxes on families earning under $30,000 a year. Why do this in the context of a bill where estates of $5 million get a $1.7 million tax cut? Tell me how is that good policy.

Then, of course, we are going to see a chart later, the famous growth chart, that will show that the earned income tax credit has increased dramatically in the last 3 years, how it is exploding since 1986. Every time, Mr. President, every time we hear that argument about the earned income tax credit exploding, remember, Mr. and Mrs. America, what they are saying is that working families are getting a bigger and bigger tax cut and they do not like it. Republicans want to reduce their tax cut. They want to raise taxes on working families.

So when you see that chart going up, that is not a chart of the growth of the earned income tax credit. That is a chart of taxes going down for working families in this country.

So when the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma puts that chart up—and I hope he puts that chart up at some point today—remember those bars that go higher and higher: Lower taxes on working families in America.

Mr. President, this is one of those moments that is so clearly defining that it really is even reachable by my own rhetorical skills. You do not have to be a great speaker when you have all the facts on your side, when you have no refutation on the other side, and when the choice is so clear—a $1.7 million tax cut for estates of $5 million? That is less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the estates in this country in any given year. So the contrast is clear: a tax cut of $1.7 million for estates versus a tax increase on working families.

The other side says, "We did not increase it on families. We only increased it on single people earning under $30,000." Well it is true that single people are clearly getting a tax increase. That is true. But I can also give you plenty of examples of where you increased taxes on working families. Anybody who is single under 30, yes, you get a big tax increase—a big tax increase. Not a small one, a big one. And for many families, it is also true.

Mr. President, this is an issue that I think bears a very a strong vote in support of our effort to protect this tax cut for working families. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, who is on the floor now in support of this amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The distinguished Senator from New Jersey is kind as always.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am going to be on the floor again today because the Republican rhetoric is not matching the reality and the Republican rhetoric is that the children's tax credit will help families.

In reality, too many families will be excluded from this credit because it is not refundable.

In fact, over 20 million children will not receive the full benefit. And these children are in families earning less than $30,000, families that need tax relief the most to make ends meet on a tight family budget.

To add insult to injury, not only do Republicans deny the credit to such hard working, low-wage families, Republicans are paying for it by imposing a tax increase on them with a $43 billion cut from the earned income tax credit [EITC].

The Republican leadership continues to claim that their tax package helps middle-class American families. And this sounds good, but I want to know how they define the middle class?

In my State of West Virginia, we believe that parents who go to work every day, and struggle to raise their children are middle class, admirable, and deserving of support and encouragement. Over 65 percent of our taxpayers are working hard but earn less-less than—$30,000. For such families they will lose, not gain under this bill.

West Virginians have a basic sense of fairness and common sense. They will know that this package and its claim of middle class tax relief are false when they fill out their tax forms in April 1997.

Just 2 years ago, these working families were promised tax relief. Now Republicans are reneging on that deal and raising taxes on families earning less than $30,000. For families with two or more children, their taxes will go up an average $483. For families with one child, taxes will go up an average of $410. This will hit over 77,000 families with children in my State of West Virginia alone.

But such numbers can be numbing. Let us get beyond the rhetoric, and look at real families.

A real family, like the Helmick family of New Milton, West Virginia, will be worse off, not better. The Helmick family has 6 children, ranging in age from 15 to 4. Mr. Helmick works full-time as a truck driver for a local construction company, and Mrs. Helmick is a full-time homemaker. In the past, they have used their EITC to buy baby furniture and to buy a used truck so Mr. Helmick has reliable transportation to get to work. Mr. Helmick will not get to claim the full tax credit for his children, and he will lose EITC benefits under the Republican plan.

This is a real working family that will be hurt, not helped.

And families like the Helmicks who can not claim the child credit and are hurt by the cuts in EITC, probably will not be claiming capital gains tax breaks either. For them, this package does little more than renew their cynicism since it reneges on promises made just 2 years ago when we told families to play by rules, go to work instead of welfare and we will offset your payroll taxes so that you do not have to raise your children in poverty.

I feel badly for 65 percent of families in West Virginia who will be hurt rather than helped by the Republican tax proposal.

I thank the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has 3 minutes and 18 seconds remaining.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I have one final point.

The purpose of the earned income credit was to offset income taxes that working families pay—working people—and Social Security taxes that working families pay, and excise taxes that working families pay. That is the purpose of it.

The other side has said this proposal that they have offered does not increase income taxes on 98 percent of the people.

What about Social Security taxes? What about excise taxes? Are they saying those are not taxes? Are they not saying that a working family at the end of the month has less money in their pockets because they paid those taxes? A working family has less in their pockets after this proposal passes because of the Social Security taxes that they do not have offset, and the excise taxes that they do not have offset. And if you are a working single person, forget it. You are going to have a serious increase in taxes. Those are the facts. Those are the facts.

One repeat of a statistic: Of the $114 billion in Federal taxes paid by families and individuals earning under $30,000 a year, only $12 billion of the $114 billion are income taxes. We offset all the others. They offset only the $12 billion.

In the context of a tax bill, where an estate of $5 million gets a tax cut of $1.7 million, I really want to hear the other side defend that estate tax provision.

I want to hear them make the argument about the family farm because I will have an amendment later that will protect the family farm, and it will cost $700 million as opposed to $3 billion over 5 years. Then we will be able to see the difference between the two parties. Even on that issue, one wants to protect the family farm, and the other, of course, wants to give a little bit more benefit to business corporations, and not only the family farm. I can understand why that is good politics for some. It certainly is not good politics. And it is certainly not good policy in the context of a bill that raises taxes on working families that deserve a tax cut, not a tax increase.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, is there any time left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 27 seconds remaining.

Mr. WELLSTONE. If I could amplify a point made by the Senator from New Jersey, it is not good politics either because people in the country—in case anybody has not noticed—yearn for a political process that they can believe in, a political process where they think they are represented. This does not look like such a process. This looks like something good for big players, heavy hitters, those who have all of the influence, with the vast majority of the people shut out. This is not a regular person's standard with this kind of break.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, for the record, I would like to have the Chair advise the Senate of the time remaining on both sides overall.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 3 hours left for the Senator from New Mexico, and there are 4 hours and 45 minutes remaining for the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair. As I understand it, we have now used up all time and completed debate on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey. As I understand it, we are about then, per the previous agreement, ready to take up an amendment that I understand is to be offered by the Senator from Florida who I believe is in or near the Chamber with regard to Medicaid funding.

Is that the understanding that has been tentatively agreed to as far as the other side is concerned?

Mr. ABRAHAM. It is my understanding that Senator NICKLES reserved 10 minutes of time to speak on this topic. I am trying to ascertain whether he intends to use it.

Mr. EXON. On the EITC issue.

Mr. ABRAHAM. That is correct.

Mr. EXON. Then we would go to the Medicaid amendment.

Mr. ABRAHAM. That is my understanding.

Mr. EXON. I thank my colleague.

Mr. ABRAHAM. We are trying to determine if that reserved 10 minutes will be used or not.

Mr. EXON. Since Senator NICKLES is not here, in order to conserve time, could we temporarily set that aside and allow the Senator from Florida to proceed with his presentation?

Mr. ABRAHAM. We would be happy to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement, and we wish to reserve the 10 minutes of time for Senator NICKLES for whatever time later that he might be available.

I move that we temporarily lay aside the EITC motion so that we might proceed to the next motion, I believe it is, while reserving 10 minutes of debate on our side for the EITC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what was the request on the EITC?

Mr. ABRAHAM. I do not think it is a request, simply a confirmation of an agreement reached last night for 10 minutes reserved for Senator NICKLES to comment further on the motion that the Senator from New Jersey has offered.

Mr. BRADLEY. There was a motion made last night? I do not think there was a motion last night relating to any time allotted to the other side.

Mr. ABRAHAM. The motion I believe is the motion of the Senator from New Jersey. I believe the agreement with regard to time on that motion is 10 minutes had been reserved.

Mr. BRADLEY. Reserving my right to object, my understanding is Senator NICKLES' amendment was on a second-degree amendment, and Senator NICKLES chose to withdraw his second-degree amendment. I do not think there was ever an agreement on time.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I propose to have Senator GRAHAM proceed. If he chooses to take time off the bill, we will for Senator NICKLES.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I have no objection to time off the bill.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, we can then proceed at this time in the usual fashion. I am pleased to yield 1 hour off the bill of time to be controlled by the Senator from Florida who wishes to address the matter, and I hope the Chair will recognize the Senator from Florida at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, could I ask the ranking member a question? Is the 1 hour under the control of the Senator from Florida, or is it 1 hour equally divided?

Mr. EXON. Under the usual procedures, there is 1 hour under the control of the minority. I have just yielded that 1 hour to the Senator from Florida, and, of course, there is also 1 hour for the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Members of the Senate that, since this is a motion, it is 1 hour equally divided between the sides. That would be 1 hour equally divided between the proponents of the motion, Senator GRAHAM, and 1 hour for the opponents under the control of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. GRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, in light of the limitations under which we will debate this matter, I will make a few opening comments, and then yield 5 minutes to my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. President, one of the most significant but not adequately focused upon aspects of this debate is the impact which this reconciliation will have on the most important Federal-State partnership in existence, which is the Medicaid program. This program represents for most States——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inquire: Has the Senator sent the motion to the desk?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not but I shall in a moment.

This represents for most States 40 percent, or more, of all of their Federal grant in aid programs for highways, education, and law enforcement. Forty percent of all of the funds which come from the Federal Government to assist States in providing services to their people come through this one program of Medicaid.

It is the safety net under our entire health care system. While it represents well under 10 percent of health care spending in terms of the Federal commitment to Medicaid, it represents the safety net for virtually 100 percent of our health care system.

Yesterday, I heard some speakers talk about the fact that we are involved in this reform not just because we need to balance the Federal budget, which many of us, including this Senator, strongly support and have voted consistently for measures that will move toward the balanced budget and are very pleased at the report yesterday that for the third consecutive year we have reduced the degree of the Federal deficit, but beyond that goal of balancing the Federal budget, we need to rid ourselves of failures, of programs that were not functioning, that in some cases were even counterproductive.

Mr. President, while I will suggest some areas in which I believe the Medicaid Program can be improved, I will state emphatically this program is by no definition a failure. In one very dramatic area, infant mortality, this program has contributed substantially to a dramatic reduction in infant mortality in virtually every State. It has resulted in more babies being born at term, at full birthweight, fully able to begin the developmental process, and then it has helped poor mothers to be able to continue the health care for those babies after they were birthed.

This program is a program which has had flexibility to respond to changing circumstances which range in every degree from changes in population to changes in economic circumstances to natural disasters that impose unanticipated burdens upon a particular State.

I will talk later about my concern of the proposals in this reconciliation bill for the severe cuts in the Medicaid program, cuts which will reduce the annual average increase to 1.4 percent in comparison to the private sector's estimate that over this 7 years, private sector health care will increase at 7.1 percent per American citizen over each of the next 7 years; that that kind of disparity represents not a fine tuning of the Medicaid Program but, frankly, a collapse of the Medicaid Program and its ability to serve as the safety net. And finally, that the allocation of funds among the 50 States in the rigid block grant formula is inequitable, perpetuating inequities in distribution which exist in the current law as well as rendering the program unable to respond to changes in circumstances among our 50 States.

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, with those introductory comments, I send to the desk a motion to commit with instructions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] moves to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance with instructions: to report the bill back to the Senate within 3 days (not to include any day the Senate is not in session) making changes in legislation within that Committee's jurisdiction to eliminate reductions in the Medicaid program over the seven year period beyond $62,000,000,000 and reduce revenue reductions for upper-income taxpayers by the amount necessary to ensure deficit neutrality. In addition, the Committee is instructed to achieve the Medicaid savings through implementation of a Medicaid per capita cap with continued coverage protections and quality assurance provisions for low-income children, pregnant women, disabled, and elderly Americans instead of through implementation of a Medicaid block grant.

Mr. GRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thank the Chair. I thank my colleague from Florida. I rise to support this motion and ask unanimous consent to be included as an original cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I say to my colleague from Florida, I do not have much confidence about this 2,000 pages plus and what it is going to mean for people in my State of Minnesota that I represent.

The other day in the Chamber of the Senate I had an amendment. I did not mean for it to be symbolic. I thought there would be 100 votes for it. My amendment said that if by virtue of action we take in this reconciliation bill there are fewer children with medical coverage, also more children that are hungry, then we will revisit what we have done over the next year and we will take action to correct this damage. I could not get votes for that. I received 45 votes.

I come from a State with 425,000 Medicaid—we say medical assistance—beneficiaries, projected to be, I say to my colleague from Florida, 535,000 by the year 2002. My State of Minnesota does not have the slightest idea what in the world we are going to do in response to anywhere from $2.5 billion to $3.5 billion—we do not even know yet—of cuts in medical assistance. And I can tell you right now, in all due respect to my wonderful colleagues, in my not so humble opinion, I come from the greatest State in the United States of America. We have done some wonderful things. We are a compassionate State, and we will not walk away from the most vulnerable citizens.

So this a shell game for Minnesota, and for all too many of our States it is a shell game.

Mr. President, 300,000 children are medical assistance beneficiaries in my State of Minnesota, many of them in working families. We will not walk away from those children. So the counties are going to have to pick up the cost. It will be the property tax, Minnesotans.

In my State of Minnesota, we have done some wonderful things to make sure that people in the developmental disabilities community can keep their children at home, do not have to become indigent and poor to get assistance; that people with developmental disabilities may live lives with dignity. But I will tell you what is going to happen. With draconian cuts in medical assistance, my State will not walk away from this community. It all gets put back on the State, all gets put back on the counties. This is nothing but a shell game.

In my State of Minnesota, 60 percent—60 percent—of our medical assistance payments go to our nursing homes. I have been to a lot of those nursing homes, and a lot of the people who are the care givers ask the following question: Senator, what are we going to do with these reductions? We cannot live with these reductions and live up to standards. Are we going to let staff go? Are we going to redefine eligibility? Are there going to be fewer benefits?

This is not just the elderly. These are the children and the grandchildren as well.

This amendment really cuts right to the heart and soul of what we are about here. I was in a debate earlier. We have an estate relief tax break. For those Minnesotans who have $5 million in an estate, they are going get a tax break, I say to my colleague from North Dakota, of $1.7 million. Those are the kinds of giveaways we have. But at the same time we have draconian cuts in medical assistance for people with disabilities, for children, and for elderly citizens. And in many ways, I say to my colleague from Florida, I think these reductions are perhaps the most problematical for the States we represent, the most problematical, the most awful, the most god-awful for the counties and local communities that we represent, because in my State of Minnesota we are not going to walk away from the citizens. Somebody is going to have to pay the bill. We are going to have to do it out of the local property tax, and that is going to be the most difficult way of all.

This makes no sense at all. This is, as I have said 1,000 times in the Chamber of the Senate, a rush to recklessness. This is a fast track to foolishness, and I wish my colleagues would look at their language and look at their statistics and look at their charts and read their sentences and understand what the consequences are going to be for the lives of the people we represent.

Let us have deficit reduction, but let us go after some other folks that can tighten their belts. Let us look at the subsidies to the oil companies, coal companies, pharmaceutical companies, insurance companies, estate breaks, and all the rest.

Let us not cut medical assistance to the point where we are denying quality health care for the people we represent. This is an extremely important motion. It is about fairness. It is about economic justice. And I say to my colleagues, it is also about good health care policy. The numbers should drive the policy. We need to have deficit reduction, but we cannot be reckless with the lives of the people we are here to represent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS). Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Thank you, Mr. President.

I rise in strong support of the Democratic leadership amendment, the Graham motion. My Republican colleagues constantly remind us of how important family values are. And I think family values are fantastic, especially the one that says, "Honor thy father and thy mother." I think it is not only a good commandment to live by, I think it is a good public policy to implement.

I believe when we say, "Honor thy father and thy mother," we should have this in our Medicare Program and in our Medicaid Program. A substantial part of the Medicaid Program goes to services to the elderly who are in nursing homes. We have watched this program grow. And it is an important safety net to the American middle-class families. We must preserve Medicaid to be a safety net for the people who have no other resources for long-term care and also for those who are disabled, disabled Americans who rely on Medicaid because they cannot get private health insurance.

My dear father died of Alzheimer's. I could not reverse the tide of him dying one brain cell at a time, but I vowed I would devote my life to fighting for a long-term care policy. That is what the Spousal Impoverishment Act was, a protection, and what we passed in 1988. I am glad that we do not repeal spousal impoverishment. And I hope it does not erode.

I regret that we are now going to cancel out the protections of nursing home grants that looked out for people who were in nursing homes, who were too sick to be able to protect themselves, the laws that prevent restraints and the laws that prevent abuse, that mandates standards, so that when people who have Alzheimer's or Parkinson's or other dementia diseases where we need long-term care, even though we cannot change the course of the disease, we can ensure that they are in a safe, secure environment. We can be sure of a lot of things if we pass the Graham motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is entirely appropriate that today we focus on the other real aspect of the Medicare debate, and that is Medicaid. Medicare reduces the support for our seniors by 22 percent. The Medicaid legislation reduces it by some 30 percent. Today I want to talk for just a few moments about the children who are going to be adversely impacted by the current legislation that is before the Senate, unless the Graham amendment is passed.

Among the children—in 1993—9.5 million were uninsured. The best estimate is that, under current law, the number of uninsured children will increase to 12.6 million in the year 2002. Under the Republican proposal, 4.4 million additional children will be uninsured in 2002 for a total of 17 million. Even under current law, there will be an upward flow in the number of children who lack health insurance coverage, but the Republican plan makes it even worse.

Just 2 years ago, on a bipartisan basis, under the leadership of Senator ROCKEFELLER, Senator RIEGLE, and others, the Finance Committee passed a program to provide comprehensive health services for children up to the age of 18 who were at or below 185 percent of poverty. We have one intervening election and look what happens? We basically pull the rug out from underneath the children of this country. Eighteen million of them now have coverage under Medicaid. Ninety percent of those children are in families that are in the work force, either full time or part time. These are hardworking men and women at the lower level of the economic ladder that absolutely depend on this program for the range of health services that are provided under the Medicaid Program. And effectively, under the Republican proposal that is before us today, we are saying, "No longer will there be the guarantees of the prescreening services, no longer will there be the range of different health services for the children in this country." And why are we doing it? To provide tax breaks for the wealthiest companies and corporations in this country and the wealthiest individuals in this country.

Not only are we pulling out the rug from underneath the children in this country, but, again, we are pulling out the rug from underneath the seniors by eliminating Federal standards in nursing homes. I was here in 1987 during the time that Congress held some of the most shocking hearings that we have ever had in the U.S. Senate, when we found out what was happening to our parents in nursing homes across this country. We found that there were shocking conditions. And Republicans and Democrats got together and passed minimal standards in order to make sure that our seniors were going to be able to live in nursing homes with some peace and dignity and quality care.

Under this Republican proposal, effectively, we are taking out those guarantees and taking out those standards and at the same time failing to provide the assurance for those seniors and those parents that there will be decent, quality care in the nursing homes of this country.

Mr. President, this makes no sense for the same reasons that the cuts in Medicare make no sense. The Republicans are taking the funds out of the protections for children and out of the protections for the seniors of this country, and using it for tax breaks for the wealthy individuals and corporations of this country. And, Mr. President, in order to remedy that, we should embrace the Graham motion. That amendment offers us the best opportunity to do so.

Medicaid is the companion program to Medicare, and the Republican assault on Medicaid is even more cruel and unfair than their assault on Medicare. The Republican plan would cut Medicaid by $187 billion over the next 7 years.

The country is up in arms over Medicare cuts that would mean a 22-percent reduction a year by the end of the budget period. By the end of that same period, Medicaid will be cut by a staggering 30 percent a year.

In large measure, the Republican cuts in Medicaid will strike another blow at the same groups hurt by the Republican cuts in Medicare—senior citizens and the disabled. Ten million elderly and disabled Americans are enrolled in Medicaid. Twenty-three percent of them—nearly one in every four—will lose their coverage. Seventy percent of all Medicaid spending under the program is for these two groups—the elderly and disabled—and much of it is for long-term nursing home care.

But there is also another group who will be especially injured by the Republican cuts—America's children. Seventy percent of Medicare spending is on the aged and disabled—but 70 percent of the people relying on Medicaid are children and their parents—a total of 18 million children and 8.1 million parents.

Every child deserves a healthy start in life. But under the Republican program, millions of families who have adequate medical care today will be forced to go without such care tomorrow. One in every five children in America depends on Medicaid. One in every three children born in this country depends on Medicaid to cover their prenatal care and the cost of delivery. These children are also guaranteed prenatal care, immunizations, regular check-ups, and developmental screenings. And, they are guaranteed the physician care and hospital care they need.

The vast majority of Medicaid-covered children—90 percent—are in families with working parents. Most of these parents work full time—40 hours a week, 52 weeks a year. But all their hard work does not buy them health care for their children, because their employers don't provide it and they can't afford it on their own. Even Medicaid fills only part of the gaps. Over 9 million other children are uninsured, and each day the number rises. Soon, less than half of all children will be covered by employer-based health insurance.

We tried to address this problem last year, but Republicans said no. Now, they are trying to undermine the only place where families without employer-provided coverage can turn for health care.

The Republican cuts in Medicaid will add 4 to 6 million more children to the ranks of the uninsured. When they are done—one in four American children will have no insurance at all.

These cuts will drastically increase the number of uninsured children. They will eliminate all the standards of quality that protect children today. The guarantee of prenatal care is gone. The guarantee of physician care is gone. The guarantee of hospital care is gone.

Under the Republican plan, senior citizens and the disabled are on the receiving end of a deadly one-two punch. Deep Medicare cuts, and even deeper cuts in Medicaid. Not only will one in four lose their Medicaid coverage, but they will be victimized by one of the cruellest aspects of the cuts—the elimination of any Federal quality standards for nursing homes.

Strong Federal quality standards for nursing homes were enacted by Congress with solid bipartisan support in 1987, after a series of investigations revealed appalling conditions in nursing homes throughout the Nation and shocking abuse of senior citizens and the disabled.

Elderly patients were often allowed to go uncleaned for days, lying in their own excrement. They were tied to wheelchairs and beds under conditions that would not be tolerated in any prison in America. Deliberate abuse and violence were used against helpless senior citizens by callous or sadistic attendants. Painful, untreated, and completely avoidable bedsores were found widespread. Patients had been scalded to death in hot baths and showers, or sedated to the point of unconsciousness, or isolated from all aspects of normal life by fly-by-night nursing home operators bent on profiteering from the misery of their patients.

These conditions, once revealed, shocked the conscience of the Nation. The Federal standards enacted by Congress ended much of this unconscionable abuse and achieved substantial improvements in the quality of care for nursing home residents.

Yet the Republican Medicaid cuts eliminate these Federal standards. It does not modify them. This bill does not reform them. It eliminates them. The House bill even repeals the nursing home ombudsman program that provides an independent check on conditions in nursing homes.

In addition, the cuts in Medicaid are so deep that even conscientious nursing home operators who want to maintain high quality care will be hard-pressed to afford the staff and equipment necessary to provide it.

It is difficult to believe that anyone, no matter how extreme their ideology, would take us back to the harsh nursing home conditions before 1987. But that is exactly what the Republican plan will do.

The Republican plan for Medicaid is an outrage. It says that society does not care about the most vulnerable groups in our country—senior citizens, children and people with disabilities.

In a very real way, Medicare and Medicaid is a lifeline for tens of millions of Americans who have nowhere else to turn. Without access to Medicare and Medicaid, many healthy children and many senior citizens will become sick and many will die. This bill can fairly be called The Sick Child and Dead Senior Citizen Act of 1995.

It is wrong, deeply wrong, to put millions of our citizens at much greater risk of illness and death in order to pay for tax breaks and special favors for the wealthy and powerful. Greed is not a family value. Republicans in Congress who intend to vote for these harsh and extreme cuts should think again before they wash their hands of their responsibility for the consequences of their votes.

These Republican proposals are too harsh and too extreme. They are not what the American people voted for last November. They should be rejected out of hand by Congress.

I withhold the balance of my time and yield it to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, at this time I would yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, thank you very much.

I think it is important to put the reforms that are proposed by the majority into context here and to try and speak about those reforms in rational language, instead of the panic and paranoia that has been expressed regarding those reforms.

It has been represented on the floor of the Senate today that the block grant program for Medicaid as proposed would be a collapse of the Medicaid system. I think that is an overstatement by a substantial amount.

Let me just address the issue of what kind of collapse could happen in the event we were to have the block grant program. We began in the State of Missouri, my home State, in which I had the privilege of serving as attorney general for 8 years and Governor for 8 years, a total of 16 years. During that timeframe we began to use managed care under a special waiver from the Federal Government to deal with the needs of those who needed assistance in regard to their medical needs.

And as a result of our experience with that, we have come up with some idea of how much we could do if we were given a block grant compared to what we were able to do under the Federal system of bureaucratic intermeddling and a one-size-fits-all Washingtonian Medicaid Program.

Now, it should be noted after I left the Governor's office almost 3 years ago now, my successor, who is a Democrat, maintained largely the same set of professionals to run the program, so that the individuals who will talk about the program from that experience are not partisan individuals. Earlier this year, the director of the program in the State of Missouri indicated if they had a block grant, they could increase the number of individuals covered from 600,000 under the Federal plan, to 900,000 if they had the flexibility of doing with the funds what a State could do under the flexibility of a block grant.

Now, I do not call the extension of medical services to an additional 50 percent a collapse of the system. I call this an empowerment of State and local governments to be able to do something that they may or may not deem necessary. It gives them the flexibility to meet the needs of the indigent rather than to define this in terms of a collapse.

I was interested with the statement, particularly because it was now a statement from an individual in a Democratic administration of a Midwestern State. And after it appeared in the newspapers around my State last January, I inquired of the individual who came to my office to talk about these proposals in the summer. And I asked him point blank, "Is this the fact that you could increase the coverage from 600,000 people to 900,000 people if you were absent the redtape, if you had the same amount of money on a block grant?" His direct testimony was "yes."

Now, that is not a collapse of the system. Now, it may be politically expedient to talk about scare tactics and to talk about collapses, but the truth of the matter is, we are not going to provide the basis for a collapse. We are going to provide the basis for meeting needs, and meeting them effectively. And just a few moments after we had the collapse theory expressed on the floor here today, we had the we would not have the slightest idea of what to do theory expressed on the floor today.

I cannot believe that a State as profoundly well disposed as Minnesota would not have the slightest idea in terms of how to meet the needs of their citizens. It is stunning to me. As a matter of fact, they could look to the State of Missouri, or a number of other States, to find out.

Let me just tell you some of the Missouri experience. As a matter of fact, even if we do not have this major reform, Missouri is going to try and continue to expand its ability to serve through managed care. Next year, Missouri would have half of all of its recipients on managed care.

What does the system look like? What does the system look like if States have the right to design the system, because they have been given a partial right in my home State? Here is what it looks like in St. Louis.

Last year, they decided to offer to Medicaid individuals the option for managed care. They asked companies that can provide that managed care to provide proposals. There were eight or nine companies that competed to provide proposals. Seven of them were authorized as a menu so that the people who have needs could get those needs met in a managed care system.

People choose the HMO. People choose the provider system that they want. Nine out of every ten recipients of the program make a choice. The other 10 percent have to be assigned by the State. They do not have enough interest in their medical care to even make their own choice, but they are assigned.

What is interesting to me is this: That at the end of every year, including our pilot program in Kansas City and St. Louis, individuals have a right to switch from one system to another.

If this were a draconian system, if this were an abusive system, if this were a system where there was lots of dissatisfaction, you would expect to see a lot of people switching at the end of every year. You would expect to see people trying to find a better way, looking for a different company, finding a different provider. You would expect to see a tremendous outpouring of rejection of the system of managed care that the block grant would really endow every State with the capacity to implement.

Do you know what? Do you know what the rate of changing providers is every year at the end of the year in the State of Missouri? The rate is 1 percent. There is a 1-percent dissatisfaction rate, individuals—well, they may not be dissatisfied, they may just try something else or they may move to a different part of the city so a different provider would be more convenient for them.

A 1-percent—1 percent—change rate does not indicate a system which is in collapse. It does not indicate a system which is in chaos. You do not have a 1-percent change rate if your system is one where they do not have the slightest idea about how to meet the needs. When you have a 1-percent change rate, you are really doing well.

I cannot imagine a federally operated system where 99 percent of the people were lauding the system and endorsing it by their sticking with the program, in spite of the fact they had six or eight other options from which to choose.

It has been said this is a shell game. Well, Mr. President, I say to my colleagues, it is a shell game all right to propose that this is chaos or this is collapse. We are not talking about reducing our commitment to individuals who are medically needy. We are talking about our ability to provide for ways of meeting their needs more substantially. If in Missouri we could expand from 600,000 to 900,000, just with ripping out the red tape, it is a shell game to say that we want to keep the old system.

Forty percent growth over the next 7 years in the resources—and if you could have a 50-percent increase in the number of recipients with the current amount of funds and you provide a 40-percent growth, this is empowerment, this is not shell, this is not collapse, this is not chaos, this is compassion, and I mean that seriously.

I just want to say that when we hear these arguments indicating that, "Oh, we're not going to be doing enough; there are children that are going to"—we have a system which is in collapse. We have a system which is in chaos. It says if to endow States with the capacity to correct the errors is going to promote collapse or chaos, we have collapse and chaos. That is what has happened in the welfare system of the United States. It not only collapsed financially, it has collapsed in terms of its humanity, and it is wasting resources. It is supporting in my State 600,000 people when the same resource could be supporting 900,000 people for medical care.

I might add that in the State of Missouri, this is not a State where we have to spend a whole lot of money to get the 99-percent satisfaction rate. Missouri is far below the national average when it comes to the kind of resources that are required to meet the needs of the medically needy.

So let us just try to set the record straight for a moment. Giving States the right and the opportunity to have cost reduction does not mean they are going to reduce the services. It may mean we are going to improve. It has in the State of Missouri, and I think it can in every other State.

Asking States to exercise their ingenuity in their capacity to rescue a failed system from the Federal Government does not mean we do not have the slightest idea about how we can meet the needs of individuals. I think that is an overstatement, even for Minnesota. I believe they will have a good idea, and I believe they can make it work.

This is an opportunity we have to change a failed system and to move from a failed system to a system that can succeed. It is not a tightfisted opportunity. It is not an opportunity that does not recognize that there will be additional needs. It is a system which provides for reasonable growth, but not unbridled expansion.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Florida, and I certainly support his motion to commit.

Mr. President, what happens to parents who are struggling to try to balance the raising of children and, at the same time, caring for aging parents under the Republican proposal? If a working family gets a new child tax credit but loses Medicaid nursing home coverage for an aging parent, what is the overall effect on that family? The child tax credit is $500 for some families. Not in West Virginia where two-thirds of our families would not get it.

Let us say for some families it is $500 a year, but the loss of Medicaid nursing home coverage in West Virginia would cost from $25,000 to $35,000 per family, because that is what a nursing home costs if you have to pay it yourself.

An example, Julie Sayers of Charleston, WV, cares for her mother who, as the Senator from Maryland was talking about, suffers from Alzheimer's disease, and she cared for her as long as she could at home, as children want to do, but when it came to the point that she could not care any longer, she had to take her mother to a nursing home.

Julie in this case gets a partial child tax credit, much less than $500 under the Republican package, but she cannot get Medicaid coverage for her mother in the nursing home. So what good is it, the child tax credit? What damage does the Medicaid cut do—$182 billion, $187 billion for a tax break for the wealthy.

Julie and her family are going to be a lot worse off under the Republican proposal, not better off, but worse off, and this is a real person caring for a real mother with Alzheimer's in West Virginia today.

Mr. President, I understand Medicaid needs reform, and Senator GRAHAM recognizes that there are responsible ways to reduce the rate of growth in Medicaid spending, but we really should not get down to the business of throwing seniors out of nursing homes. We really should not do that. That, in my judgment, is what the Republican amendment does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 20 minutes. The Senator from Florida has 13 minutes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President.

At this time, I will yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Tennessee, Senator FRIST.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise to speak against the amendment and in support of the underlying bill before us. I wish to take a few minutes to outline where we are going with Medicaid today. I have had the opportunity to spend some time in the private sector on Medicaid, and we have huge challenges there—challenges before me as a physician, before hospitals, before the beneficiaries and groups of people that, all too often, could fall through a safety net, and, in fact, today are falling through safety nets. Why? Because of excessive and burdensome regulations we put on the States that prevent the States from carrying out their mandate to provide that safety net through this joint Federal and State program called Medicaid.

The program is not working today. In fact, as most people know, only about half of the people under the poverty level are served by Medicaid today. It was Gov. Bill Clinton speaking before the House Operations Committee, in December of 1990, who said it, laid it out, clearly—as clearly as any of us could today. He said, "Medicaid used to be a program with a lot of options and few mandates. Now it is just the opposite."

The problem is that a well-intentioned program—once again, now 30 years old—has layered mandate upon mandate, regulation upon regulation, where we have tied the hands of our regulators, State governments, where they cannot carry out this important goal of serving people who are in need, or who cannot provide for themselves otherwise. The problem is crystal clear.

Again, it is one of these problems which has been laid out before us, which our Governors have told us about, which anybody who has participated in the system at a doctor-patient level, or at a level this Congress could recognize or should recognize. This underlying Republican plan will go a long way toward resolving that problem. The problem is that Federal spending has doubled over the last 5 years. It has doubled the amount of money that is put in from the Federal Government, without any observable improvement in services delivered.

The problem at the State level is that 20 percent, on average, of a State budget now goes to a Medicaid program, and that 20 percent is growing faster and faster and crowding out other State responsibilities.

Third, and probably most important, is the excessive regulation we impose by running this program and micromanaging this program out of Washington, DC, which results in waste, which some resources could be translated into very effective care for populations in need.

Now, the Republican Medicaid plan basically does one thing. It says we cannot micromanage the health care for the populations that have been defined out of Washington, DC. We have failed. We have not been able to control costs, and are only serving about 50 percent of the people under the poverty level.

What we have said overall in this bill is that we are going to give that responsibility to the States, to the people who are closer to home, who can identify the individual needs, strip away the thousands and thousands of regulations which tie the State's hands, and say you address the problem in the way that you see fit. But there are certain ramifications and certain general, broad areas that we say it is important to target.

In this bill we have said that 85 percent of current spending levels for mandatory services are for three distinct populations: One, families with pregnant women or children; two, individuals with disabilities; and, three, the indigent seniors.

The transformation of Medicaid will be, again, very simple. If we compare the old Medicaid to the new Medicaid program, in the past Medicaid has had an open-ended entitlement. Under the new Medicaid, we will move toward this concept of block grants, allowing States to control their dollars. Under the old Medicaid, we had Federal mandates with micromanagement, coming out of the beltway, out of the bureaucracy here in Washington. And under new Medicaid, we give States the flexibility to design the types of plans they think best identify the needs and meet the needs of their citizens.

Under the old Medicaid, it is expenditure-driven, increasing at a rate of about 17 percent a year, again and again. Under the new Medicaid, it will be needs-driven. Under the old Medicaid, there have been unlimited growth rates.

In my State of Tennessee, Medicaid grew by 40 percent just 3 years ago. There is no tax base that can keep up with 40-percent growth. Under the new Medicaid, Medicaid will continue to grow—continue to grow on a base year of 1995, in our particular plan, and grow at a rate of 7 percent next year, and then it will vary thereafter, according to formulas developed by the States.

Again, looking to my own State of Tennessee, what is one of the fundamental problems? On this chart is the Medicaid expenditure growth from 1986 out to 1993. You can see that, on average, as illustrated by the red going across, the growth in Tennessee has been about 22 percent. And remember, this growth of 20 percent is competing in a State budget for other issues, whether it is infrastructure or education; it is crowding out other State expenditures. In 1992, you can see, in one State we had growth rates in Medicaid of 44 percent. It was about 14 percent in fiscal year 1993.

Well, in Tennessee, we looked at three solutions: No. 1, raise taxes again and again and again. That is what we have done a number of times over the last decade. The American people have said, "We do not want to have our taxes raised again and again."

Second, we can go through massive health care reductions. In Tennessee, we said "no." Or we can undergo fundamental change. Tennessee is one of six States who got a waiver from HCFA in order to carry out a plan. The plan has had mixed results. Let me show you what the results have been overall. It was a program called TennCare.

Given the flexibility we want to give all 50 States—and only 6 have it today—there were 12 competing managed care organizations who, through a total demonstration project, assumed the care for about 1 million people in Tennessee. Primary care access has been improving over time under the program compared to the old Medicaid system. Nonemergency use of emergency rooms has gone down over time. The number of in-patient hospital days has gone down over time. And the overall budgetary expenditures have been met. In fact, growth there has been flat. But the exciting thing is that the quality of care has increased by overall objective standards and, not only that, the number of people covered has been markedly increased.

In 1993, before this reform plan, if you took the overall population of Tennessee, coverage was 89 percent. By using those Federal dollars sent to the State more wisely, more effectively, with all of the Government regulations stripped away, we were able to improve our overall coverage for all people across Tennessee from 89 percent to 94 percent.

So when you hear that by giving States more flexibility we are, in some way, decreasing access, you can look to Tennessee and say that we are one State that had regulations stripped away and were given that freedom to carry out a program that they thought best identified and covered the needs, and we were able to improve access across the State from 89 percent to 94 percent.

If we look at overall expenditures by allowing one State the flexibility to carry out their program, stripped away of the Federal regulations, we can see, when you compare Medicaid versus the new program called TennCare, which is in yellow here, the overall Medicaid projections growing at 20 percent a year, which are in the color red. The year is along the axis here. Starting from 1987, 1995 to 1998, we can see we have had this progressive growth up to 1995. If we had done nothing in Tennessee, the growth would have continued at 20 percent a year. But having an element of coordinated care, growth has been restrained over time. This is translated into savings for the American people, again, with good quality of care, and expanded coverage, in terms of the number of people covered.

So the final question is: Why can everybody not do what Tennessee did? Well, Oregon might want a different type of system; Hawaii might want another type of system; Missouri might want another system. Let us let people closer to home decide that, but we have to strip away the regulations.

In addition, the other comment might be, well, why cannot people get waivers like Tennessee did—and I participated in that process so I can tell you it is a huge burden to get the waiver.

In fact, on September 22, in a letter sent to the commissioner of the department of finance and administration in Nashville, TN, there are another 9 pages of terms and conditions for Tennessee to try to adhere under. We would do away with those regulations under the Medicaid proposal.

For all these reasons, I support the underlying bill and speak against the proposed amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I cleared it with the managers that I can have 2 minutes off bill debate time and I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. Thank you, Mr. President. I will speak to this issue for 4 minutes.

Mr. President, today we learned on the news that America is finally getting it. Mr. President, 57 percent of the people in the latest national poll say that the Republicans are gutting Medicare to pay for a tax cut for the rich.

It has taken awhile for the message to come through but people are waking up to the truth. The Republicans are gutting Medicare. They are gutting Medicaid. They are raising taxes on those who earn less than $30,000 a year to help fund a tax break for the wealthiest Americans. Those who earn over $350,000 a year do just great.

By the way, if you are one of those lucky people to have a $5 million estate, pop open that champagne because unless we Democrats prevail you are going to get millions of dollars back.

Today, the Senator from Florida is giving all Members a chance to modify this radical and extreme budget as it relates to Medicaid.

I have listened very carefully to Senator FRIST, to Senator ASHCROFT, and neither of them address the main issue addressed in this amendment, which is the devastating nature of these cuts, the very size of these cuts.

Let me put it into perspective. In America today, the Medicaid Program costs $90 billion a year. The Republicans want to cut $187 billion out of that. That is 2 years—more than 2 years of expenditures of the Medicaid Program over a 7-year period. They are cutting 2 years of Medicaid out of 7 years.

I ask, as a person who works for a living, over a 7-year period, could you afford to be unemployed for 2 years? Could you afford to lose that much income and pull your family together? I think it is clear that the answer is no.

Do you know what the cuts mean to California? Mr. President, $18 billion. Millions of children will not be served. Millions of working poor will not be served. Emergency rooms will close. Trauma centers will close.

My friends say, oh, there is so much room to be more efficient. California is the most efficient in the Nation. How do we get more efficiency out of a system that is already the most efficient?

The answer is that people will be kicked off the program. Who are these people who are on Medicaid? We should look at them. Who are these people on Medicaid? They are the most disabled people among us, the most disabled children among us—children with spina bifida, children with cystic fibrosis. They are the working poor who cannot get insurance. They are the down and out who maybe lost their job and need help.

By the way, they are the seniors. Two-thirds of the seniors in nursing homes are on Medicaid. I do not know if you have been to a nursing home lately, but buried in this bill is a provision to repeal national standards for nursing homes.

We are not only cutting all of this, we are gutting the standards.

Now, I heard Senator ROTH, the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, on the radio this morning saying, "These Democrats, they do not want change. They want the same old thing."

I want to respond to that. We Democrats want change, but there is a difference. We want good change. We want change that is good for America.

President Clinton has a record of change—more jobs, less unemployment, AmeriCorps, lower deficit for the first time 3 years in a row since Harry Truman. That is good change.

This is evil change. This is bad change. This is greedy change. Support our friend from Florida.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, the Senator from California spoke as if there were going to be decreases in the amount of funding.

I think it is important to just call to the attention of the American people that when we refer to cuts here in Washington we are referring to cuts in the amount of increase. We are not going to take 2 years out of the funding of the next 7 years. We are going to reduce the level of increase. We will still have a 40-percent increase in the amount of resource available.

It is important that we define the situation in terms that the American people would normally use. In that respect, we have a 40-percent increase in funding.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. ASHCROFT. Your comment referred to my argument and I choose not to yield.

The second thing that the Senator from California said, how can you get a system more efficient? I think it is clear, we allow States to develop the efficiencies that provide for as much as a 50 percent increase in the delivery of services.

The fact of the matter is, that is what has been shown in the pilot projects in Missouri. Our director of Medicaid says that if he could just get rid of the Federal regs he could move from 600,000 people to 900,000 people with the same amount of money. That is how you get more efficient—take the onerous one-size-fits-all Federal Government out of the picture.

I yield 6 minutes of our remaining time to the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRIST). The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, would it not be interesting to be some kind of out-of-touch observer and walk out and listen to the last day or so, the conversation. It is not a debate. It is posturing conversation.

I just walked in and listened. It would be pretty hard to follow. It would be pretty hard to try and establish from listening here what the goals were and what the purpose was, particularly from our friends on the other side of the aisle.

I think you have to conclude certainly we are not all coming from the same base of facts. I think you have to conclude that in some cases there is not even any clearly defined goals that are being pursued on that side of the aisle.

I think you would have to conclude there is quite a different philosophy—a philosophy of maintaining the status quo, of attacking the proposals without any particular plan, to continue the growth of Government and the size of spending. That would have to be the goal that you would assume from the conversation.

You would be confused when you hear constantly time after time this idea that you are reducing Medicare so that we can increase tax cuts.

The fact of the matter is that part A of Medicare is financed by withholding from wages. It goes into a trust fund. You have two choices when it is growing at 10.5 percent. You can either do something about the cost and reduce that rate of growth or you can add more to the withholding.

I do not hear that proposition being done. Those are the choices. It has nothing to do with taxes. It has nothing to do with balancing the budget. If the balanced budget was not in the picture, you would be talking about how do you take care of part A in Medicare. You do not hear that. That is a fact. That is a fact.

You can probably balance the budget it we stop using all the charts that we have out here, for one thing.

We do have a plan. The Republicans do have a plan. The plan is to balance the budget instead of more debt. A responsible thing we need to do for our kids as we go into another century, we have a plan to have some middle-class tax cuts instead of increasing—the largest increase we ever had—like last year.

I hope we get on into this earned-income tax credit, this 50 percent of people's taxes going up. That is just not the case. You might be reducing some of the payments that have been going under earned-income taxes—it is not increasing taxes. We know that.

We ought to be talking about Medicare solvency. That is what our purpose is. We ought to be talking about jobs and opportunity, instead of welfare dependency. That is what we are talking about here, making some changes that have not been made for years. My friends start by saying yes, we need changes, and then resist them. That has become the pattern here.

Let me tell you just a little bit about Medicaid in Wyoming. Republicans surely have taken a historic approach to it. In Wyoming, spending will rise on Medicaid from $110 million in 1996 to $168 million in the year 2002. That is not really a cut, is it? On an individual basis, the average Federal grant for each person in poverty will grow from $2,188 to $3,263, hardly a cut.

Certainly we need more flexibility. We have heard from some of the former Governors. We heard, of course, from the Governors in the States who say give us more flexibility and we can take these dollars and more effectively run the program. The Governors have asked for more flexibility. The Republican bill mandates benefits for low-income pregnant women, children up to 12, elderly and disabled as defined by the State—those are mandates that are there that, indeed, some of the Governors are objecting to.

Medicaid, as the Senator from Tennessee indicated, has exploded in terms of its growth rate; an annual rate of 19.1 percent between 1989 and 1994. You cannot sustain that kind of growth. So you need to look for ways to deliver the system, to deal with the core problems and that is helping to reduce the costs by giving more flexibility to States to shape their programs. The program in Wyoming for the delivery of Medicaid needs to be quite different than the program in West Virginia or Massachusetts, and we need the flexibility to do that.

So, Mr. President, we have talked about the benefits. States will meet a minimum spending level of Medicaid. For low-income pregnant women, children up to 12, elderly and disabled as defined by the State, States will be required to spend at least 85 percent of the amount they spend in 1995. They will be allowed to put together programs like AFDC and Food Stamps if they choose, to put together a package of benefits.

Regarding nursing home standards, the committee responded to the Governors' requests by granting them authority to write standards under Federal guidelines. States must establish and maintain standards for quality care, which must be promulgated through their State legislatures—people, I suppose, who have no caring for the elderly. I do not believe that. Most of you have served in State legislatures. Do not tell me the States do not care. I cannot believe what I hear from time to time about that.

So, we do need to make changes if we want to continue to have a program that delivers services. That is what it is all about. I think we ought to take a little look at the long-term goals and the breadth of the goals that are in this bill. They have to do with balancing the budget. They have to do with job opportunities. They have to do with dealing with some of the problems which have brought us to where we are.

I really wish we could talk just a little bit more about the facts. For instance, this tax business that we hear every time someone stands up. Tell me a little bit about part A of Medicare and how that gives a tax offset. I would like to know more about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 90 seconds to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to make a few remarks about the effects of the proposal to reduce projected Medicaid expenditures by over $186 billion over 7 years on those in Alabama—poor mothers and children, the disabled, and the elderly—who count on Medicaid for their medical and long-term care.

First, and most importantly, the Republicans proposal, if adopted, would immediately place the Alabama Medicaid Program in a state of utter chaos. It would place a gun to the head of the Governor and State legislature. They would be forced to make immediate, savage cuts—about 21 percent—in the program. These cuts, over $386 million, would have to be imposed the current fiscal year, starting in the second quarter of the year.

Let me be very clear about this. These cuts would be imposed on the Medicaid budget that has been in effect since October 1, 1995. The only alternative available to these cuts would be an immediate major increase in taxes on the people of Alabama. This would not happen given the "no new taxes" pledge of our Republican Governor.

My second observation is that this sudden cut is only part of the almost $3 billion hit the Republican bill would impose on Alabama. I know the other side claims that Alabama and other States can easily handle these cuts by achieving greater efficiencies in the program. Well, sure they can, and I can tell you how. They can cut poor people off the program by restricting eligibility. For those who remain, access to care can be cut by simply reducing payments to providers, doctors, hospitals, and nursing homes, below the costs of their services. At that point, these services will no longer be available.

Finally, Mr. President, our Republican colleagues repeatedly assert that all of these cuts are not real, they are simply reductions in the rate of increase. However, as we have finally had an opportunity to examine the details of the bill, we find that in some important instances this is simply not the case. For example, the Medicaid proposal cuts funds going to hospitals that care for a disproportionate share of patients that do not have insurance or other means to pay for their care as reduced immediately by 56 percent. I repeat, this is a real cut of $185 million. According to Dr. Claude Bennett, President of UAB, almost 30 percent of Alabamians are medically indigent and responsibility for providing care to them falls largely upon their University Hospital. Dr. Bennett is correctly concerned that it can continue to shoulder this burden which will surely increase in the face of these cuts.

Now, I know, Mr. President, that in the backrooms the majority is continuing to cut deals in an effort to fix up this disaster. States are pitted against States. If Alabama gets its situation improved, which it must, the poor in some other States will suffer. The bottom line is this—these Medicaid cuts are simply too much, too soon. Our State will not be able to cope without hurting people. We must rethink what we are doing.

REAL FAMILIES VERSUS REPUBLICAN RHETORIC

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, Republican rhetoric is that working families will be helped, but I question if this will be true for real families in West Virginia.

This Republican package seeks to cut Medicaid funding by a whopping $187 billion over 7 years. But people deserve to understand what such harsh cuts mean. Medicaid covers poor children, pregnant women, the disabled, and low-income seniors who need nursing home care. What happens to these people and their families when we slash Medicaid funding?

Coming from West Virginia, when I think of a family, I think about the children, parents, and grandparents. What happens to parents struggling to balance raising children and caring for aging parents?

If a working family gets a new child tax credit but loses Medicaid nursing home coverage for an aging parent, what is the overall effect on that family? The child tax credit is $500 a year for some families lucky enough to qualify, but the loss of Medicaid nursing home coverage will cost those same families $16,000 to $30,000 a year.

For example, Julie Sayres of Charleston, WV cared for her mother who suffers with Alzheimer's disease as long as she could at home. But as her mother's illness got worse, she had to move to a local nursing home where Julie can visit her daily. Julie may get a partial child tax credit of $500 under this package, but if she cannot get Medicaid coverage for her mother in the nursing home when her mother's meager savings are exhausted, Julie and her family will be much, much worse off. That child tax credit will not cover even a month of nursing home care for her mother.

This is real story about a family hurt, not helped by this package.

In my State of West Virginia, over 21 percent of our residents rely on Medicaid, and I worry about what will happen to them and the health care system in my State as it tries to absorb more than $4 billion in cuts—West Virginia simply cannot afford this.

A headline from the Charleston Daily Mail last week reads: "[Medicaid] Cuts May Affect Infant Mortality."

This catches one's attention. It demands closer scrutiny and careful thought. The article reports:

> With the help of Medicaid-funded programs, West Virginia's infant mortality death rate decreased from 18.4 deaths per 1,000 in 1975 to 6.2 deaths per 1,000 in 1994, better than the national rate of 8.0 deaths per 1,000 births.
>
> Medicaid has greatly increased poor women's opportunities to get medical care, said Phil Edwards, the administrative assistant for the Bureau of Public Health's Division of Women's Services. "By making them eligible, they go in for prenatal care earlier than they would otherwise," he said. "Every dollar you spend on this side in prevention, you save four on the other side where you don't have to treat an at-risk patient," Diane Kopcial of the state maternal and child health office said.

Mr. President, I believe this article should make us all stop and think before we impose such cuts in Medicaid. Do we really want to jeopardize nursing home care for seniors? Do we really want to slide backward on infant mortality?

I do not want to go backward. I understand that Medicaid needs reform and our amendment recognizes that there are responsible ways to reduce the rate of growth in Medicaid spending. But we should not throw seniors out of nursing homes, deny poor mothers access to prenatal care and possibly return to times when our infant mortality rate rivals some Third World countries, or turn our backs on the disabled.

We should think about the real families in West Virginia and cross this country who depend on Medicaid for basic, vital health care.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full article from the Charleston Daily Mail, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Charleston Daily Mail, Oct. 20, 1995]

Cuts May Affect Infant Mortality

The state Medicaid Crisis Panel began wrapping up its work as health officials expressed concern that federal cuts in the program could reverse progress the state has made reducing infant deaths.

The panel appointed by Gov. Gaston Caperton will recommend ways to cut $200 million out of the Medicaid program this year to balance the budget. It recommend long-term changes that should prepare the program to handle likely federal cuts.

Medicaid is a health care program for the poor and disabled. The federal government pays 75 percent of the cost and the state pays the rest.

At the insistence of Administration Secretary Chuck Polan, the Department of Health and Human Resources will prepare a priority list of money-saving measures it already is taking and those it thinks the state should take.

The list, with the amount each change would save, will be presented at the panel's meeting next Thursday.

The group will begin discussing its recommendations then, but will meet final time on Oct. 29 to reach an agreement, said Chairman from Haywood.

Meanwhile, state health officials are worried that proposed federal Medicaid cuts could increase infant mortality.

With the help of Medicaid-funded programs, West Virginia's infant death rate decreased from 18.4 deaths per 1,000 births in 1975 to 6.2 deaths per 1,000 births in 1994, officials said. The national rate is 8.0 deaths per 1,000 births.

Diane Kopcial of the state maternal and child health office said that when Medicaid expanded in the 1980s the state:

Recruited physicians to care for Medicaid patients.

Built a referral system with hospitals in Charleston, Morgantown and Huntington.

Began the Right from the Start program to serve Medicaid-eligible woman during their pregnancies and 60 days after they give birth. It also serves infants up to age 1. The program provides nutritional counseling, parenting education, and transportation to medical appointments.

The Women, Infants and Children program also provides nutrition and health education, free food and breastfeeding information for women and children under 5.

Medicaid has greatly increased poor women's opportunities to get medical care, and Phil Edwards, the administrative assistant for the Bureau of Public Health's Division of Women's Services.

"By making them eligible, they'll go in for prenatal care earlier than they would otherwise," he said.

"Every dollar you spend on this side in prevention, you save four on the other side where you don't have to treat an at-risk patient," Kopical said.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today to join my Democratic colleagues in opposition to the Republican proposal to replace the joint Federal-State Medicaid Program with a block grant to the States.

Medicaid currently guarantees that 36 million low-income pregnant women, children, disabled, and elderly Americans have access to hospitals, physicians, nursing homes, and other basic health care. The Republican plan would eliminate this guarantee and cut Medicaid by $182 billion by the year 2002.

What the Republicans are proposing is to cut Medicaid and then lower the standards States must meet because they know that the standards cannot be met with the lower level of funding. In a recent letter to Members of the Senate, the National Association of Counties expressed quite correctly the natural consequence of this proposal. I quote from that letter:

> We do not believe that States will find enough budgetary efficiencies without reducing eligibility. The flexibility given to States in the operation of the proposed restructuring will trickle down to counties in the form of flexibility to raise property taxes, cut other necessary services or further reduce staff.

The Republican plan endangers the future health, well being, and productivity of millions of low-income pregnant women, poor children, and disabled Americans. It jeopardizes the long-term care of millions of our elderly. And these sweeping policy changes have been proposed, passed out of committee—and may well be passed by the Senate—without one official public committee hearing.

Because of this, I joined with a number of my Democratic colleagues earlier this month in convening several hearings on the Medicaid and Medicare programs. We wanted to hear from the people who will be affected by the proposed changes. During those hearings, we heard some very moving testimony regarding the impact the Republican plan to cut Medicaid will have on the lives of average, hard working middle-class Americans. Since many Members were unable to hear this very moving testimony, I would like to insert in the RECORD one of the more compelling statements presented at these hearings by Ms. Mary Fitzpatrick from Dickson, Tennessee.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, so follows:

Testimony of Mary Fitzpatrick

My name is Mary Fitzpatrick. I live in Dickson, Tennessee, about 50 miles outside of Nashville. Once again, I am in Washington to speak on behalf of the rights and needs of citizens in nursing homes. I use the word "again" because it was eight years ago that I sat before members of Congress and described a pattern of neglect and poor care that led to my mother's death in a nursing home in 1984. I spoke then because I wanted to do whatever I could to prevent another human being from the pain and denial of dignity that my mother, Maggie Connolly, endured. I did not want any other family to have to bear the agony of watching a loved one suffer because of lack of basic services and a system that fails to protect frail, vulnerable people. And I want to spare others the despair my family felt trying to persuade the state of Tennessee to enforce nursing home standards.

The account I gave eight years ago helped achieve bipartisan support for the 1987 Nursing Home Reform Act. Imagine my shock in learning of the current proposal to undermine this law.

I cannot believe Congress would consider returning to a system that renders quality nursing home care an option for states, especially when I know what the state did for my mother—absolutely nothing.

Obviously, lawmakers in Washington are out of touch with ordinary people. And that's who people in nursing homes and their families are—ordinary individuals seeking a safe setting and adequate services during an emotionally, physically trying time.

Ordinary people understand the need to control the federal deficit. Ordinary people realize the importance of ensuring accountability for public dollars paid to the nursing home industry each year.

What is beyond our comprehension is how elected officials can support a proposal that will hurt people who can not speak out for themselves.

As I explained in 1987, after my mother's admission to the nursing home, my daily routine soon became one of cleaning up my mother's waste, bathing her and changing her linen as soon as I arrived each afternoon. The facility denied my mother this basic care. I even had to fight for the supplies to provide that care myself.

My mother raised three children, and until a stroke at age 47 had worked in a bag manufacturing plant. Prior to her admission to the nursing home, she suffered from Parkinsons disease and congestive heart failure and lost her ability to speak. In 1983, her condition quickly deteriorated. After a two week hospital stay, she became incontinent and her doctors advised us she would need to go to a nursing home. I favored a nursing facility near my home. Unfortunately, my mother's source of payment, Medicaid, was not preferred by that facility which refused her admittance.

Upon recommendation and a tour of the chapel, lunchroom and some of the residence floors, we chose a facility then called the Belmont Health Care Center. From day one, my brother, sister and I visited mother regularly. My brother even changed shifts so that he could see her each afternoon.. I would come by directly from work, missing dinner to stay until 8:30 or 9:00 p.m. Weekends also involved regular visits from family and friends. There was never a day during my mother's nursing home stay that she did not receive care and attention for several hours from family members or friends. Still, the problems began almost immediately.

On the third day of my mother's nursing home stay, I found her seated in her own waste in a wheelchair. Giving up on finding any staff to assist me, I changed mother's clothing and cleaned her up myself. Soon after I was unable to find any clean linens and was informed of a new policy allowing each residents just two sets of linens. I was persistent and was able to obtain some fresh linens. But there was always a shortage of supplies and on many days, I had to search the linen closets on several floors to find a single set of clean bed linens.

Within six weeks my mother developed her bed sore. Eventually the sores covered her body, making it impossible for her to lie without pressing on the painful skin ulcers. By the time she died eight months later at the age of 75, one of the original sores measured about three inches across and nearly two inches deep. The staff never carried out the instructions on regularly repositioning her. My brother, sister and I would turn her while we were there, but she was supposed to be turned every two hours around the clock. Nor was there sufficient staff to properly care for my mother's bed sores. Two nurses showed me how to clean the bed sores and told me where to purchase special medical dressing. I bought and used them regularly, but the nursing home administration continued telling me that they couldn't find out whether the pharmacy carried these dressings.

There were other problems. Residents like my mother who were unable to reach out for water could go for many hours without anything to drink. My mother's roommate told us how my mother once had dabbed a Kleenex and spilled water on a tray and held it in her mouth to relieve her thirst. Throughout this ordeal none of the family or friends caring for my mother knew where to go for help. Finally a friend located someone on the Tennessee Department of Health and Environment Nursing Home Inspections staff. I called him and explained our concerns about retaliation. He promised confidentiality and said someone would be out within the next few days. But it wasn't until a few weeks that a state inspector came. One of my complaints involved getting proper care for my mother's bed sores.

Then two days after the state inspector's visit I came to the facility and found my mother's sheets soaked in blood. She was lying on her side crying. I pulled back the covers and saw her bed sores had been debrided, which means surgically cut to remove the dead tissue. I was shocked to find that the procedure had been performed at the nursing home instead of the hospital. Given the seriousness of the bed sores, she must have been in agony. But when I asked what they could do for the pain, I was told, "Tylenol is all we can give."

I think mother probably went into shock. But, in any event, she died two days later on July the 7th, 1984. When I was getting ready to go to the funeral home the state inspector called me to say that they had been out a few days before to investigate my allegations of three weeks ago. He said I would be pleased to know that most of my complaints had been substantiated. I told him it was too late. My mother was dead.

The undertaker told me he had never seen a body in such bad condition, and that he had to enclose the lower half of mother's body in a plastic bag. One of the most disturbing things about this whole ordeal is that my mother was aware of what was going on, even though she could not express herself, other than through gestures and facial expressions. And, all the while, I was haunted by the fact that other people in nursing homes, both young and older, were going through the same hell that my mother went through.

It has been very difficult to have to relive this experience the second time around. But, it is even harder to accept the fact, Congress is preparing to destroy a law that would have saved my mother and so many others, so much pain and suffering. Thank you for the chance to speak. I would be glad to try and answer any questions.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, Ms. Fitzpatrick laid out before us in detail commonly found nursing home conditions before passage of Federal nursing home minimum quality standards. The Republican plan we are considering would repeal the minimum quality standards for nursing homes. In my view, such a proposal is mean spirited and illogical.

Morton Kondracke in a recent column described the consequences of this proposal:

> The Republicans need to face up to the fact that, if they go through with their planned reforms in poor people's healthcare, instances of abuse, neglect, broken bones, urine-soaked beds and filthy surroundings will multiply in the years to come.

Mr. President, those were the very conditions that led to the enactment of the 1987 legislation. And now they want to repeal these standards. They want to repeal them because they know that without them some nursing home—some, not all—but some nursing homes will be able to absorb the reduced funding by lowering their standards of care. They will return to the old days of mistreatment and nontreatment which Mary Fitzpatrick and Morton Kondracke described as a means of cutting costs to respond to the slashed funding. Other nursing homes—the ones that do not lower their standards—may simply stop serving those families which cannot afford to pay $50,000-$60,000 a year for nursing home care. And who will this affect? The 4 million elderly who depend on Medicaid for their nursing home care and their families.

Mr. President, our Government should not renege on its commitment to ensuring that millions of needy, disabled, and elderly Americans receive essential basic health care. The Republican proposal, which would eliminate such guarantees, could have disastrous consequences for many citizens, and I would strongly urge my colleagues not to go down this path.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the Democratic leadership amendment to restore over $125 billion to the Medicaid Program.

Our Republican colleagues constantly remind us how important family values are to them. I think that's great. Families are the backbone of our society. They provide nurturing and loving environments for our children. They provide stability and safety, and foster values we need to become better people and a better society.

What are family values? I'll tell you what I think they are. I think family values are honoring your mother and father. I think family values are honesty—keeping promises. Family values are care and dedication to the well-being of those you love.

Family values are not breaking promises, they are not telling your mother and father that they'll have to do without medical care, and they're absolutely not about risking the safety of your parents when you can no longer provide the care they need and have to put them in a nursing home.

Mr. President, there are 18 million children in the United States who depend on Medicaid. There are more than 900,000 elderly people who depend on Medicaid for their nursing home care. There are 6 million disabled Americans who depend on Medicaid.

The wealthy won't be affected by these draconian cuts. It's likely that the vast majority of the 100 Senators in this room won't be affected, nor will most of the 435 Members of the House.

The people who are affected are normal, regular, everyday Americans. Not big-time lobbyists; not big-money campaign contributors. The people who are affected are people like my neighbors, my mom, and the kids who go to St. Stanislaw's Catholic School right down the street from me.

Mr. President, there are 6 million disabled Americans who rely on Medicaid because they cannot get private health insurance. It's not because they don't want it. It's not because they can't afford it. It's because no private insurance company will cover them. Without Medicaid, where will they go? I believe that I am my brother's keeper. We have a responsibility to our fellow women and men. Make no mistake about it.

Mr. President, Medicaid is a program that benefits a broad spectrum of Americans. One in five children in America—18 million kids—receive their health coverage through Medicaid. One in five. Healthy children are the first step to a strong America. The next generation must be healthy in body and mind in order to make the large contribution to our society that we're all trying to prepare them for.

These kids don't understand Medicaid. They don't understand the process, and, quite frankly, they probably don't care. But their parents do. Their parents worry themselves sick about whether or not we're going to take away their ability to get medical care for their kids.

I worry myself sick about that too. But there's a difference. I have a vote on this floor, and I have the bully pulpit. And I want them to know that I'm on their side. I'm fighting for them. I want the parents of the 18 million children on Medicaid to know that I stand ready to help them help themselves.

I'm glad this legislation does not repeal the Spousal Impoverishment Act. I authored this act in 1988. And I'm here to tell you I'm standing sentry to make sure this critical protection is maintained.

My dad died of Alzheimer's disease. My mom, my sisters and I made use of a long-term care continuum in Maryland. We took Dad to a geriatric evaluation center at Johns Hopkins to be sure we knew what was wrong with him and how to keep him at home with us longer. We used adult day care to stretch out his ability to stay with us and to help with respite care for my mother—a heart bypass survivor. But we reached a point when we knew we couldn't give him the level of care that he needed. And we had to bring him to a nursing home.

I visited my dad all the time at his home. It wasn't a Cadillac, Gucci-style nursing home. Dad would have hated that. It was a real nursing home with real patients who had real families.

Over time I got to know those families. I listened to their stories—to their trials and their tribulations. I heard stories about how you had to spend down your life savings to $3,000 before you could qualify for help. Families had to go into bankruptcy while they were trying to practice family responsibility.

My dad wasn't the kind of guy who wanted a fancy tombstone. He wanted to make sure that what he left behind would help others. I made a promise that I'd try to change the cruel rules of Government that penalize families who have saved all their lives.

I'm so proud that with the help of great men like Lloyd Bentsen, George Mitchell, TED KENNEDY, and the members of the Finance Committee, we changed that law so that now you can keep your home, you can keep assets up to $15,000, and the spouse at home can have an income of up to $1,000 a month. So, I'm glad that this won't be repealed, and I want to make sure it never, ever is. I want all Senators to know that in this regard, we've done well by the American people.

Unfortunately, I cannot say the same for the rest of the bill. In this legislation we are repealing nursing home safety standards! That is horrific.

As I just said, my father was in a Chevy Cavalier nursing home—not a Cadillac nursing home. But we all knew that he would be fed, he would be taken care of, he would receive his medication, we wouldn't have to worry about restraints, we wouldn't have to worry about abuse. We knew that because of the standards, dad would be safe.

In 1983 Congress commissioned a study by the Institute of Medicine at the National Academy of Sciences. This study revealed shocking deficiencies in nursing home care. In 27 States, at least one-third of facilities had care so poor that it jeopardized health and safety.

Some nursing home residents have been treated in conditions which are worse than prisons. Worse than prisons!

In 1987 Senator PRYOR led the charge to enact the standards which now protect nursing home residents. He's still leading that charge, and I thank him for that.

Now we want to repeal those standards? Not this Senator. I will not, under any circumstance, allow anyone in this body to put the lives of men like my father at risk.

Saying "yes" to this amendment says yes to keeping promises, it tells our seniors, our children and the disabled that we care about their wellbeing. That we will help them if they've played by the rules and if they're making the effort to help themselves. And that we will not let those few nursing home profiteers put them at risk in the name of turning a buck.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to support the amendment offered by Senator GRAHAM.

The bill before us creates a Medicaid block grant, a blank check, to States with virtually no rules, no specified benefits, no rules of eligibility.

The amendment would retain the current Medicaid Program, but impose a spending limit per individual recipient, an individual cap. This approach would hold down cost increases without undermining Medicaid as a health insurance program.

MEDICAID IN CALIFORNIA

Medicaid, called Medi-Cal in my State, pays for health care for 6 million Californians. Out of these 6 million, 38 percent are children. Medicaid pays the bills of over 60 percent of children in California's children's hospitals. At Oakland Children's Hospital, it pays for 70 percent.

Medicaid provides 70 percent of hospital care to the poor in my State. Of total Medicaid dollars, over 59 percent is spent on the elderly and disabled and 41 percent to families.

One million Americans are infected with HIV/AIDS. In California, there are over 150,000. Medicaid provides health insurance for 40 percent of all people with HIV/AIDS, including 90 percent of all HIV-infected children. In California, Medicaid pays for 50 percent of all HIV/AIDS care. Medicaid pays for 55 percent of HIV-related public hospital care and 41 percent of private hospital care.

In my State, Medicaid paid $719 million for emergency services for illegal immigrants, last year, according to the California Department of Health Services.

Medicaid is a fundamental health safety net in California, insuring everything from basic inoculations for poor children to sophisticated advanced treatment for AIDS.

MEDICAID COST INCREASES

As a former mayor, I know the difficulty of balancing budgets and keeping costs under control. And there is no doubt that Medicaid costs, along with general health care inflation, have grown at double digits, creating tremendous pressure on government budgets at all levels.

The amendment before us reins in Medicaid's growth, but instead of cutting $187 billion, it cuts $62 billion, one-third of the cut in the Republican bill.

WHY THE GRAHAM AMENDMENT IS BETTER THAN THE ROTH BILL

Why is this approach preferable to the committee bill?

First, it does put restraints on spiraling costs.

Second, it preserves coverage for those who cannot get health insurance on the private market because of costs or the individual's health condition.

Third, a per capita cap can respond to changing conditions—population growth, recessions, base closings, natural disasters, immigration.

CALIFORNIA AND FLUCTUATIONS

The per capita cap approach in this amendment would enable my State to respond to all the economic fluctuations that we live with daily.

Unemployment in California has not dropped below 7 percent since 1990. While the country added 3 million jobs between 1991 and 1993, California lost nearly 450,000.

Base closures and realignments have erased more than 200,000 jobs, sucking $7 billion out of the State's economy. Defense and aerospace industries are downsizing.

Some 6.5 million or 23 percent of our nonelderly population are without health insurance. In some urban areas, the uninsured rate is as high as 33 percent. Over half, 58 percent of the uninsured, are children and young adults.

Employer-provided health insurance is declining. Two-thirds of Californians employed by firms with fewer than 25 employees do not receive health insurance.

California is home to 38 percent of all legal immigrants in the U.S.

A flat block grant with a fixed pool of money cannot respond to changing needs like this. A formula that is responsive to numbers of beneficiaries, like this amendment, can.

NURSING HOME CARE

The amendment before us would preserve nursing home standards, standards that S. 1357 eliminates.

Responding to a National Academy of Sciences report, Congress in 1987 enacted nursing home standards to promote quality of life of nursing home residents and to prevent abuse and neglect. This bill repeals those standards, rules designed to prevent bedsores, dehydration, malnutrition, infection; rules designed to protect privacy and human integrity. These standards have reduced injury and cut the use of chemical restraints, which in turn has reduced costs.

In California, 65 percent of our 113,000 nursing home residents rely on Medicaid. This is 113,000 elderly and disabled people, patients with, for example, Alzheimer's, AIDS, and ventilator needs.

Twenty-one percent of nonelderly nursing home residents are disabled. Seventy-five percent of nursing home residents are women. The typical nursing home resident is an 83-year-old widow with multiple chronic conditions, such as crippling arthritis or osteoporosis.

We should not take away these minimal protections for the most frail and make them victims again.

MEDICAID—A MIDDLE-CLASS PROGRAM

Medicaid is health insurance for low-income Americans and the disabled. But it is important to understand the implications Medicaid has for the middle-class. Nursing home standards, which are required as a condition of receiving Medicaid payments, benefit every nursing home resident of whatever income.

By cutting Medicaid, we add to the rolls of the uninsured which means that more people show up in emergency rooms with exacerbated illnesses. We all pay for that.

Medicaid reimbursement to our public hospitals enables these hospitals to have up-to-date trauma centers and emergency rooms which serve Medicaid and non-Medicaid patients. These are critical institutions in many communities on which we all depend. Indeed, these institutions are at the economic core of thousands of communities and they provide jobs.

A BASIC PROTECTION

The committee bill makes drastic cuts in Medicaid and it revamps the program in a way that cannot respond to the growing needs of California and changes a steadfast program of health insurance to an arbitrary, ill-defined block of Federal funds.

The bill purports to transform Medicaid. I'm afraid that it destroys Medicaid.

I oppose the committee bill. I commend my colleague from Florida for his amendment and I support him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Washington 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Florida for this very important amendment he has brought before us today. It seems, so often when we come out on the Senate floor, we get caught up in the charts and graphs and "Senatese" terms that we hear so often and we forget what we are doing affects very real people and very real families across this country. I want to talk about one of those very real people. He is a young child. He is 21 months old. He lives in my State. His mother wrote me a desperate letter saying, "Please do not take away Medicaid."

Her son, Abe, was born with a severe medical disorder. He needs a modified ventilator to breathe 22 out of every 24 hours. In his short 21 months, he has had many surgeries to help put fingers on his hands, to help him breathe, to help him live. His mother said, without Medicaid, Abe would not be here.

This mother is desperate because she knows, as all of us do, that if we change this bill in the way that is being proposed by the Republicans, she will have to fight for Medicaid coverage with everyone else in my State who is desperately going to be looking for help, and it is very likely that Abe will not have his ventilator once this goes to our States.

I went out and I talked to hundreds of parents in my State who have children at Children's Orthopedic Hospital in my home State. These are parents who did not expect to have a child with a severe medical disorder. They did not expect to have a child with asthma, who was in the hospital every other week. They did not expect to have a child who had leukemia. And they did not expect that they would have to quit their job to stay home and take care of that child. They did not expect that their own medical insurance would run out within a very short time because of the limits on insurance. And they never expected to have to turn to the Federal Government to ask for help.

But I can tell you everyone of those parents needs our help and this amendment will send that assurance back to them. I urge my colleagues to support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, how much time is left on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes for the Senator from Michigan and 7 minutes and 30 seconds the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I would prefer not to use our 2 minutes at this point.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that off of the general debate on the bill there be 3 minutes yielded, one of which will be yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin as well as 1 minute for debate of this motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Senator from Florida and I thank the Chair. If we do not make changes very quickly, I am very concerned that older people in our society are going to get the message from this budget that we have changed our attitude toward their contributions in building this society. What other impression are senior citizens supposed to get, when a huge percentage of balancing the budget is based on enormous, and I think in many cases unjustified, changes in Medicare, changes that will increase the premiums of seniors in this country well beyond what they would have been.

Equally bad is something that is being discussed, as we sit here today, over in the Senate Aging Committee, namely the completely unjustified elimination of the Federal nursing home regulations from OBRA 1987. What fiscal or other justification is there for saying to older people who now must be in a nursing home after a hard life, a life of work and contribution to country and family, that we are not going to be sure on a national level that people are protected from unhealthy and unsafe conditions?

Those of my colleagues who served in State legislatures, or served as Governors of their State, will certainly confirm that Medicaid makes up a huge portion of the State budget.

And, Mr. President, if they have any passing knowledge of their State's Medicaid program, they will also confirm that the bulk of the Medicaid budget, and the source of the greatest growth in that budget, is probably the growing demand for long-term care services, typically nursing home care.

This is certainly true for Wisconsin.

But, Mr. President, in Wisconsin, back in the late 1970's, we came to the realization that unless significant reforms were enacted, the rapidly increasing nursing home use would be too heavy a load for the States' budget to sustain prudently.

Through a bipartisan effort—and Mr. President, I stress bipartisan because Governors and legislators from both parties supported the effort—we made some significant reforms to our long-term care system.

The centerpiece of that reform was the creation of a home and community-based program, called the Community Options Program, or COP.

COP provides flexible, consumer-oriented and consumer-directed services that help keep the disabled of all ages in their own homes and communities.

It builds upon the existing set of so-called informal supports—the caregiving done by family members and friends.

Mr. President, the results have been dramatic.

Between 1980 and 1993, while Medicaid nursing home use increased by 47 percent nationally, in Wisconsin Medicaid nursing home use actually dropped 15 percent.

Mr. President, long-term care reform is the key to taming our Medicaid budget.

But that is not the route pursued in this bill.

Instead of a comprehensive reform that would help States cope with the growing population of those needing long-term care services, this bill cuts and runs.

It cuts the Federal Government's share of this growing burden by $182 billion over the next 7 years.

It runs away from the problem of a mushrooming population needing long-term care by block granting the program and dumping responsibility in the laps of State policymakers.

Mr. President, this is a prescription for disaster.

For 30 years, States have made policy decisions based on one set of rules.

Based on those rules, over those 30 years an infrastructure of long-term care has evolved that is heavily skewed toward expensive, institutional care.

That was not by accident.

The system that developed in that time produced the incentives that resulted in this institutional bias.

But, Mr. President, that infrastructure cannot change overnight.

And it certainly will not change simply because the Federal Government slashes funding and runs away from the problem.

Just the opposite is likely to happen.

Today, Medicaid is essentially a provider entitlement.

Providers of specific services are funded, and that infrastructure, which has been so influential at both the State and Federal level in writing the rules which produced the system we have today, is not going to disappear.

That skewed infrastructure is well situated at the State level to win the fight for the pool of resources this bill greatly reduces.

This bill is not reform; it merely makes a flawed situation even worse.

The same problems that exist in Medicaid today will exist under this bill.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this motion to commit, and let the Finance Committee craft a product that will let States wean themselves off of their addiction to expensive institutional services and instead move toward helping families keep their disabled loved ones at home, utilizing consumer-oriented and consumer-directed home and community based care. So I hope we support the Graham amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I wish to reserve the balance of our time including the additional 2 minutes which were yielded for my close.

I yield to the Senator from Michigan for any final debate in opposition to the motion.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute to just recapitulate the point that has been made on our side in the last hour of debate.

Our position is quite simple—that if States are given the kind of flexibility that has in part been given for waivers to run Medicaid Programs, they can bring down the rate of growth of these programs far more effectively than a Federal bureaucracy in Washington; that, indeed, the growth rates are growth rates that decrease but growth in spending that has been outlined in the reconciliation bill can still provide the sorts of benefits that all of us want to see for our citizens, if we let the States, the people closest to those in need, run these systems.

In my State of Michigan, our Governor, our legislature, and our department of social services insist that they can make our program even more efficient at the rate of growth that is proposed in this legislation if they are simply given the opportunity to do so. We have come to a point when health care costs are skyrocketing in the public sector but are being brought under control in the private sector through such things as competition and other market factors.

Let us give the States the chance to do some of the same things this legislation does. That is the reason we have included this approach and State flexibility in the reconciliation package.

At this point, I yield the remainder of our time to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch from January 31, 1995, which bears testimony to the fact that:

> Missouri also wants to start a managed care system for its 600,000 Medicaid recipients. It would use the money saved to provide medical coverage to another 300,000 Missourians who do not qualify for Medicaid coverage now and who also cannot afford insurance.

So it would really provide insurance for about half of the individuals who currently are uninsured in the State. That is what the promise of this potential is.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOP GEARS UP TO GRAPPLE WITH MEDICAID: STATES COULD DESIGN OWN PROGRAMS

(By Kathleen Best)

Republican Congressional leaders said they would take up legislation in the next few weeks that could dramatically change the way states provided medical services to the poor.

Illinois Gov. Jim Edgar said after a meeting with GOP Congressional leaders that they were willing to consider giving states lump-sum payments and letting them design their own health-care programs for the poor.

"Let us determine who's going to be in the program," Edgar said. "If the money's not there, then we'll have to make some tough decisions."

In return for greater state flexibility, the states would have to agree to hold down future costs, which they split with the federal government.

"They seemed very sympathetic and agreeable to giving us flexibility," Edgar said. "And they said they would like to try to get this thing going within the next few weeks."

Edgar, a Republican, is the lead negotiator of Medicaid for the Republican Governors Association. He met Monday with Sen. Robert Packwood of Oregon, head of the Senate Finance Committee, and with Rep. John Kasich of Ohio, the House GOP's point man on the federal budget.

Edgar said no firm agreements came out of the meeting. But he said both House and Senate GOP leaders "are willing to move much quicker than we had hoped for," in part to try to hold down increasing costs for the program.

Medicaid is now the third largest entitlement program in the nation after Social Security and Medicare. The health benefits to the poor cost states five to eight times more each year than providing cash, food and other benefits to poor mothers with children.

For the last few years, Medicaid also has been one of the fastest-growing programs. Illinois, for example, now spends more on Medicaid than it does on education. And Missouri spends more on Medicaid than on any other program.

Both states are seeking permission from the Department of Health and Human Services, to change their Medicaid programs. But those requests—both pending for months—remain unanswered.

Illinois wants to move to a managed care system that would encourage the poor to get medical treatment from health maintenance organizations or a designated family physician rather than seeking more expensive care in emergency rooms.

Missouri also wants to start a managed care system for its 600,000 Medicaid recipients. It would use money save to provide medical coverage to another 300,000 Missourians who do not qualify for Medicaid coverage now and who also cannot afford insurance.

Edgar said the reforms that he would push for would do away with the need for states to seek federal permission to make such changes. Such permission is now required because the federal government pays for 50 percent of Medicaid costs in Illinois and 60 percent of the costs in Missouri.

Federal reimbursement rates are based on the per capita income of a state, which means poorer states get more federal money.

"One of the major things driving the Congress right now is the bottom line—how do you balance the budget," Edgar said. "You can't balance the budget unless you attack the Medicaid problem.

"We're not talking about just throwing people off the rolls, but creating a more efficient program," he said.

Although Medicaid affects millions of poor Americans and accounts for billions of dollars in annual spending, the issue had remained on the sidelines of the welfare reform debate while Congress focused on changing the programs that provided cash, food and housing to mothers with children.

"The discussion of welfare reform has been far too narrow," Missouri Gov. Mel Carnahan said. "It really comes from some of the anecdotal talk about the welfare queen and all this sort of thing as opposed to really thinking through what you want to do—lifting people up to self-sufficiency and work."

President Bill Clinton, in a meeting Monday morning with the National Governors' Association, said he would be willing to consider some changes in Medicaid, but he provided no specifics, participants said.

Clinton promised the governors more flexibility in their welfare programs but insisted on safeguards for children.

Donna Shalala, Secretary of Health and Human Services, said later that if the federal government did not give states permission to experiment with Medicaid, "then we will have failed with welfare reform."

Edgar said he planned to meet again next week with GOP congressional leaders to work out a consensus on what needed to be changed. In the meantime, he said, he would talk to both Democratic and Republican governors.

He predicted that changes in Medicaid would not set off the same kinds of partisan wrangling that have kept the nation's governors from reaching an agreement on food, housing and cash assistance to the poor.

"Welfare is important, but if you really want to get to what drives most governors up the wall, it's Medicaid," he said.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, another St. Louis Post-Dispatch article, published on the 24th of November of last year, which is similar:

State officials estimate that that provision would result in health insurance coverage for 300,000 people who cannot afford it today—about half the State's uninsured.

That provision referred to is one which would waive Federal regulations and allow the State to design its own program.

I thank the Chair.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOP PLAN MAY LET MISSOURI ALTER MEDICAID—WAIVER WOULD ALLOW COVERAGE OF HALF OF STATE'S UNINSURED

(By Kathleen Best)

A promise by congressional Republicans to give the states more flexibility could help Missouri win federal approval of a dramatic shift in the way it provides medical services to its poor.

"Since this is a request for state flexibility, it is in line with the Republican agenda," said Donna Checkett, director of the Missouri Division of Medical Services.

Missouri wants a waiver of federal regulations that would allow it to rein in the cost of providing medical services to the poor at the same time it expands the program to include about half of the state's uninsured.

Health care for the poor would be provided through a new, managed-care system designed to hold down costs by, for example, encouraging people to seek treatment from family doctors, rather than going to emergency rooms, which are more expensive.

The state would contract with doctors, hospitals and health maintenance organizations to care for the state's 600,000 Medicaid participants.

In addition, Missourians who now earn too much to qualify for Medicaid but too little to buy private health insurance would be allowed to buy into the state-run program at reduced rates.

State officials estimate that that provision would result in health insurance coverage for 300,000 people who cannot afford it today—about half the state's uninsured.

Before Missouri can put the new system in place, it needs approval from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. With Republicans poised to take control of federal purse strings, department officials are likely to be encouraged to look favorably on such waiver requests.

Missouri made its formal application for a waiver last summer and is now answering questions about its proposal.

Checkett said the most nettlesome problems resolve around how to provide care for poor people with chronic mental illness.

"There have been a lot of questions—both from Washington and in the state—about whether individuals who are chronically mentally ill should go into managed care," she said.

"We're concerned about how to balance the protections we need to provide (for the mentally ill) with cost control."

The mentally ill tend to need lots of expensive medical care. But the nature of their illness often makes managing that care nearly impossible as some move in and out of institutions, sometimes living on the streets and occasionally disappearing from the system.

"Managed care is tricky with basically health people," Checkett said. "It's more challenging when you are dealing with the Medicaid population. When you are dealing with the mentally ill, you need to strike a balance very carefully and be very certain how appropriately you have balanced the cost interest with protecting a vulnerable population."

The state originally proposed setting up a pilot project that would carve out a package of behavioral health services for everyone on Medicaid that would be managed by a behavioral health organization.

But that approach resulted in howls of protest from mental health advocates and others, and has been, in effect, scrapped.

Chekett said no alternative plan had been decided, although negotiations were under way.

"Missouri is not alone in wrestling with this, I can guarantee you," said Checkett, who is chairman of the association representing state Medicaid directors.

"If you were to poll other states, you would find this issue of how to treat individuals with chronic mental illness has been a big one. It's been the hardest project I've ever worked on."

A final decision on the mental illness question will be made by Gov. Mel Carnahan and is expected by Jan. 15, when the state plans to present its answers to 259 questions posed by federal regulators.

Checkett said the other difficult questions on the list centered on how the state would provide managed care in rural areas of Missouri, where there are few doctors and fewer opportunities to impose cost controls.

"Those are questions we have ourselves and are working on," she said. "We hope we will be able to pay better rates for primary care under a managed care system, which would encourage more doctors to take on more Medicaid recipients."

Some doctors in rural areas now limit the number of poor patients they will see because the state pays proportionately higher rates for treating the poor at hospitals and in emergency rooms.

"Now, we spend $2.5 billion a year with a heavy bias toward institutional settings," she said. "We want to change that."

Checkett said she hoped that if all the answers are submitted by mid-January, the state can begin negotiating details of final approval in the spring. That schedule would coincide with a review by the Missouri Legislature. Legislators must appropriate the funds to pay for the revamped program.

But the same Republican majority in Washington that may make it easier for the states to experiment with new approaches may also throw a wrench into carrying out such plans.

GOP legislators already have begun talking about major changes in Medicaid and welfare funding, which could force Missouri back to the drawing board.

"I am concerned, just looking at Medicaid, that there will be serious discussion about entitlement caps," Checkett said. "I don't know what it means."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial which appeared in the St. Louis Post Dispatch entitled "Missouri's Wise Shift to HMOs," be printed in the RECORD.

It states, in part:

The Carnahan administration made the right move in deciding to use HMOs to provide medical care for the 154,000 St. Louis area residents eligible for Medicaid.

The potential of a waiver is similar to what we would have in a block grant.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Louis Post Dispatch, Oct. 14, 1995]

MISSOURI'S WISE SHIFT TO HMO'S

Regional Medical Center appears to have won big in Missouri's decision to shift all Medicaid recipients in the St. Louis area into health maintenance organizations. The state itself is a winner, too.

The Carnahan administration made the right move in deciding to use HMOs to provide medical care for the 154,000 St. Louis area residents eligible for Medicaid. Otherwise, these patients would be cared for under fee-for-service programs with few ways to control costs. HMOs, by contrast, agree to treat patients for a fixed monthly fee, regardless of the services the patients require.

HMOs do this profitably by stressing prevention and managed care that denies patients access to unneeded and costly medical specialists, procedures and tests. The Carnahan administration estimates that the shift to HMOs could save the state as much as $11.6 million in the first 12 months. That may seem like a mere ripple in a Missouri Medicaid budget of about $2 billion, about half of which comes from state funds, but these savings mark an important step toward improved cost control.

Seven HMOs have contracts with Missouri to treat the state's Medicaid patients. Their monthly per-patient fees vary. The fee for Medicaid-eligible women between the ages of 21 and 44, for example, ranges from $120.30 to $127.35. The monthly per-patient fee for children between the ages of 7 and 13 ranges from $42.95 to $46.39.

Regional is a big winner because at least 33 percent of the 121,890 Medicaid patients have enrolled in HealthCare USA, the HMO co-owned by Regional. Two other HMOs also are using Regional as the preferred provider of services under their plans. Some officials estimate that Regional could end up providing care for nearly half the Medicaid-eligible patients in the St. Louis area.

Whether these numbers will be sufficient to help Regional balance its budget and provide care for the uninsured is uncertain. In the last fiscal year, the hospital provided $40 million in care to indigent patients. This year, the hospital is facing a shortfall of at least $11 million because of reductions in federal funds for indigent care. In all probability, the city and county, which set up Regional, will have to cover this deficit.

Ideally, Regional's entry into the HMO business will help it pay more of its bills without having to rely on local subsidies. But the city and county must keep in mind that lots of the community's indigent patients don't have access to Medicaid. In other words, St. Louis and St. Louis County will continue to have an obligation to assist Regional in providing care for these patients.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Tennessean, published on October 24, 1995, which praises the success of Missouri's use of managed care for its Medicaid population.

I thank the Chair.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TENNCARE COULD TAKE SOME NOTES

COVENTRY EXEC COMPARES PLANS

(By David A. Fox)

Tennessee may be in the vanguard of Medicaid reform with its TennCare program, but Missouri is the state that is pulling off Medicaid privatization most successfully, a local managed care executive said yesterday.

With a more incremental approach, Missouri has managed so far to avoid some of the problems that have plagued Medicaid reform here and in Florida, said Philip Hertik, chairman of Conventy Corp. Nashville-based Coventry, which does not participate in TennCare, is one of seven organizations that last month began enrolling St. Louis Medicaid members in private managed care plans.

In a speech to a national conference of the Health Industry Manufacturers Association at Loews Vanderbilt Plaza Hotel. Hertik cited several strengths of the Missouri plan to provide health care to the poor at a contained cost. Among them:

Missouri initiated its plan in just one area, rather than throughout the entire state.

It put the managed care contracts out for bid.

It prohibited marketing of the private plans directly to Medicaid beneficiaries.

A neutral company was chosen to gather data from each plan and distribute the information to Medicaid members for use in making their selection.

Missouri geared its plan only to the poor, beginning with people in the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program.

By contrast, TennCare began in January 1994 covering both the poor and uninsured statewide, at predetermined rates with aggressive marketing to Medicaid members. As a consequence, the $3.1 billion program serving 1.1 million residents started with great confusion among its members, with griping by providers whose reimbursements were slashed and with some apparently improper member-recruitment practices by at least one private health plan.

Hertik called the privatization of Medicaid "the biggest thing in managed care in the past 15 years" and one of several trends revamping the industry. With the companion trend toward privatizing Medicare, he forecast that market leverage increasingly will shift to managed care organizations and away from hospitals and other providers, such as home health, which traditionally have received a majority of their payments directly from government programs.

Probably the most obvious trend facing managed care organizations is the wave of mergers and acquisitions. But Hertik said this trend differs from consolidation waves in other industries that frequently are sparked by efforts to achieve operating efficiencies from such things as volume buying and the elimination of redundant services.

"All of this is aimed at market leverage, rather than just economies," he said.

The deals, including health maintenance organizations buying traditional indemnity insurors, are intended to increase the membership in local managed care plans.

"But having sheer size on a national scale and strong balance sheets don't necessarily make you the high-quality, low-cost provider in local markets where the purchasing decisions are made," he said. "It's just a little troubling knowing that its market leverage at the base of this consolidation."

Hertik also identified two other trends:

The reaching of "an inflection point" heralding "price competition as more the rule of the day" instead of boom-and-bust cycles in health insurance underwriting.

An emphasis by managed care companies in managing care, rather than just costs, by establishing clinical guidelines, practicing disease management and measuring outcomes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, has the Senator from Michigan completed his presentation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 14 seconds remaining for the Senator from Michigan, and 7 minutes and 30 seconds remaining for the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my 14 seconds.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, there is time we received, 3 minutes of general debate and 1 minute which was used by the Senator from Wisconsin. And I ask for the other 2 minutes, as well as the balance of our time on this amendment for my closing remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. President, it has been an illuminating debate but almost as illuminating by what has not been said as what has been said.

What are some of the things that have been omitted? One of the major omissions is, how did the majority party arrive at the figure of $187 billion as the basis of its reduction in Medicaid expenditures by the Federal Government over the next 7 years? What was the source of that number? How was the calculation of the efficiencies and flexibilities that were going to be incorporated in this program used to derive the ultimate number of $187 billion?

The reason that there has not been an answer to that question is because there is not an answer to that question. The $187 billion was derived, not by a rational assessment of what would be the needs of the program or what will be the per capita increase in costs in delivering health care, but rather as a means of deriving a set of dollars to fund a tax cut for the wealthiest of Americans.

The fact is that the Medicaid Program has been operating at a per capita level of expenditure less than the national average in terms of all private sector health care spending, 7.1 percent in the private sector, 7 percent in Medicaid. This is what has been the level of Medicaid expenditure per capita. Under this bill, the proposal is to slash Medicaid from a 7 percent growth to a 1.4 percent growth.

Mr. President, I would defy anyone to say that is not going to result in a significant collapse of the Medicaid system's ability to serve the most vulnerable population in our country.

The second question that has not been discussed is, why has the Medicaid Program been growing at the rate that it has been growing?

Let me suggest three reasons, one that we ought to be very proud of, and that is that we are doing as a Nation a much better job of helping the poorest and most at risk of our children. Infant mortality in the United States has dropped by over 21 percent in the last decade. Infant mortality in America has dropped by over 21 percent in the last decade. We ought to be proud about that, and it has occurred because in large part we have extended Medicaid coverage to more and more at-risk mothers, and we have provided the kind of appropriate health care immediately after birth. We should not be ashamed of that.

Second, Medicaid has increased because of the aging of Americans. What has not been pointed out is that 60 percent of the Medicaid expenditures do not go to poor children and their mothers. Sixty percent of the expenditures go to the disabled and particularly to the frail elderly. In my State, 70 percent of Medicaid expenditures go to the disabled and the frail elderly.

That happens to be the segment of our population which is growing at the fastest rate. In most States the fastest growing generational component of the population is people who are over the age of 80—the very population that is most likely to need Medicaid assistance for long-term care.

The third reason for the increase in the number of persons on Medicaid has been the decline in private insurance coverage particularly for children. In 1977, 71 percent of the children of working Americans had their health care covered through their working parents. Today, in 1993, that number is down to 57 percent and projected in the year 2002 to be 47 percent. There has been almost a 1-to-1 increase in the poor children on Medicaid as there has been a decline in poor children covered through a parent's health care policy.

Those are three basic reasons why Medicaid has been increasing over the last few years, not because of oppressive Federal regulations.

Another thing that has not been discussed is the allocation formula. Would you like to see the allocation formula among the States? There it is. That is the arithmetic allocation formula contained in the Republicans' Medicaid proposal.

This formula, when you get through all the algebra, says that those States which today are receiving 4 and 5 times as much per capita as other States will continue to receive 4 to 5 times as much. We are seeing a pattern. We saw it in welfare reform and now we are seeing it in Medicaid, and that is identify the problem, decry the status quo, and then retain the funding formula of the current program. We did it in welfare reform, and we are about to do it again in Medicaid.

It would be like George Washington, after having won the American Revolution, saying, "but we are going to continue to pay tribute to George III." The very reason that we fought the war would have been forgotten.

Mr. President, we need to have a funding formula that treats all Americans fairly wherever they live. This bill of the Republicans continues basically the current funding formula into the indefinite future.

What is going to be lost under the Republican proposal? We are going to lose the flexibility of an effective State-Federal partnership—those States that experience growth, those States that experience economic decline, those States that experience a natural disaster. We had 12,000 people added to the Medicaid role in Florida within days after Hurricane Andrew because not only were their homes blown away, their jobs were blown away and they became eligible for Medicaid. And they needed it because of the disaster through which they just lived. That flexibility is going to be lost in this program. We are also going to lose the adequate funding of a Federal partner, and we are going to lose national standards particularly in the area of nursing homes.

It is not surprising that President Reagan said that the Medicaid Program should not be turned over to the States but that the Medicaid Program should be federalized in order to have a national standard of health care. Where are the voices for President Reagan today? This great advocate of a strong national program to protect the health of our children needs to be heard today.

I close by saying there is a better way. We are proposing in this motion, first, that we have a rational reduction in Medicaid. What we essentially are saying is that we will propose to restrain Medicaid to 1 percentage point less than the private sector rate of growth in health care spending. And with that 1 percent restraint, that is, that the per capita for Medicaid will be 6.1 percent per year over the next 7 years, we will save $62 billion. We think that we can make that kind of a change without ravaging the system, and we would distribute the money through a per capita cap.

This maintains the individual entitlement to Medicaid coverage and creates incentives to maintain health care coverage. It provides for funding into each of the four categories of principal Medicaid populations, that is, poor children, their mothers, the disabled, and the frail elderly, so that we will not create what is, I believe, an inevitable result of the block grant approach which is going to be a war at the State level among those four groups of beneficiaries.

We would also allow for a continuation of innovative programs such as the program in the State of Tennessee. We believe that the kinds of flexibility that we would provide, which would make it easier for States to move into managed care and easier for States to use community-based services to meet the needs of the elderly, will produce some real economies and therefore reduce the rates of expenditure over the next 7 years, an attainable goal without collapsing the system.

It is interesting, Mr. President, that the proposal that I make today, the per capita cap alternative to block grants, is the proposal which was introduced in the Senate on June 29, 1994, by our distinguished majority leader, cosponsored by 39 Republican Members. A similar program was introduced by our colleague, the senior Senator from Texas, and the junior Senator from Rhode Island, also promoting a per capita cap on Medicaid as a means of reforming the system.

Mr. President, I believe that we have a program that will achieve significant savings without sacrificing the safety net that Medicaid has represented. We can have these reforms while retaining a program that is vital to 37 million of our most vulnerable Americans. What we will sacrifice is a little piece of the tax break that we are about to give to the wealthiest of Americans in order to assure minimal health care standards for the poorest and most vulnerable of Americans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that statements from scores of organizations in opposition to the Republican plan and in support of the proposal that is before us be printed in the RECORD and that an analysis of the mandates which are contained in the Republican proposal also be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 3, 1995.

DEAR SENATOR: The undersigned organizations are opposed to eliminating the entitlement status of individuals under the Medicaid program. The Medicaid program provides basic health and long term-care services to over 33 million American men, women, and children. Eliminating the entitlement status would jeopardize coverage for these seniors, families, children, and persons with disabilities, at a time when employers are dropping coverage and the number of uninsured persons continues to rise.

We understand that, in the interest of deficit reduction, savings must be achieved in the Medicaid program. However, extreme and disproportionate cuts in the Medicaid program will result in more Americans uninsured and in poor health, disincentives for providers to serve this population, and untenable cost shifting to state and local governments, providers and private payers. We stand ready to work with you on ways to achieve reasonable levels of savings without endangering the access of millions of beneficiaries to essential health care. We do not believe that ending the entitlement nature of the Medicaid program would achieve these objectives.

DEAR SENATOR: As groups deeply concerned with the health and well-being of America's children and families, we are writing to express our fundamental opposition to the proposed House and Senate reconciliation bills' Medicaid provisions.

The physical and mental health of America's children today determines the social and economic health of the whole nation in the future. Unfortunately, our children's health is already at risk: we lag behind many other industrialized and some developing nations on key indicators like infant mortality, low birthweight, prenatal care, and immunizations. The Medicaid proposals in the reconciliation bills will make this situation far worse.

Already, nine and a half million U.S. children lack any health insurance. Even though just as many parents as ever are employed, children have been losing private, employer-based insurance at a rate of 1 percent a year for more than a decade. Medicaid has been making the difference, as its increased coverage of children from working poor and near poor families has kept the number of uninsured children from skyrocketing.

But as the drop in private insurance continues, if Medicaid shrinks instead of picking up some of the slack, children will lead in paying the price. With a $182 billion Medicaid cut, in the seventh year of the cut 6½ million children would lose eligibility if the cut is translated into eligibility reductions applied proportionately to all groups (e.g., children, people with disabilities, the elderly, and other adults). Then 19 million children would be uninsured in 2002. In fact, we fear that political conditions in state capitals will lead children to bear a disproportionately large share of any Medicaid cuts, so the number of uninsured children would be even larger.

The United States can invest now—in immunizations, preventive care and early treatment—or it can pay later in more expensive remedial care and the high social and productivity cost of children growing up unhealthy. We all support fiscal responsibility in the federal budget, but to balance the budget on the backs of children and destroy a system of assured health care that is fundamental to the health of millions of America's children and pregnant women is unacceptable.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the nation's pediatricians and children's hospitals, the American Academy of Pediatrics and the National Association of Children's Hospitals urge you to make sure that regardless of how Medicaid is restructured Congress includes basic protections for the health coverage of children and adolescents.

This is the message we are seeking to bring to all members of Congress and the public in a new paid advertisement we are running this week in the national press. We are enclosing a copy for you. It outlines the protections children and adolescents need in coverage, medically necessary and preventive care, access to pediatric care, and immunizations under a restructured Medicaid program.

These kinds of protections make good sense, because children and adolescents represent over half of all recipients of Medicaid. In fact, Medicaid pays for the health care of one fourth of the nation's children and adolescents as well as one third of the country's infants. Protecting their health coverage, regardless of the state in which they live, is a low cost but high return investment not only in children's well-being today but also in the health and productivity of at least one third of the nation's future work force. Medicaid coverage for a child averages only one-eighth the cost of coverage for a senior citizen.

We were heartened by the bipartisanship of the Senate Finance Committee in addressing the need for children's coverage. It would require all states under a restructured Medicaid program to cover poor children and pregnant women. We believe most members of Congress share in this conviction.

Your vote on Medicaid legislation this year may be the single most important vote you will cast for the health of our nation's children in this decade. Please vote to protect America's most important resources: our children

Sincerely,

JOE M. SANDERS, Jr., M.D.,
Executive Director, American Academy of Pediatrics.
LAWRENCE A. MCANDREWS,
President and CEO, National Association of Children's Hospitals.

Enclosure.

HOW TO MAKE SURE THEY'RE STILL SMILING AFTER CONGRESS GETS THROUGH WITH MEDICAID.

It should go without saying that the key to having a healthy America in the future is keeping children healthy today.

Those of us who spend every moment of our working lives keeping children healthy want to say it anyway.

Because at this moment, Congress is making drastic changes to the Medicaid program, the most serious side effect of which is that the health care needs of millions of children will not be sufficiently guaranteed.

CONGRESS IS TAKING THE "AID" OUT OF MEDICAID

The Congressional block grant proposals could leave it to the States to determine who is eligible to receive benefits and what kind of benefits will be offered.

Today's system at least guarantees specific preventive health care benefits vital to the health and well-being of many children from poor and working families.

CONGRESS MUST BUILD IN CERTAIN BASIC GUARANTEES

Regardless of how Congress changes Medicaid overall, the following protections should be included:

1. Children and adolescents from low-income families must maintain guaranteed Medicaid coverage.
2. Medically necessary care, including preventive services, must not be compromised.
3. Children and adolescents must retain access to appropriately trained and certified providers of pediatric care.
4. children should be guaranteed all age appropriate immunizations.

Let's protect America's most important, most vulnerable resources: our children. Let's help keep them healthy. And smiling.

[From Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities]

A MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

CONGRESSIONAL MEDICAID "REFORM" PROPOSALS WILL HARM CHILDREN AND ADULTS WITH DISABILITIES AND THEIR FAMILIES

Member organizations of the Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities Health and Long Term Services Task Forces are extremely concerned about the impact that both the House and Senate Medicaid "reform" proposals will have on the lives of children and adults with disabilities and their families. We strongly urge you not to support these proposals and to carefully reconsider how to "reform" the Medicaid program so that children and adults with disabilities and other individuals with low and very low incomes are not harmed.

The proposals reported out of the House Commerce and Senate Finance Committees make harmful, fundamental changes to the Medicaid program—a program which now is the largest source of federal and state funding for services and supports for individuals with disabilities. It has been access to critically needed health and related services and to essential community-based long term services and supports—provided through the Medicaid program—that have enabled families to stay together and children and adults with disabilities to live fuller and more productive lives in their communities.

Specific CCD concerns relate to the following issues:

While the Senate proposal maintains a guarantee of health care coverage for low income individuals with disabilities, the House proposal completely eliminates the current individual entitlement status of Medicaid for people with disabilities.

Neither the Senate or House proposals would require states to provide any specific services, except for childhood immunizations.

Medicaid is no longer an entitlement and if there is no requirement for the provision of a full range of services, people with disabilities will lose access to critical health and long term services, and supports. For people with disabilities and serious health conditions, the lack of access to health and health-related services and supports will lead to an exacerbation of existing health problems and/or disabilities, as well as the emergence of additional health problems and secondary disabilities. For people with long term care needs, the lack of Medicaid coverage will lead to the loss of services and supports that help them to live more independent lives in the community—in some cases leading to homelessness and inappropriate institutionalization. In addition, families of children with disabilities will have their economic security undermined as they try to pay for essential health and long term services. It is important to remember—especially in a nation where the number of individuals insured through their employer continues to decrease—that for many people with disabilities, Medicaid has been the only health care coverage available.

While both proposals include state level "set-asides" for certain vulnerable populations, i.e. families with pregnant women and children, elderly individuals, and low income people with disabilities under age 65, the proposed funding formula for these set-asides would mean that states could not continue to provide the full range of services and supports that they now provide for children and adults with disabilities.

States would be permitted—within these broad categories—to determine what services to provide. According to the House proposal, for each set-aside category, states would have to spend 85 percent of the average percentage of the state's Medicaid spending from FY 1992 through FY 1994 devoted to mandatory services (what the state now must cover) for people in that category. According to the Senate proposal, for each set-aside category, states would have to spend 85 percent of the state's Medicaid spending in FY 1995 on mandatory services for people in that category.

This formula does not take into consideration spending on optional services (what the state now chooses to cover). For people with disabilities, this is a major blow. Current optional services are the ones most likely to be of critical importance to children and adults with disabilities and dollars currently spent towards them would not be counted towards the disability set-aside. Optional services include the following: speech, physical, and occupational therapy, psychological services, clinic services, prescription drugs, dental services, eyeglasses, prosthetic devices, rehabilitative services, home and community based services, ICF–MR services, personal care services, respiratory care services, and case management.

In addition to the loss of the personal entitlement to specific required services and the weak funding formula, both the House and Senate proposals eliminate consumer and quality assurance protections and federal oversight in Medicaid services or Medicaid funded facilities.

This includes elimination of federal nursing home and ICF/MR regulations and even the minimum requirement that funds be spent on active treatment for individuals in institutional settings rather than merely custodial care. While Congress continues to speak of the value of devolution and state's rights, the CCD remembers when states could not or would not provide needed services and supports for children and adults with disabilities and their families. There are well warranted and deep-seated fears in the disability community that the loss of minimum federal standards coupled with intensifying fiscal pressures will mean that some states return to institution-based custodial care with the consequent loss of individual freedom, rights, and quality of life. The public policy and the original intent behind federal oversight requirements currently attached to funding for certain Medicaid long-term services must be remembered and respected. The proposals also permit the states to move more people into managed care plans while at the same time removing current consumer protections related to managed care.

The CCD strongly urges you to carefully reconsider how to "reform" the Medicaid program and not to support the passage of the provisions in the Medicaid Transformation Act of 1995 as part of the budget reconciliation bill. We ask you not to eviscerate a program that has allowed millions of children and adults with disabilities to live fuller and more productive lives in the community because they now have access to both acute health care and needed long term services and supports. The CCD does not support the status quo on Medicaid. We do believe, however, that there are changes to the program that can be made that will not penalize those who now benefit from the program. These include the elimination of the current incentives for institutional care and the provision instead of incentives for home and community-based long term services and supports.

Finally, the CCD supports efforts to reduce the federal deficit. However, the CCD strongly believes that it is unfortunate that most of the programs on the table for deficit reduction are those of importance to children and adults with disabilities—such as Medicaid, children's Supplemental Security Income, housing, social services, jobs, and education. It is also unfortunate that Congress is endeavoring to balance the budget using only 48% of the federal budget and that 48% comes at the expense of programs of critical importance to the lives of people with disabilities.

The CCD asserts that the individual entitlement status of Medicaid to a mandated set of benefits for children and adults with disabilities must be maintained.

The CCD asserts that federal reimbursement should be maintained for the full range of acute and long term services and supports that are presently available, including optional services which states now choose to provide through their Medicaid programs. In addition, the states should be required to continue to contribute at least their current share of funds to finance Medicaid services and supports.

The CCD asserts that the federal requirements that states meet certain standards of care and continue appropriate quality assurance measures, as well as due process and other consumer protections must be maintained.

The CCD asserts that managed care should be an "option" and not the only avenue of services for people with disabilities and that strong consumer protections, including timely and appropriate access to all necessary services, supports, and providers must be ensured.

The CCD asserts that current incentives for institutional care built into the Medicaid program must be eliminated and replaced with incentives for the provision of home and community-based long term services and supports.

DEAR SENATOR DOLE: As providers of long-term care services, we are concerned that the current Finance Committee proposal to impose a block grant financing mechanism for Medicaid fails to ensure that adequate resources will be made available to meet the needs of our nation's elderly, disabled, and infirm. We fear that the proposed annual increases in federal Medicaid funding for state programs will be insufficient to meet the quality of care needed by residents of long-term care facilities and subsequently reduce access to services. Furthermore, the failure to meet the resource needs anticipated in future years for these services will negate the many advances made in this area as a result of the enactment of the nursing home reform provisions of OBRA '87.

We urge you to support the retention of federal oversight of nursing home quality linked to a statutory provision ensuring that adequate financial resources are made available to meet prescribed levels of service. Although this linkage can take several forms, the current formulation which backs the nursing home reforms of OBRA '87 to a statutory direction that payors of services (both federal and state) must ensure the payment of adequate rates has proven a workable mechanism and should not be repealed.

Federal nursing home reform standards, joined with existing reimbursement standards have resulted in a steady improvement in the quality of long-term care services. Without such a linkage, this quality of care cannot be sustained. It is our sincere desire to move forward with the quality of care provided in nursing homes, and recognize that the ability to do so is dependent upon the provision of adequate financial resources.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COUNTIES,
Washington, DC, October 24, 1995.

DEAR SENATOR: The National Association of Counties (NACo) strongly opposes the block granting of Medicaid and the loss of a federal guarantee to benefits. Counties will be saddled with significant cost shifts as a result of capping the federal contribution to Medicaid.

We do not believe that states will find enough budgetary efficiencies without reducing eligibility. The flexibility given to states in the operation of the proposed restructuring will trickle down to counties in the form of flexibility to raise property taxes, cut other necessary services or further reduce staff. In many states, counties are required to serve individuals with no private or public health insurance. The cuts to the program will have the effect of increasing the costs of that state mandate.

Individuals will continue to have health needs, regardless of the payor source. That is why we have always supported the intergovernmental nature of the Medicaid program and the assurance that there is some minimum level of coverage guaranteed to eligible individuals, regardless of the state in which they reside. While we support the increased use of managed care and the further targeting of the disproportionate share program, we believe that provisions in the bill overall will harm many current recipients and the counties which serve them.

If you have any questions about our position, please call Tom Joseph, Associate Legislative Director, at 202/942-4230.

Sincerely,

LARRY E. NAAKE,
Executive Director.

BUREAUCRACY CREATED BY THE GOP MEDICAID PLAN

In the Medicaid debate, the GOP has stressed that offering states block grants will reduce federal and state bureaucracy. However, a review of the GOP Medicaid Plan indicates that it creates as much bureaucracy as it purports to reduce. Some of the bureaucratic initiatives included in the plan are important and necessary; however, the argument that the GOP plan reduces bureaucracy just doesn't add up. The following is a very conservative estimate of the total number of new bureaucratic requirements created by the GOP Medicaid plan:

Number of new requirements for each submitted Medicaid plan	32
Number of States and District of Columbia (times)	51
Total number of new requirements for all plans (=)	1,632
Additional committees, advisory panels, demonstration projects, etc. (+)	15
Total number of new bureaucratic requirements (=)	1,647

Note: The total does not include drug provider pricing reports or other federal and state drug-related reports.

Specifically, the proposal requires:

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I congratulate the excellent statement and arguments that have been made by my distinguished colleague from Florida on the matter at hand. I believe we are about ready to come down to the end of this and go on to the education amendment. But before we proceed, I wish to yield 1 minute to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. I thank our colleague from Nebraska.

Mr. President, I apologize for being tied up in the Committee on Banking and Housing. I think as we look at this legislation people have to ask the fundamental question of who is being hurt by this proposal. No one is suggesting we ought not to make reforms in these programs to make them more efficient. But when 4.4 million children over the next 7 years, as the estimates say, will lose the kind of protection that Medicaid has provided, that in my view goes too far. I think the American people are responding to that. It is extreme. Clearly, corrections need to be made, but this goes way beyond what most Americans think is right and fair.

If we are going to invest in the future and promote growth, then these young children who have no other safety net to protect them are going to be lost in that process. It is bad enough to place at risk 12 million Americans, 8 of whom are in effect adults with long-term care needs. But for almost 5 million children who may lose Medicaid in this country who are born into these circumstances and will start their lives in this way, I think is wrong headed; I think it is extreme; I think it is unfair; and I think it is dangerous for this country's future.

I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, after conversation with several Senators, including my distinguished colleague from Michigan, I think we have general agreement now that we will, under the previous order, move to the next order of business, which is the so-called education amendment.

The time under that amendment will be controlled by the Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, who I think is ready to offer the amendment. In the interest of conserving time—we have had a general agreement—and I ask unanimous consent at this time that instead of the 2 hours, 1 hour each side, on the education amendment, that the time be reduced to 90 minutes or 45 minutes per side. I propose that as a unanimous consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURNS). Is there objection?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, the majority does not object. We support the 90-minute time agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair. I hope at this time the Chair could recognize the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 2959

(Purpose: To strike those portions of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources reconciliation title that impose higher student loan costs on students and families, by striking the 85 percent fee imposed on colleges and universities based on their student loan volume, restoring Federal interest payments on subsidized student loans during the 6-month grace period in which graduates look for jobs, eliminating interest rate increases on parent (PLUS) loans, and eliminating the 20 percent cap on direct lending, and to provide an offset by striking the provisions that dilute the alternative minimum tax)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk shall report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] for himself, Mr. SIMON, Mr. PELL, Mr. DODD, Mr. HARKIN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. WELLSTONE, Mrs. FEINSTEIN and Mrs. MURRAY, proposes an amendment numbered 2959.

On page 1409, beginning with line 8, strike all through page 1410, line 25.

On page 1421, beginning with line 15, strike all through page 1423, line 13.

On page 1424, beginning with line 2, strike all through page 1425, line 16.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. President, we are 2 days into this debate on the budget recommendations of our Republican friends in the U.S. Senate. We had an opportunity yesterday to debate the issue of whether we are going to cut $270 billion out of the Medicare program in order to give tax breaks for the wealthy individuals and corporations.

Today we had the debate about whether we are going to take $180 billion away from the neediest children in our society and from the seniors of our country who have made such a difference to our Nation and put them at greater risk.

The third element in this whole Republican proposal is to deny, or move towards denying, the sons and daughters of working families the opportunity to achieve the American dream, that is, in the area of higher education.

The whole debate on higher education was a key debate in the 1960's between President Kennedy and President Nixon. During that time, this country went on record to provide help and assistance to the young people of this country. We reserved three-quarters of a Federal assistance program for grant money and one-quarter for loans. The programs built on the enormous success that this country saw at the end of World War II. We expended, in today's dollars, $9 billion on education assistance to those who came back and fought in World War II.

It is an interesting fact, Mr. President, that the analysis of this program proved it was a remarkable success. In fact, every dollar was actually given in grants—not loans—and returned some $8 to the Federal Treasury.

This Nation was committed to higher education. This Nation was committed to the young people of this country, to their hopes and dreams for a future America. But under the Republican proposal, effectively what they are saying is, "We're going to take some $10 billion away, away from the students of this country, and make it more complex, more difficult, and in many instances deny the dreams of those young people." For what reason? For the reason of providing the tax breaks for wealthy corporations and wealthy individuals.

That is what this is about, Mr. President. That is what this is about. The amendment that we have offered today responds to that provision of the Republican bill.

First of all, the provision that institutes a new student loan tax that requires colleges and universities to pay the Federal Government an annual fee of .85 percent of their student loan volume is struck. In addition, the amendment strikes provisions that eliminate the interest-free grace period, a concept that has been supported by Republicans and Democrats since the student loan program began.

We also strike the increased interest rates on parents in the PLUS loans, which are necessary loans for parents that do not have great assets. Striking the increased interest rates will help those parents continue to take advantage of the PLUS loans. Finally, the amendment strikes provisions capping the direct loan program at 20 percent of loan volume. The program is now at almost 40 percent participation.

The amendment takes us back to the existing law which will permit any college in this country, in any State, to choose to participate in the direct loan program. Not under the Republican program.

What we are saying is: If colleges, their boards of trustees, parents, faculty, teachers, young people want to move toward a direct loan program, that choice ought to be available at the local level. The Republican proposal denies colleges and universities and their communities the right to choose a loan program that works for them. That right to choose was a bipartisan agreement that was made in 1993. I believe that denying colleges and universities the right to choose is unwise and unfair.

And, Mr. President, we offer a full offset for this change to the Republican proposal, so that our amendment is budget neutral. We will return help and assistance to the students of our country by striking the provisions of the Finance Committee's reconciliation bill that dilute the alternative minimum tax on corporations.

The alternative minimum tax on corporations sets a minimum corporate tax liability. It was passed in 1986 because many corporations were escaping any kind of tax payment. And you know what the Republicans did? They relaxed it to benefit corporations by $9.2 billion. And so the Senate of the United States will have a chance today to say, "Do we want to relax the alternative minimum tax for corporations by $9.2 billion or do we want to provide the help and the assistance for the sons and daughters of working families?"

We have effectively voted on this amendment before, and we are going to see if the whiplash of the Republican leadership is going to march—force the Republicans to march in lock step to reject what they have supported in May: a reduction in the cuts to students.

We are taking the changes in the alternative minimum tax that provided easier payments for the largest corporations of this country and using them for the deficit reduction requirements for education and leaving these programs alone. That is what this amendment does.

Mr. President, I do not think we have to make the case, or should have to make the case, that education is central to the American dream. But under the Republican proposal, they change that dream into a nightmare. The idea that the Republican proposal is a shared sacrifice is malarkey.

They say, "There's a shared sacrifice in our Human Resources Committee's proposal." The shared sacrifice is two-thirds—two-thirds of the burden is going to be on the sons and daughters of working families. Half of them earn below $20,000 a year; two-thirds of them below $40,000. It is interesting to note that these are the same people whose taxes are going to be increased under the EITC. These are the same people that are going to have to provide additional help and assistance to their parents to increase the copayments and the deductibles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 2 more minutes.

Again, these are the same people whose taxes will be increased under EITC, as Senator MOYNIHAN clearly pointed out when he put the chart before the U.S. Senate and the American people. We are already going to have to pay increased payments under this bill.

What do our Republican friends have against working families? They raised the EITC that goes to the low-income, working families. And now they are denying the opportunity for education for many of the sons and daughters.

Mr. President, I want to just point out that a $250 increase in the cost of college will cause roughly 20,000 fewer students from working families to enroll. Because there are almost $1,000 in additional costs to working families just in the grace-period provisions of the Republican proposal, 80,000 young people in this country will not go to college because of the increased burden that their families will not be able to pay.

Now, there will be a time when someone says, "This is really a very minor slap on the wrist for these families." They will point out, "Look, you are only talking about $900 for the grace period, only $500 more under the PLUS loans, and only $25 under the institutional loans."

Mr. President, that all adds up. In my State of Massachusetts, working families will have to pay more than $200 million in additional costs. That is wrong. It is a transfer of wealth from working families to the already wealthy individuals in our country. Therefore, I hope that this amendment is agreed to. It is a responsible amendment. We have debated this issue many times and we have said that we believe that education is fundamental to the future of America and young Americans. Why should we dampen, and in many instances extinguish, the hopes and dreams of the sons and daughters of working families?

That is the choice here. We can strike the alternative minimum tax or we can dock the sons and daughters of working families.

I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island who has been a former chairman of the Education Committee and who has made such a mark in education policy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHCROFT). The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I thank my colleague. I am very, very pleased to be an original cosponsor of this critically important amendment. What we are talking about here is a capital investment in the future of our Nation. Passage of this amendment would accomplish the objective of taking students and their families, not completely, but partially out of harm's way.

First, it would strike the first-time-ever fee on institutions of higher education. This fee of .85 percent, based on the total amount of money borrowed by students and parents at every institution of learning, is an unprecedented move and a cost that would undoubtedly be passed along to students in higher fees. Once established, I am afraid that it will increase over time.

Second, this amendment would strike the increase on the interest rate in the Parent Loan Program. Some argue that the increase would be so small as to be insignificant. I disagree.

A parent who borrows for 4 years of college at a typical 4-year public university will borrow a total of $27,000. If those loans are repaid over 10 years, the increase in the interest rate will mean those parents will have to pay an additional $1,400. If they take advantage of extended repayment, the cost could well increase to $2,800. Neither of these figures is insignificant.

A parent who borrows at a private university will borrow more than $66,000. Repayment over a 10-year period will mean an additional $3,400 that parents will have to pay because of the increase in the interest rate. If repayment is extended over 20 years, the additional cost to the parent will be nearly $6,900, or $7,000.

Third, the amendment would strike the 20-percent cap on the Direct Loan Program. This would leave alone the direct loan conference agreement of 2 years ago. It would mean that we would continue to have a spirited competition between direct and regular loans, a competition that has brought students improved services, better rates and more benefits.

And fourth, the amendment would strike the elimination of the interest subsidy during the grace period. This is of vital interest to students who have just completed their education and are out looking for a job. Proponents argue that the cost of eliminating the grace period will be small, but to a student who is just beginning a job, every dollar counts.

In terms of the package, I point out that while one change might appear small, the combined impact of the four changes addressed in this amendment is considerable. Students and their families will feel the impact of these changes. Instead of taking them out of harm's way, it will place them directly in the line of fire. We can avoid that outcome if we adopt this amendment. I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for it. If ever there was a capital investment amendment to improve the competitive ability of our Nation, this is it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 5 minutes to our friend and colleague and former member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, JEFF BINGAMAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Thank you very much, Mr. President. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for yielding me time.

Mr. President, I am in strong support of the Kennedy-Simon student loan amendment. It does deal with a very serious problem that I see in this budget reconciliation bill.

Very simply, what we are talking about here is $10.8 billion that is to be reduced or eliminated out of the funds that will otherwise be made available to students over the next 7 years, students who want to go to college and who do not have the financial means with which to go to college.

That $10.8 billion is presented by the Republican majority as being fairly shared. We are going to try to charge some of that to the loan industry and some of that to the students and families themselves.

I have a chart here, Mr. President, which I think makes the point pretty clearly that the cost, that $10.8 billion, is not fairly shared. What this chart shows is that something like 30 percent of this entire $10.8 billion, $3.1 billion specifically, will be additional costs to the loan industry; 70 percent of the entire cut in education is costs to students and their families. That is $7.6 billion over 7 years.

Let me talk about some of the specific things that we are doing to increase the costs to students and families during that time, because some of it is precedent setting and, in my view, it is a very bad precedent and reflects very badly on our country.

One which has been referred to by both the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Rhode Island is that we are starting, for the first time, to charge interest on the loan from the day of graduation. That may seem like a small item and, in some larger global sense, it may be, but it signifies something about what the Congress is about in this reconciliation bill.

Always before, the idea was when students graduated from college, we would give them a 6-month grace period in which to get a job, in which to begin to receive regular monthly paychecks, before they were charged the interest on that loan.

But we are eliminating that in this legislation. Here the idea is that we can pick up $2.7 billion over the next 7 years by eliminating that grace period and starting to charge that interest from the day they graduate. I think that is a shortsighted, mistaken and wrong policy decision.

A second item that I particularly want to focus on that I think is perhaps even a worse precedent is this whole idea of charging a tax to schools that want to make a student loan. In my State, the schools that are making Federal student loans are generally schools that are trying to provide education to moderate-income families and students. They would be charged, under this bill, .85 percent, nearly 1 percent of the value of the loan, at the time the loan is originated.

When I bought a house, I remember that they charged me a loan origination fee. You always shop around to see where can you get the fewest points, where will they charge you the fewest points for your house loan. The Government has never charged points for student loans before. We have never charged origination fees when we made a loan to a student to go to school.

This year, for the first time, we will begin to charge an origination fee. Now we charge it to the institution. The school itself has to pay the student loan and, of course, that builds in an incentive for the school perhaps to look for more financially capable students. They do not have that cost. They do not need to worry about origination fees if they get students that, in fact, do not need student loans. I think it is a very bad precedent. I think when you start charging an origination fee for a student loan, it is a sad day in our Nation's history. That is exactly what we see proposed in this bill. That would, supposedly, result in the Federal Government picking up $2 billion over the next 7 years.

We are increasing the interest rates on family interest. That is another $1.5 billion. And then by capping the amount of direct student loans that can be made, presumably we are going to pick up $1.4 billion.

Mr. President, this amendment would strike the most onerous provisions of the reconciliation bill by striking the provisions that increase the costs of loans for students and their families.

The Republicans propose that almost 70 percent of the $10.8 billion cuts in the current student loan system be shouldered by students and their families. Only $3.1 billion is borne by the loan industry and $100 million by cost sharing with States. The overwhelming majority of these cuts, shown in red on this chart, would be shouldered by the very students the program is intended to help. Only 30 percent of the cuts, shown in yellow on this chart, are imposed on banks, guaranty agencies, and secondary markets in the student loan industry. That means that directly or indirectly the wrong people suffer. It will cost needy students more to borrow.

The Kennedy-Simon amendment fixes that. It strikes all portions of the Labor and Human Resources Committee reconciliation title that impose higher student loan costs on students and their families. Let me show you how.

First, the amendment would restore a 6-month interest-free grace period following graduation. That means that interest would not accrue on student loans for 6 months after graduation giving students time to look for a job. This amendment strikes the Republican cut of $2.7 billion for the interest-free grace period. The amendment would thereby save an individual student between $700 and $2,500, depending on the length of study and amount borrowed.

Next, the amendment eliminates a new .85-percent fee on new student loans. It strikes the $2 billion Republicans would save by introducing this new loan fee. The Republican plan would force colleges either to absorb this new tax on student loans or pass it on as increased students fees. This would have meant about $25 every year for about 14 million students with new loans. It would have effectively penalized schools for accepting needy students.

Next, the amendment eliminates the rise in interest rates families pay for student loans. Without this amendment, the increase in PLUS loan interest rates could amount to up to $5,000 a family. This increase would be paid by the very families who lack other assets against which to borrow, and must therefore borrow most heavily from this program to afford 4 years of college.

Finally, the amendment eliminates the 20 percent cap on the direct loan program. The program is now at 30 to 40 percent and has made the student loan process much quicker and more efficient for participating students.

This amendment is good policy for the Nation. In New Mexico, it will be absolutely essential. It will enable a better education for some students who otherwise would not go to college. Colleges in New Mexico have volunteered my office the numbers of their students on Federal financial aid because, they tell me, they know is vital for the students they serve. They say three New Mexico colleges alone have well over 20,000 students receiving some form of Federal financial aid. At the University of New Mexico, there are about 10,000; at New Mexico State University, about 9,000; at Western New Mexico University, about 1,400. Other colleges have more.

More important, over 70 percent of all financial aid in most New Mexico colleges is Federal. In some it is almost the only source available. In New Mexico Highlands University and New Mexico Junior College in Hobbs there is very little financial assistance that is not Federal. These schools serve students to whom financial assistance is absolutely essential, whose families cannot sustain higher levels of personal debt. Other States may be richer than New Mexico. But in my home State, this amendment would make the difference in reducing the level of student and family debt to a point that working families feel it is within their reach. This would enable some students to go to college who otherwise might not go. Graduating from college is no longer a ticket to the good life; it has become a mandatory qualification for most entry-level professional jobs.

This bill strikes at the heart of the Federal Government's commitment to education; the Kennedy-Simon amendment renews that commitment to making college accessible to qualified students regardless of privilege. I urge my colleagues to adopt this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I urge my colleagues to support the Kennedy-Simon amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 28 minutes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I yield myself such time as I may need to make a brief statement or two regarding this amendment. And then I will yield time to another Member on our side.

The chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee and I were chatting here on the floor, and the Senator from Kansas indicated to me a couple of things. Members on both sides are probably aware that there are discussions going on now that may directly address much of the content of this amendment in a way that would be very similar to what is being proposed here. Those discussions are going on as we debate this issue.

There is likely to be, from our side, an amendment which would be responsive to some of these concerns, many of which were raised in the Labor and Human Resources Committee—Members on both sides of the aisle—during the debate.

For the students who are watching today and listening to our proceedings, or their families, I want to point out a couple of factors which, once again, the chairman of the committee reminded me of, which we discussed during our deliberations on this.

First of all, nothing in the reconciliation package will, in any way, affect the volume of loans available to students. In other words, the growth rate of student loan volume will continue unabated under the Republican package. Students who are hoping to get loans will have those loans available. We are not contracting the size of the loan volume. I believe it will be in the vicinity of $26 billion annually under this package.

In addition, I point out concerns that have been raised hear about the origination fee that is part of this package. There was an amendment, as the President will remember, brought before the committee that would have eliminated the origination fee. It was opposed and voted down. I believe every Member of the minority party voted against an amendment that would have eliminated those origination fees.

I want to, once again, point out just for clarification, insofar as the grace period issue is concerned, we are not asking students to begin paying back their loans upon completion of school. Our changes only go to the issues of when interest begins to accrue. Students will still have 6 months after they graduate before they are required to begin paying their student loans. Indeed, as I think everybody is aware, the overriding goal we have here in this reconciliation package, and more broadly in our budget, is to bring the budget into balance.

Mr. President, when we do that, we not only will bring down interest rates for the Federal Government, we also will bring down interest rates across America for everybody. When those interest rates come down, they will not just come down insofar as what we pay on the bills, it will be for what people pay on home mortgages and with respect to student loans. As those student loan interest rates come down, they will, I believe far more effectively, help students to finance their college education than anything we are doing here today, because a much lower student loan rate is going to mean far less total dollars spent by students than anything else we could do here in the U.S. Senate.

I also note that in our finance package here in the reconciliation bill, there also is a student loan deduction available to people who are paying student loans, for middle-income families. That, too, will help to offset the burdens of college education that middle-class families in this country pay.

So we are trying to be responsive. We are not reducing the volume rate. We are not requiring students to begin paying their loans earlier; and, most important, we are trying to balance the budget so that interest rates on student loans will be so low that they will help students in the kind of ways students want most, which is a total amount of money being paid back, lower than what they have to pay back today.

I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, this is the first time I have come to the floor to comment on this reconciliation package. I guess the first thing we tried to look at with regard to this is the tax cuts and also the cuts in spending. One has to look at it from the standpoint of how it affects home. What does it do for my home State of Montana? There are some things not in this package that I think, if you want to do something about a farm bill, give farmers accelerated depreciation and income averaging, we would not need a farm bill, if you want to be fair with agriculture because of the conditions under which they work.

But in this package, I congratulate Senator DOMENICI, the chairman of the Budget Committee and, of course, the Finance Committee, for their exceptionally hard work to try to balance and make it fair. Tax relief for families is the biggest part of this tax relief provision. It goes to families. Now, we hear talk on the other side of the aisle this morning about a cutback in programs. Why do you think there are tax cuts in here? Because it allows families to make the decision on how they want to spend their money, not how it is spent here in Washington, DC; it is for them who live in the hinterlands. There is tax relief for senior citizens and small businesses.

When you look at my State of Montana, that is going right down the line where we need a little relief. And we close some loopholes for corporations. So they did exceptional work on this. We have heard about the tax break for the rich, corporate welfare, and all of this, those loopholes for the corporations. They have been closed. Frankly, I have not seen a lot of that. This tax package, as a total revenue cost over a 7-year budget, is around $245 billion. However the cost is reduced by elimination of those corporate loopholes, which saves the Government a little over $21 billion over 7 years. That net cost makes us back to $224 billion. We can get bogged down in figures. I know how easy that is.

We have to keep reminding America through this whole debate that the single largest revenue item in this tax package is a $500 per child tax credit, which has a cost of about $142 billion. What is wrong with letting families hang on to their money? They earned it. Sure, there are some Government services they want to pay for and it takes some amount of dollars to provide services that only Government can offer. We know that. But when they start making the decisions for all parts of your life, then that is where the real debate starts. Nobody is debating public safety here or doing some of the things for the society that has to be done.

This package provides for an adoption credit; a marriage penalty credit; deductions for student loan interest, for the first time; deductions for contributions to individual retirement accounts. These tax breaks—about $28 billion, or so—are 13 percent of the total cost of the package, and are targeted for folks who are middle-income folks. There is $40 billion in capital gains tax reform. There, again, we hear "cut taxes for the rich." Capital gains tax is a voluntary tax.

You do not have to pay capital gains tax. You do not have to pay it because you do not have to sell.

The real wealthy folks can get around it because they know how to move those things around with tax laws and different laws.

On capital gains, this helps even the homeowner whenever he sells his home and wants to retire. Everybody whose assets appreciate, pays capital gains taxes—that is, if they sell.

So it is not for the rich. It is for all Americans that are smart enough to get ahold of some assets that appreciate, and they pay taxes on them.

We visited with a very knowledgeable man from Kansas and he said over $7 trillion of assets would flow onto the market if the capital gains was cut in half. Imagine what that would do to the American economy. Imagine what that would do to the tax coffers of the Treasury of the U.S. Government, so that maybe we can do some things that we want to do.

We have to think a little bit—just think a little bit. Capital gains is basically a voluntary tax. Just a voluntary tax.

Another provision in this package, the estate and inheritance tax provision on that reform. Folks who leave estates—those estates have been taxed and taxed and taxed and the interest they make on that has been taxed and taxed and taxed and then when they die they are taxed again.

I think of all of the ranches and farms in the State of Montana where money had to be spent for insurance policies to protect themselves so they could pay the inheritance taxes so the farm or the ranch can stay in the family.

Needless, needless expense. They paid taxes on that land, and property tax, income taxes, investment taxes, and then when the key family member passes on there is another estate tax that has to be paid again.

Hard-working families—the only thing they have on these farms and ranches is just the land. They have not made a lot of money. They do not have a lot of cash. They just do not have a lot of cash.

In effect, these death taxes are robbing American communities of a tradition of values that local family-run businesses provide. I wholeheartedly support that provision. If you feel for a young man that is trying to start off in the agriculture business, my goodness, do not strap him with a debt that he cannot work his way out of.

If you think there is not some disparity there, I will give you just a little idea on what it is like to farm. I was walking down the grocery store aisle the other day and found out that Wheaties cost $3.46 a pound. Do you realize that we are only getting $2.50 a bushel for a bushel of wheat that has 60 pounds of wheat in it?

They wonder—it is a little bit of disparity here. You want that man to keep on producing food and fiber so the American people can eat cheaper than any other society on the face of this Earth.

A while ago I listened to my distinguished colleague from the other side of the aisle challenge the estate tax credit. Their argument is focused on the unfairness of giving a tax break to any estate that exceeds $5 million.

I have asserted the top one half of the top 1 percent of the American people fall into that category. They should not be getting a tax break in the first place. I agree.

I must depart from my distinguished colleagues on the other side of the aisle for two reasons. I believe any death tax is on its face unfair. If we are going to keep these small businesses, these farms and ranches in the families of traditional values, we have to take a look at what we do in the taxing situation.

Taxes that cost jobs—the alternative minimum tax, we did not get all that we needed in this, but if there is one place that creates jobs and opportunities, it is here. When you tax small corporations, small family businesses, make sure that they keep two sets of books to see which one is a higher set of taxes than the others, that takes away from this business of the ability to expand, to expand their business.

Under the committee's package, the method of depreciation is conformed but the useful life is not.

One major problem with this is that business will start to have to suffer the unnecessary costs of maintaining two sets of books on each depreciable asset of the performing two tax computations to determine that they do not fallinto the alternative minimum tax bucket.

Two sets of books—needless, costly. We could be investing that in a bigger payroll. That is what creates jobs.

In conclusion, we should talk about some good things that are in this package. Talk about the good things that people are going to say we will keep more money in your neighborhood, for your quality of life, that you can make the decisions on how you want to spend the money and not be looking toward this 13 square miles of logic-free environment or answers that sometimes just do not work in our local communities.

That is what this debate is all about—where the power is, the power of the purse string. With the tax credits and some reform we will do the responsible thing and not the irresponsible thing of saying, "Let's wait until next year," or "Let's accept the status quo," and we know what the results of that are.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the education amendment offered by my colleague from Massachusetts.

I glanced through this two-volume reconciliation thing this morning and I found all kinds of things. Here is a provision for the Hetch Hetchy Dam. I have no idea where the Hetch Hetchy Dam is or what it means.

It has very little significance for the future of our country, but what does have significance for the future of our country is what we are doing in the field of education.

The Presiding Officer may be too young to remember the GI bill after World War II. There was a fight on the GI bill. The American Legion, to their credit, said "Let's have educational benefits as part of the GI bill." The other veterans organizations said, "Let's have a cash bonus for veterans."

Fortunately, the American Legion prevailed and we put the money into education. We lifted this Nation.

Now we face the same choice. Do we have a tax loophole here that is being put in, which the Kennedy amendment says, "Let's not put that tax loophole in," or do we put the money in education? The Kennedy amendment says put the money in education.

I want to address specifically the question of direct lending. Let me say to my colleagues on the Republican side, this is not a Democratic idea. The first person that suggested it is Congressman TOM PETRI, a Republican from Wisconsin.

My cosponsor of this legislation in the U.S. Senate was Senator David Durenberger, a Republican from Minnesota. When he was approached and said we ought to have the free enterprise system work and have the banks and the guaranty agencies profit from it, Dave Durenberger said, "This is not free enterprise; it is a free lunch." That is the reality.

There is not a school in the country, not a college or university, that is on direct lending, that wants to go back to the old system.

Colleges and universities like it, the students like it, taxpayers like it for reasons I will get into in a minute, and for my colleagues on the Republican side who say we like to do away with paperwork, I have heard speeches on both sides on that, every college and university says this does away with all kinds of paperwork. This is a change not just for a speech but for a vote. If the colleges and universities like it, if the students like it, if it is good for the taxpayers, why are we limiting direct lending? My friends, the only beneficiaries are the banks and the guaranty agencies and their lobbyists. And we have just seen in the newspapers that the banks have record-breaking profits. If we want to have a bank subsidy bill, let us call it that, but do not put the name of "student assistance" on it. Let us not play games.

Who are these people who are fighting direct lending? The Student Loan Marketing Association, Sallie Mae, created by the U.S. Congress. The salary of the chief executive officer of Sallie Mae, 3 years ago was $2.1 million. All they do is student aid, guaranteed by the U.S. Government. The guaranty agency, one in Indiana, USA—the chief executive officer earns $627,000. We pay the President of the United States $200,000. And that one guaranty agency is spending $750,000 on lobbying on this.

We face a choice. Are we going to help students and parents and taxpayers or the banks and the guaranty agencies? It is very, very clear. This is brazen, Mr. President, brazen. We have to help people.

Indiana University says there is 90 percent less paperwork with direct lending, 25 percent fewer errors, easier adjustments, faster disbursement. I have heard a lot of talk about unfunded mandates around here. This is an unfunded mandate you are imposing on colleges and universities. Iowa State University, for example, testified they have been able to take four people who used to work in student loans because of the all the paperwork and everything, and have them do other things. And they have been able to cancel some of their computers that they have, for $400 a month.

If I may have 1 more minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMON. It is very, very clear what the public interest is. "Banks Cash In, Taxpayers Lose on Loan Programs," USA Today says.

Government employees—we hear a lot, let us simplify. This is what we are told: 500 employees direct lending; 2,500 Government employees. That does count the guaranty agencies.

Then here is what CBO says about the 20 percent cap that is in here right now: Under current law, direct lending will save us, over 7 years, $4.6 billion.

What we did on the budget resolution, we said count administrative costs for direct lending but not for the old program. So, because of the phoniness—and even the Chicago Tribune says they are cooking the books here—you theoretically save $600 million. The real saving is a saving of $4.6 billion.

If we are interested in helping students, colleges and taxpayers, we ought to be voting for the Kennedy amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I believe that it is important constantly, during the course of this debate, to return to fundamental principles, to the broad policy goals which we as a nation ought to seek for the betterment of our society and for a brighter future for those who follow us. In returning to those fundamental principles, there is no better place to start than with this fundamental principle enunciated by Thomas Jefferson almost two centuries ago. And I quote our third President:

> The question whether one generation has the right to bind another by the deficit it imposes is a question of such consequence as to place it among the fundamental principles of Government. We should consider ourselves unauthorized to saddle posterity with our debts and morally bound to pay them ourselves.

The staff notes I have here with me this morning have, at one place, the notation "they," that is to say the opponents to this resolution, "do not wish to balance the budget." But I do not believe that to be true. I have not heard any argument at any time this year from a Member of this body that has not included in it at least lip service to the concept of a balanced budget. But, of course, there are three ways to that goal, or at least three kinds of oratory which give lip service to Thomas Jefferson's principle.

The first is to state the principle but always to have an objection to any course of action which will make that principle a reality. And that is the common approach of those who oppose the resolution we have before us today.

The second way, a way that seems to have very little support on the other side of the aisle but clearly actuates the President of the United States, is to define the problem out of existence. I will come back to that in just a moment.

The third way, the hard way, the difficult way, is actually to make basic changes in our laws and in our spending policies, that will in fact lead us to a balanced budget.

To return for a moment to the President's approach of defining it out of existence, I would also like to quote him. Just a little more than 2 short years ago, the President of the United States said:

> The Congressional Budget Office was normally more conservative about what was going to happen and closer to right than previous Presidents have been. I did this so we could argue about priorities with the same set of numbers. I did this so that no one could say I was estimating my way out of this difficulty. I did this because, if we can agree together on the most prudent revenues we are likely to get if the recovery stays and we do the right things economically, then it will turn out better for the American people than we said. In the last 12 years, because there were differences over the revenue estimates, you and I know that both parties were given greater elbow room for irresponsibility. This is tightening the reins on Democrats as well as Republicans. Let us at least argue about the same set of numbers so the American people will think we are shooting straight with them.

In those eloquent words the President said let us all agree that we will use the projections of the Congressional Budget Office.

That was then. This is now. Earlier this year the President presented a budget to us which never, in his own terms, included a deficit of less than $200 billion. Later, when it turned out that Republicans were serious about balancing the budget, the President said, "Me, too. I can do it. And I can do it without pain. I can do it without changing any major policies in the United States. I can do it by defining it out of existence. I will abandon my allegiance to the Congressional Budget Office. I will simply estimate that interest rates and inflation will be lower and revenues will be higher, and without any major changes at all we can balance the budget." So he defined the problem out of existence.

The day before yesterday in this body we had a straw poll, as it were, on whether or not the President's approach was acceptable. And it lost by a vote of 96 to nothing. The other side of this aisle, quite properly, rejects that approach. But it also rejects the approach of any significant changes. So, at this moment, nominally we are debating education. They do not want any changes. Previously we were debating Medicaid. They do not want any changes. Before that we debated Medicare. They do not want any changes. In fact, you can go down a litany of spending programs, and they do not want any changes. But they would like to have a balanced budget. It just is not a high enough priority.

Mr. President, to return to the Congressional Budget Office, we now know that we are not simply engaging in a game of whether or not it is appropriate to balance the budget. We know what the positive results of balancing that budget will be. The Congressional Budget Office says that if we actually change the laws appropriately interest rates will be sufficiently lower and economic growth will be sufficiently higher so that the Federal Treasury will be $170 billion better off by the time the budget comes into balance in the year 2002. That is only the Federal Treasury. That is not the other hundreds of billions of dollars which will be in the pockets of the American people because they have better jobs and higher wages.

That is what this exercise is all about, a better break for America.

So what are we proposing to do? We are proposing to say to the Americans, if we go through this process, if we make these changes, we are going to give that $170 billion back to you in lower taxes on working Americans, and a little more besides because we have been responsible enough to balance the budget.

So when we get right down to it, Mr. President, that is what this debate is all about.

First principles—the moral duty not to load our spending on the backs of our children and grandchildren; and the economic benefit—an economic benefit I suspect Thomas Jefferson did not suspect—of acting in a responsible fashion, both because we will create more opportunity for our people and because we can appropriately lower our taxes.

That is the difference between the two parties. That is the difference between a yes and a no vote on this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURNS). Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has 20 minutes and 54 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 4 minutes to my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator for yielding.

I just could not help but hearing my friend from Washington saying we have a moral obligation. Yes. We do. We have a lot of moral obligations to our children and to the future. One of the most important obligations is to ensure that future generations have the ability to get a decent, sound education so that they can raise their families and so that they can compete in the world marketplace. That also is a moral obligation.

What this reconciliation bill does is pull the rug out from under that obligation that we have for future generations.

Mr. President, we hear a lot of talk about the tax breaks that are in this bill. Those of us on this side have been talking about the $245 billion tax breaks for the wealthy that will come at the expense of the elderly and Medicare cuts. There is an $11 billion cut in student aid in this bill, the largest cut in student aid in our history. But what we are not hearing about are the hidden taxes that the Republicans have in this bill, the "stealth taxes." This is what they are hitting students with to pay for those tax breaks for the wealthy.

This chart illustrates this right here. This budget adds about $700 to $2,500 of debt per student by eliminating the interest subsidy during the grace period. That is a hidden tax on our students. It also includes up to $5,000 in additional expense for families who use the PLUS program by raising their interest rates. It is another tax on students and their families. It imposes a direct Federal tax of .85 percent on colleges and universities participating in the student loan programs; a direct tax on colleges. Of course, they are going to have to pass that on to their students.

Last, of course, it forces schools out of the direct loan program that has been so successful.

So we hear about the tax breaks to the wealthy. We do not hear about the stealth taxes that are in the Republican bill, and mainly it falls on students.

Mr. President, there was an article recently in the Des Moines Register which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Des Moines Register]

THE REALITY OF CUTTING STUDENT AID

(By Rekha Basu)

If you want to talk to Robin Kniech, you'd best catch the Drake University junior early, before she heads for class or checks in at one of her five jobs, which add nearly 40 hours to her already full load.

Between the baby sitting, secretarial and other work, Kniech just manages to eke out her $1,200 tuition contribution. The rest of the $14,100 is made up from merit-based scholarships and college loans.

Last week, which was Save Student Financial Aid Week, sponsored by Drake Democrats, Kniech was also out rallying students against proposed cuts to federal student aid. For her, it's a subject of more than political interest. Any cuts, however small, could tip the delicate balance she has crafted to get a college education.

"I don't have any financial support from my parents," says Kniech. "I don't have any more hours to squeeze, and if I were to lose $300 in aid, I probably wouldn't be in school."

Just when you start thinking there's no other sacred zone left for congressional Republicans to tamper with, along comes another. If it isn't school lunches or aid to families with minor children, or programs that give disadvantaged preschoolers a fighting start, if it isn't rolling back federal standards governing the care of elderly in nursing homes or the health care of low-income people, then it's gashes into the very programs that enable people to go to college so they can hope to get decent jobs. At Drake, several hundred thousands dollars could be lost, according to John Parker, director of financial planning. Some 60 percent of Drake students get need-based assistance.

This is a tough issue to get your arms around, given the rather confusing tangle of college-aid programs and formulas. But the bottom line is the GOP plans to take $10.4 billion out of student-loan entitlement programs and apply it to deficit reduction. The legislation targets Stafford loans—private loans secured by the federal government, which you might remember as Guaranteed Student Loans. That's what they were called when I got one for graduate school. A whopping 90 percent of Drake law students and 40 percent of undergraduates now get them.

It also hits loans to parents to help finance their kids' educations, and several loan programs originating with the federal government but administered by the university, such as the Perkins loan. That cut alone would knock off aid to 90 Drake students.

Some proposals that might seem benign can cut quite deep. One would force student recipients of subsidized Stafford loans (those given to the highest-needs students) to start accruing interest charges immediately on graduation, instead of after the six-month grace period they now have. The added debt could be just enough to derail Kniech's plans to join the Peace Corps. "This hits at high-needs students harder than anybody else," says Parker.

There's also a proposal to raise both the ceiling and floor on the major federal grant program, Pell grants, disqualifying some 250,000 students nationwide, costing 75 Drake students about $40,000, and affecting students' eligibility for other grants. And more.

If you're tempted to argue that a student like Kniech should set her sights on a less costly education, forget it. She couldn't afford community college. She'd have to pay more than twice what she's paying out of pocket.

Viewed piece by piece, the cuts may not look like much. And Drake Republicans have countered with flyers pointing to the programs which aren't slated for actual cuts (but contain no increases for inflation), or the growth in funding of the Pell grant program. But every cut matters to students struggling to stay afloat. "There are students at Drake who, if they had to come up with another $50 they just flat out couldn't do it," Parker says. And there's the precedent. As senior Tanya Beer put it, "I think we're moving more toward education for the privileged rather than education as a right."

The financial-aid story offers an interesting juxtaposition of GOP fact and rhetoric. While the cheerleaders of congressional Republicans like to rail about elitist liberals, the scheme unfolding in Congress is built around an unparalleled elitism, deliberately cutting off avenues for advancement for those starting out at a disadvantage, even as they are admonished to stay in school and work harder.

So excuse Robin Kniech if the politicians' lectures about working her way up ring a little hollow. She's keeping her end of the bargain, and a 3.8 grade-point average. She just doesn't have anything left to give up.

Mr. HARKIN. It is entitled "The Reality of Cutting Student Aid."

I will read a couple of items from it:

> If you want to talk to Robin Kniech, you'd best catch the Drake University junior early, before she heads for class or checks in at one of her five jobs, which add nearly 40 hours to her already full load.
>
> Between the baby sitting, secretarial and other work, Kniech just manages to eke out her $1,200 tuition contribution. The rest of the $14,100 is made up from merit-based scholarships and college loans.
>
> "I don't have any financial support from my parents," says Kniech. "I don't have any more hours to squeeze, and if I were to lose $300 in aid, I probably wouldn't be in school."

John Parker, director of financial planning, said that 60 percent of Drake students get need-based assistance.

"There are students at Drake who, if they had to come up with another $50, just could not, flatout could not, do it," Parker said.

I think I will end on this note, a good note. The writer of the article said:

> So excuse Robin Kniech if the politicians' lectures about working her way up ring a little hollow. She's keeping her end of the bargain, and a 3.8 grade-point average. She just doesn't have anything left to give.

Mr. President, here is what is happening at one of our regent universities, the University of Northern Iowa, the smallest of our three state universities. For the 1990–91 school year the average loan of a student per year was $2,589. That was in 1991. Today that is up to $4,395, and, if this reconciliation bill passes, that is going to climb even higher. This bill just piles more debt on students. That is going to discourage students from going to school and seeking a higher education.

Who does it hit? It hits moderate- and low-income families the hardest. That is why we have to defeat this reconciliation bill and make sure that these students can get a decent education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DODD. Thank you, Mr. President. I appreciate my colleague yielding me this time.

Mr. President, I am a cosponsor of this amendment and strongly support this amendment. Many good arguments have already been made here this morning. In fact, the chart used earlier by my colleague from New Mexico I think makes the case. Seventy percent of the cuts proposed in the bill before us will fall on students and their families; 30 percent are industry losses.

I suppose in the context of a huge budget, some may say what is $7.6 billion in all of this? I suppose there are not many people here in this body who would understand what this will mean to millions of Americans. The impact seems relatively minor when you start talking about $100, $300, or $500 a year. But they are not minor costs for most Americans.

There is a failure to appreciate, whether it is Medicaid, Medicare, higher education, that while these numbers of $90, $100, $200, $2,000, or $2,700 do not seem like anything large in the context of people of the upper-income levels, to working families in this country, these amounts make the difference between getting an education, getting health care, losing the job, or falling back into poverty. And for many of these families, they will be hit time and time again by the provisions of this bill—they will pay more for health care, receive less earned income tax credit and pay more for college.

Our colleague from North Dakota the other day offered an amendment on the cuts in Medicare. He said cannot we forgo the tax breaks for people making in excess of $250,000 a year? The savings to us would be $50 billion over 7 years, if we just said nobody over $250,000 gets a tax break. We could have saved $50 billion, if we had followed that amendment. But this Senate said no. We are even going to provide the tax breaks for people making in excess of a quarter of a million dollars.

Just think what that $50 billion would do. We would not have to be debating this amendment. Mr. President, $7 billion of that $50 billion could go to these middle-income families out there that are going to feel the pinch in higher education.

Mr. President, we all appreciate and know that in a global economy in the 21st century we are going to have to produce the best-educated, and the best-prepared generation that this country has ever produced if we are going to be effective. That is common sense. Everyone ought to understand that.

Yet as you increase these costs on these families, we are going to watch students fall through the cracks. We are going to lose that talent and ability merely because we want to provide a tax break for people making in excess of a quarter of a million dollars. I do not know anyone who believes, if you have to make a choice as to which of those two groups you benefit when there are scarce resources, it ought not go to people earning a quarter of a million dollars rather than to those of modest means pursuing higher education.

I think it is regretful; I think it is sad, indeed, that this institution could not make the simple decision of saying to those at the highest incomes: Wait a while. Maybe next year or the year after we can provide a tax break for you. But right now we need to assist families struggling to meet the costs of higher education.

This $7.6 billion is going to fall heavily on those families out there trying to make ends meet, trying to send their kids to college and trying to make difficult choices that make this possible.

Let me just quote one recent survey. It shows that business that made an investment in the educational attainment of their work force—as reported by corporate managers—resulted in twice a return in increased productivity of a comparable increase in work hours and nearly three times the return of an investment in capital stock. That is corporate managers talking about the importance of investments in education. I hope this amendment is adopted.

There are 11 million young Americans who are in our public higher education institutions. Cannot we today offer some relief, some hope for them even if it means saying to those making more than a quarter of a million a year, you are going to have to wait a while to get your break, to see to it that those 11 million families, those 11 million children get the opportunity for a decent education? That choice ought to be clear.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. At this time I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I wish to thank my colleague from Michigan. I compliment him on his leadership. I just mention that many of the allegations and statements that are made are certainly not taking a look at the overall big picture.

I wish to help students, too. I understand that there may be a leadership amendment that is going to make some modifications in the proposals that are being discussed. I think I will wait for the discussions on the specifics until that amendment is offered. It will be accommodating some of the concerns that have been raised because I think all of us—I happen to have four kids, two of whom are in higher education right now. That costs a little money. But I will tell you the best news we could give my kids that are going to college is to balance the budget.

We only have one proposal before us to balance the budget. That is the proposal that the Republicans have put forth that will give us a balanced budget. I remember going to a town meeting not too long ago and somebody who was about 23 years old raised their hand and said: Senator, will I ever see a balanced budget in my lifetime?

They were just as serious as they could possibly be. Later today, or maybe tomorrow, we are going to be voting on a balanced budget. But there is only one. President Clinton does not have a balanced budget. We do. When you think of somebody going to college and talking about college loans, what a heck of a deal it is right now that they inherit such enormous national debt. Let us at least stop it.

The only proposal that we have before us to stop it is our proposal to balance the budget. Now, we may make some modifications in the proposal to alleviate some of the concerns that have been raised specifically dealing with student loans. So again I will leave that alone for the time being.

Let us talk about what we are doing for all American families. I heard my colleague say, well, this is $10 billion. We are giving American families $140 billion of tax cuts. If they have children, they get a tax cut under our proposal, $500 per child. If you have four children, that is $2,000. That is pretty significant. And families get to decide if they want to use that money for education, for transportation, or for other things. Families make that decision. I think that is important.

I also want to talk about the benefit of a balanced budget for the average American family. If you have a $100,000 mortgage—it seems like that is a large amount but that is not that unheard of today—you will have savings—it is estimated by independent sources that by having a balanced budget you will have a 2-percent interest rate reduction, maybe as high as a 2.7-percent reduction on a $100,000 mortgage. That boils down to savings of over $2,000 per year, actually $2,162 per year.

Also, if you have a student loan, let us say an $11,000 student loan, that is $216 in savings just in the fact that interest rates have come down. If you have a car loan of, say, $15,000, you have savings of $180. Those total savings of $2,500 per year if we are able to bring interest rates down by balancing the budget. So I think students have a real interest in seeing us balance the budget.

I also want to talk about some of the misstatements that have been made. Are families better off at different income levels? Because I heard some people say some lower-income families are getting a tax increase. That is totally false, totally, completely false. And so again I wish to look at what happens to families under this proposal. Families that make, say, $5,000, they do not pay any income tax. They pay zero income tax. Right now they get an earned income credit of $1,800. They get it under present law. That is what they are going to get under our proposal.

What about families making $10,000? They still do not pay any income tax. They get a $3,110 EIC. Next year they are going to get an increase that goes to $3,200.

What about families that make $15,000? Right now, they get a check from Uncle Sam of $2,300. They do not write Uncle Sam a check. They still pay zero income tax and next year they are going to get a bigger check, $2,488. So that is an increase. That is an improvement.

What about families that make $20,000? Well, they get an EIC of $832. With two children, they are presently paying zero tax. Next year, they are going to get from us, EIC goes up to $1,429.

You might say, why? Well, the tax credit reduces their tax deduction so they get a higher EIC.

What about a family that, say, makes $30,000. You have a lot of families making $30,000 that are sending kids to school. Right now, they are writing Uncle Sam a check for $929. Under our proposal, they will receive an EIC of $171 and pay no income tax. That is over a $1,000 improvement for that family. And actually every family beyond here will receive over a $1,000 improvement. Right now, if they are writing checks for $2,000, they will write a check for $900. That is over a $1,000 improvement.

A $40,000 family would write a check to Uncle Sam right now with two children, $3,500. Under our proposal, they will write a check for $2,400. Again, they save $1,100. They save in the child credit. They also save from the reduction in the marriage penalty.

A family making $50,000 would write a check for $5,000. Under our proposal, they will write a check for $3,900. They will get a $1,100 savings. They can use that money for education. Our whole propose is targeted at families, and families can decide how to spend that money. And people with children are concerned about education. We are going to let them keep their money so they can decide how it should be spent. I think that is awfully important.

We have heard a lot of rhetoric that bothers me because it is not factual. Lower-income groups are going to have their taxes raised. Not true. In many cases they are alluding to earned income credits, and so on. Those grow. I happen to be pretty familiar with them. I am going to put them in the RECORD. Maybe everybody can be familiar with them. These credits are growing every year. We give taxpayers a tax cut if they have children and they want their children to go to school.

It is interesting; after the debate we had last night, somebody called my office about 11 o'clock and said: I am kind of embarrassed because my daughter, who is going to school, going to college received an earned income credit of $300. He said the reason why I am embarrassed is because I am a millionaire. But in present law they qualify. Does that make sense? I said, well, why would your daughter qualify? Well, she forgot to tell them that I gave her $18,000 to support her college education. But under present law she can qualify if she does not report that income. Now, we try to tighten down on EIC, so we report other income and say that income should be counted.

Right now with EIC, you qualify under the program if you make less than $26,000. Under our proposal we allow that to grow to $29,000. Some people say that is a Draconian change because the administration wants you to qualify for EIC if you make $34,600. That may be the majority of people in Alabama; that may be the majority of people in Michigan, maybe in Oklahoma. There are a lot of people in our State that make less than $34,000.

So we curb the growth. Right now you can qualify if you have income less than $26,000. We allow that to grow under our proposal to $29,000. But the administration wants it to grow to $34,000.

I had a millionaire call me last night and say, "My daughter received a benefit that I don't think she should have. I think you're right. I think a lot of people are receiving this benefit that shouldn't. Let's try to target our assistance to those people who really need the help."

That is what we are trying to do, target our assistance. Some 70 percent of this package is directed at American families that make less than $75,000 per year. Those are the families that are sending their kids to school. So let us be responsive. Let us be helpful. And let us make some of the changes that are necessary to make our economy grow.

At the same time, let us balance the budget. I am really excited about the opportunity to balance the budget. I am bothered by the fact that the President of the United States had a press conference yesterday and he said, "Look how great we are doing. The deficit has come down 3 years in a row. We are making real progress."

What he forgot to show is what happens in the future. According to the Congressional Budget Office, his deficit grows. He talks about $164 billion in 1995, and it is less than it was the year before. I think that is great. I do not think he is entirely responsible for that. But what happens in the outyears? Well, the Congressional Budget Office says that it will be $210 billion in the year 2002. He forgot to tell everybody the deficit is going to go from $164 billion to $210 billion and over $200 billion almost every year, according to the Congressional Budget Office.

That is not acceptable. There is a change. Some of us are very, very sincere. We mean it. We want to balance the budget. Some of us voted for a constitutional amendment to make us balance the budget, and we failed. We lacked one vote in the Senate. But we also said we should do it whether this amendment passes or not.

Many people on the other side of the aisle said, "We should pass a balanced budget. We don't need a constitutional amendment to make us do it." And if we had the right composition in this body, they would be correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHELBY). The Senator from Oklahoma has spoken for 10 minutes.

Mr. NICKLES. I ask for an additional 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. NICKLES. It would be correct if we had the composition in the body that would vote for a balanced budget. But I will tell my colleagues, we cannot balance the budget unless or until we are willing to contain the growth of the entire budget. And we have already had votes to say, "Oh, let's don't reduce the rate of growth in Medicare. Oh, we're cutting $270 billion in Medicare."

The facts are, in Medicare, this year we are spending $178 billion in Medicare, and in the year 2002 we are going to spend $286 billion in Medicare. That is a significant increase. It is a 7 percent increase over that entire period of time, 7 percent per year.

"Don't cut Medicaid, for crying out loud. No. Medicaid is too sensitive." They forget to tell people Medicaid in the last 4 years has grown as much as 28, 29, 13, and 8 percent. Make that in 5 years then 9 percent. Medicaid has exploded in costs. Many States have figured out ways to dump their liability on the Federal Government. It used to be a 50-50 share for most States. Now they are figuring out ways to make it 70 percent Federal Government, 30 percent State. We are trying to reform that and curtail that growth.

Mr. President, I think it is awfully important we balance the budget, and I compliment my colleagues for the proposal we have before us today. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, may I inquire as to how much time is left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 8 minutes 40 seconds.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield me—

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have printed in the RECORD several charts and other material.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Re: Earned Income Tax Credit.

Once again we bring to your attention a piece run by today's Washington Post that refutes the shrill political posturing of the White House.

(By James K. Glassman)

A PROGRAM GONE BONKERS

The road to a $5 trillion national debt is paved with good intentions.

Look at the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC). Launched by Gerald Ford, lauded by Ronald Reagan, expanded by George Bush and Bill Clinton, it's based on welfare principles that even a Republican (or a professed New Democrat) can love. The only problem is that, like many other good ideas in Washington, it's gotten completely out of hand.

Currently, the EITC is the fastest-growing program in the federal budget. It will cost the Treasury $24 billion this year, up from less than $2 billion 10 years ago.

In their giant reconciliation bill—the final budget measure of the year—Republicans are trying to restrain this growth. Under the Senate version, EITC costs will rise to $32 billion in 2002. In the budget language of Washington, that's a cut. In any other language it's an increase—although not so large as projected under the current law, which has costs rising to $36 billion by 2002.

The EITC is a sort of negative income tax. If you fall into a certain earnings bracket, you don't pay the government; the government pays you.

The idea of the EITC is to put more money in the pockets of low-income working families. If you don't work, you don't qualify. Since the benefits are paid in cash and the rules are simple, the Internal Revenue Service can administer the EITC easily and cheaply.

Believers in the free market like the notion that the EITC doesn't force recipients to use funds for a particular purpose like other federal programs (housing, food stamps). Instead, it gives them money and lets them make their own choices.

The EITC is not only the fastest-growing entitlement program, it's the broadest. In 1986 some 7 million families were covered by the EITC, and the average-outlay by the government was $281. This year 18 million families are covered at an average of $1,265. In 1986 the maximum credit taxpayer could receive was $550; today, it's $3,111.

In Mississippi, a whopping 39 percent of families receive the EITC; in Texas, 26 percent; California, 22 percent. With this kind of penetration, the EITC follows a welfare tradition invented by Franklin Roosevelt: To keep a program alive, make sure money flows not just to the poor but to the middle class. That's been the key to success for Social Security, Medicare, student loans and farm subsidies.

The EITC was begun as a modest program to help offset the burden of payroll taxes on the poor and, through its unique structure, to encourage them to work more. But the philosophy soon became: "Hey, if a little bit is good, then more is better," says Bruce Bartlett, an economist who served in the Bush Treasury Department.

Today, the EITC is enjoyed by families making as much as $26,672 a year, and that doesn't include outside income. Under the tax law that President Clinton promoted and signed two years ago, by 2002 families making $34,612 will qualify for EITC benefits. The Senate wants to scale that figure back to $30,200—which seems pretty sensible for a government that already owes its creditors $4.9 trillion.

At its core, the EITC is a massive income transfer scheme. New IRS figures show that in 1993 the top 5 percent of American earners paid 47 percent of the federal income taxes, up from 37 percent in 1981. Meanwhile, the bottom 50 percent of earners—thanks in large measure to the EITC—paid 5 percent of the taxes.

The EITC, in other words, has created a veritable tax holiday for about half the families in America.

Many would say that's fair. But there's another question raised by the EITC: Does it really encourage work? There's doubt.

For 1996, families with two or more children will earn credits of 40 percent of their income until they reach earnings of $8,910 annually. Then, they max out at a credit (in nearly all cases, a cash payment) of $3,564. So far, so good. Clearly, there's a big incentive to work, since a dollar paid on the job becomes $1.40 in the pocket (minus modest payroll taxes).

If you earn between $8,910 and $11,630, you still receive the maximum credit. Then the disincentive begins—you start losing 21 cents of credits for every additional dollar you earn. When your income reaches $28,533, your credits hit zero.

Again, this sounds fair. But the problem is that the EITC forces lower-income Americans to face marginal tax rates that are higher than those faced by the richest Americans.

As Bartlett wrote recently in a brief for the National Center for Policy Analysis: "Families with incomes between $11,000 and $26,000 are being taxed at the rate of 60 percent on each additional dollar earned. . . . This total tax rate includes federal, state and local taxes plus the reduction in the EITC."

And these high marginal taxes definitely discourage work. Economist Edgar Browning of Texas A&M reported in the National Tax journal that nearly half of all families receiving the EITC has less income than they would have had without the tax credit—because the credit enticed them to work less. And a University of Wisconsin study found that "on balance the EITC reduces the total hours worked."

Is there a solution to the EITC conundrum? One answer is to remove the phaseout of benefits: Simply give all taxpayers an extra 40 percent credit for the first $10,000 or so of income. But that would be hugely expensive. Another answer is to kill the EITC entirely. But that would be politically impossible.

The third course is to try to restrain a program gone bonkers. That's what the Republicans are doing. At the same time, however, they should admit that the EITC isn't quite so glorious as they once thought. Maybe luring people out of poverty is something that government just can't do.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I must oppose the reconciliation bill we consider today because it impacts on parents, students, and families in ways they cannot afford; that is why I support and cosponsor Senator KENNEDY's amendment to strike the student loan provisions in this bill that impose higher college costs on students and working families.

Mr. President, the Labor Committee's proposal to save $10.85 billion through changes in the Federal Student Loan Program is simply unacceptable. It strikes a blow at the Federal Government's role in providing an opportunity structure for our Nation's youth. It threatens the future economic opportunity for young people who are today's students and tomorrow's work force, and it rejects help to those who practice self-help.

The Labor Committee's reconciliation proposal is another strike at this Nation's opportunity structure. The Republicans want to levy on new tax on colleges and universities. The Republicans want colleges to pay a .85 percent tax on their total student loan volume. That is outrageous.

It does not make a difference whether that tax is .85 percent or 2 percent as originally proposed by committee Republicans. A tax is a tax. Colleges and universities will still have to pay a new tax to the Federal Government every year.

Mr. President, colleges and universities all across my State of Maryland are adamantly opposed to this new tax.

This new tax means that the University of Maryland in College Park will have to pay approximately $255,000 in taxes on its student loan volume each year. The University of Maryland in Baltimore will have to pay approximately $180,000.

Private independent colleges will be especially hard hit. These colleges do not get substantial State financial support. This results in higher student loan volume. So, Loyola College in Baltimore will have to pay approximately $95,000 to the Federal Government.

It means that Johns Hopkins University will have to pay about $204,000 and Western Maryland College will pay about $25,000 in taxes on student loans each year.

Where will colleges get this money? They may be forced to pass on this new tax burden to students in the form of increased tuition, reduction in scholarships, or elimination of student services or programs.

College tuition has already skyrocketed. Our undergraduate students borrow the maximum of $17,125 a year just to be able to afford a college education, to have access to increased opportunities and to achieve the American dream. But this reconciliation bill will leave some students out in the cold.

This is unacceptable. It is not only a tax on colleges, but a tax on opportunity. Students in this country are told every day—do well, work hard, get a good education and you will be rewarded. But this kind of tax sends the wrong message to students trying to get ahead and trying to get ready for the future.

Mr. President, the Congress passed the Higher Education Act amendments in 1992 to bring help to those who practice self help. It was meant to be Federal help to middle class families who are drowning in debt and trying to send their children to college.

Yet, imposing a new tax is not only a hit on colleges and students, but also a hit on parents trying to help pay for their child's college education. This reconciliation bill increases the interest rate that parents will pay on loans and increases the overall cap on that interest.

Mr. President, promises made must be promises kept. By cutting student loans, we are cutting the promises we made to students, to parents and to colleges.

I believe in rewarding the good guys in our society who work hard and play by the rules. That means giving help to middle-class families where moms and dads struggle—maybe even working two jobs—to pay tuition to send their son or daughter to college.

Mr. President, these families are paying loans on top of loans. We cannot turn our backs on them now.

Our students need our support through Federal financial aid programs or through innovative initiatives like national service. But, we are doing away with those opportunities too.

National service gives students an alternate way to afford college, and at the same time, national service helps meet some of our community's most critical needs.

As an appropriator, I know firsthand how hard it is for the Government to come up with a balanced check book. But education must be our No. 1 priority. It is with me. It is for parents and students who balance their own check book every day and every semester. It should be a priority for this Congress.

Mr. President, college is no longer a luxury. It is a necessity just to stay competitive in the job market. It is a dream come true for parents of first generation college students to see their children walk across the stage. I believe we should give people the chance to pursue their dream through earned opportunities. To rob them of this opportunity is robbing America of its future.

I hope every member of the Senate will support Senator KENNEDY's amendment to strike the student loan provisions from this bill. It is an important investment to this Nation's students and it is important to America's economic future.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, first I want to thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his great leadership on preserving student aid. He has moved quickly at every opportunity to stick up for students and parents, and his amendment today is sorely needed.

Mr. President, student aid has a proud history in this country. Much of my generation went to college on the GI bill. Then we passed the Higher Education Act of 1965, helping boost college attendance to today's levels. Of the 13 million students in college today, half of them receive Federal grants and loans under that Act.

Economically, budgetary, morally, this bipartisan policy of making student aid a priority has been right. Economic analysis shows that we have benefited 8 for 1 on our GI bill investment. Recent analysis shows that the investment in education is twice as productive as other workplace investments. And the lower income people in our society should not be shut out of an affordable college education. We need to make every effort every year to make sure that our higher education assistance policy builds our country rather than dividing it.

But Republicans have come this year with the proposition to students that everyone has to help balance the budget. Students should take some time in the library and study this bill. Everyone does not pay. Students—particularly low-income students—are asked to pay $10.8 billion more. But others—particularly those who can pay for college out of their pockets—get new tax breaks. These tax breaks and increased spending in other parts of the budget are much larger than the student loan cuts. In other words, this Congress could easily choose not to make students pay more, but the Republican leadership thinks it is more important to give more to certain constituencies before the next election, all the while crying balancing budget.

Let me be specific about how Congress could avoid cutting student aid in this bill:

First, we could lower the brand new tax break in this so-called budget-balancing bill from $245 billion to $235 billion.

Second, we could trim back the proposed defense increase of over $50 billion.

Third, we could refuse to provide a new tax break for corporations currently paying the minimum allowed, which is what is offered in this amendment.

The fact is, all of these alternatives—and many others—are unacceptable to the Republicans that wrote this budget because student aid was a much lower priority to them than new tax breaks.

Mr. President, these student aid provisions are shameful. If students and parents knew what was in this bill, they would think we had gone off the deep end. This is not the way we balance the budget, it is the way we pander for the next election and put the budget out of balance in the long run. I urge my colleagues to support the Kennedy amendment to maintain our investment in education.

Mr. AKAKA Mr. President, I rise to express my deep concern about cuts in education programs included in the reconciliation bill.

The bill before us cuts $10.8 billion from the student loan program. These proposals include a 1 percent fee hike in PLUS loans, elimination of the grace period for recent graduates, the imposition of a 20 percent cap on direct student loan volume, and an .85 percent school tax based on the institution's student loan volume. If you wanted to undermine deliberately higher education, it would be difficult to come up with a more destructive list of proposals. Plain and simple, these education cuts are irresponsible.

Mr. President, the 1 percent fee hike for PLUS loans is regressive and could add $5,000 to a family's indebtedness for a college education. This may not mean much, but to a family struggling to make it on $25,000 a year, it could deprive a student of a college education. Moreover, this measure discriminates against families who haven't achieved the dream of home ownership, and who cannot take out home equity loans to finance college.

Eliminating the grace period for recent graduates is similarly ill-conceived. This provision would saddle graduates with additional financial burden at the most critical time in their careers. It could force graduates to settle for lower paying, less desirable jobs immediately upon graduation rather than providing them a reasonable opportunity to secure higher paying employment that better matches their skills and desires.

The proposal to cap the direct loan program at 20 percent of the total student loan volume is misguided in three respects. First and foremost, it would discourage additional schools from participating in the program and reduce the opportunities for thousands of economically disadvantaged students who would not be able to qualify for guaranteed loans.

Second, the 20 percent cap will ultimately drain the Treasury of billions of dollars because reinsurance fees and other subsidies will be paid to banks, secondary markets, and guaranty agencies. Direct loans have been a money saver because they cut out the middleman, reduce administrative overhead, and increase accessibility. Only the banks and other financial institutions stand to profit from the changes in this bill.

Third, capping direct loans will effectively limit one of the most important side benefits of the program—providing competition to the banks. Without the direct loan program, the lending industry would be free to raise interest rates on their own student loan instruments, increasing borrowing costs to those who choose, or are forced to choose, private lending sources. This in turn is likely to lead to additional defaults, the costs of which will be borne by the taxpayer. I would be curious to learn how proponents of free enterprise explain this clearly anticompetitive initiative.

Mr. President, the last major GOP education initiative is the proposed 0.85 percent tax on schools. Like the other proposals, this is a regressive inititaive that will discourage schools from participating in the direct loan program, force them to pass on the costs to students through increased tuition, and require them to tap into their already dwindling student financial aid budgets. Again, as with the other initiatives, this provision will disproportionately impact students from low- and middle-income families. It is ironic that as Republicans trumpet a $245 billion package of tax cuts that largely favor wealthier Americans, they seek to impose an indirect tax on students and families who can least afford it.

Mr. President, these are some of the reasons why I oppose the education provisions contained in this measure. When added to the proposed wholesale reductions in discretionary education programs—from Head Start to Goals 2000, to campus-based aid—they constitute a plan to reduce access to quality education and harm our ability to compete in an increasingly sophisticated international marketplace.

Reducing investment in education, which is already inadequate, will inevitably limit economic growth and undermine the standard of living of middle-class Americans in the 21st century. And it will close the window of opportunity for the economically disadvantaged among us who are pursuing the American dream.

Mr. President, reducing our commitment to an educated, skilled work force in the name of deficit reduction is shortsighted and terribly misguided. As this country struggles to find its way in a global marketplace dominated by cheap foreign labor and high technology, withdrawing our investment in education amounts to economic suicide.

This budget proves that Republicans are more committed to protecting the interests of the haves than in accommodating the aspirations of the vast majority of Americans who want only to improve the quality of their lives through hard work and education. Again, I believe this is a pennywise, pound-foolish approach that is shortsighted, mean spirited, and will cost the taxpayer money in the long run.

If this budget is implemented, students of modest means may have to forgo a college education; others who are fortunate enough to achieve their baccalaureates may have to forgo their dreams of pursuing graduate study. And those students who leave college in the future will be saddled with huge debt burdens at a time when they are least likely to be able to afford payments.

The proposals contained in this measure, in concert with the proposed reductions in fiscal year 1996 education appropriations measure, will ensure that our future work force is less educated, less productive, and less well off. This in turn will reduce the Nation's tax base, placing further upward pressure on the deficit—exactly the opposite effect from the stated purpose of this budget plan.

This wholesale disinvestment in our most important resource, our young people, is not merely shortsighted, it is blind. Blind to the imperatives of the new global marketplace, blind to the effect that cuts in education will have on our ability to prosper in an increasingly complex world, and blind to the effect it will have on our deficit.

But competitiveness, economic viability, and individual opportunity will not be the only victims of the proposed cutbacks in education. Our sense of civil community, of history, of tolerance, the ability to conduct informed, rational discourse—these are also the potential victims of this harsh and ill-conceived budget plan.

For education is not just about making enough to feed the kids or to buy a new car or to own a home—it is also about preparing ourselves to carry out the responsibilities of citizenship in the world's oldest republic.

Mr. President, no sane nation embraces ignorance. Yet, this is what the proposed resolution would have us do. I therefore urge my colleagues to reject this war on knowledge by opposing the education proposals contained in this measure that threaten our future.

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time do we have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has 14 minutes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I am prepared to yield our time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I was just going to yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Washington, and then we go with your side.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Fine.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Will the Senator yield?

Could I ask the Senator from Michigan how much time will be yielded to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ABRAHAM. The remainder of our time.

Mr. WELLSTONE. OK. Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mrs. MURRAY. Thank you, Mr. President.

I thank my colleague from Massachusetts for this amendment.

As I sit here and listen to this debate today, I cannot help but wonder how many of our colleagues depended upon financial aid to advance their education and build the foundation for their careers. This is a highly educated body. And judging from the vast array of degrees that are conferred upon my colleagues, I would have guessed that many were dependent upon Federal assistance to finish their schooling.

However, the proposal to eliminate $10.8 billion in student loans forces me to question whether any of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle ever relied on financial aid to get an education. I can tell you I would not be here today without Federal assistance that made my college education possible.

I will also tell you that working families will be the hardest hit by this gutting of our student loan program. These middle-income families often do not qualify for full scholarships and cannot afford to pay full tuition, particularly when $20,000 a year for tuition is today's norm in higher education. Why sacrifice our Nation's future by limiting educational opportunities for young people?

This bill could have targeted the student loan industry, but instead 63 percent of the bill's student loan cuts fall directly on students and their parents. Take for example the increased rates on PLUS loans that are taken out by parents. I can tell you as a parent of two children entering the post-secondary world, I am concerned that families across this land will find these new loans out of reach. This aid is particularly important to those families without enough equity in their homes to take out a tax-deductible home equity loan.

Mr. President, I am extremely concerned with the proposal to eliminate a small, but very important, element to those entering our work force. All of us realize the difficult challenges facing today's college graduate. The limited prospects of employment, coupled with financial independence, on top of an already mounting educational debt put many of our graduates today in fiscal hardship before they are ever able to contribute back to our society.

To help these individuals during this difficult time, we have provided a 6-month grace period on their loan once they finish school. This is not loan forgiveness. It does not lead to increased deficits or defaults. It simply provides a new college graduate a few months to find a job and begin the process of becoming a contributing member of our society.

Some say this is a minor provision, appreciated by few students. I will tell you, at the University of Washington, in Seattle alone, 12,000 students will feel the impact of this grace period. It means $2.4 million to those students.

Finally, Mr. President, let us discuss a program that is working. The direct loan program is producing enormous benefits for all. In a recent survey, 112 campuses using the direct lending program were polled, and 90 percent reported satisfaction with the program.

During this academic year more than 1,350 schools are making borrowing easier for their students through the direct loan program. It is praised by students and college presidents alike for its speed, efficiency, and lack of bureaucracy. Why are we capping this success at 20 percent of total loan volume when we know it works? Let us give direct lending a chance to work for our schools and its students.

Mr. President, these cuts in our student loan programs are not economic savings. They are only going to shortchange our country's future. When we sacrifice our next work force for the sake of quick economic savings, we all mortgage our economic prosperity. The cuts in student loans are a direct impact to every single working family who wants to know that their child will be able to go on to college in this country that we are so proud of.

Mr. President, I yield back my time to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. I yield the remainder of our time to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank my colleague from Michigan for yielding.

Mr. President, I find that the debate that is currently going on on the floor interesting but not balanced. And I say that because, while we talk about our children and the great compassion that I think this Senate and this Congress has always demonstrated toward young people in need, there is another side to the story that must be told if we are to speak of balance.

There is no question that we want as many of our young people as well educated as they can possibly become. We should encourage that kind of an environment. Clearly, the student loan program that is embodied within this package today will continue to educate as many as are currently being educated with the flexibility of growth to include more. While it changes the parameters of the obligation, it would be grossly unfair for anybody to portray that we are stepping away from or stepping back from our commitment to disadvantaged young people today seeking higher education.

What is glaringly absent from the debate on the other side is the rest of the story. I will tell you that having an education, having a degree in an economy that does not create a job and hire you is the greatest of tragedies.

The budget that we are seeking to bring about, in promises kept to the American people, is a budget in balance, and there is not an economist in this country today that will disagree that a budget imbalance causes the economy of this country to be more productive, more job creating, having the ability to pay higher wages and to hire the master's degrees and the doctorate degrees that oftentimes today go wanting and in their search for a job cannot find themselves able to pay the student loan.

The future of our children, Mr. President, and our grandchildren does not depend on a student loan. It depends on the economy of this country and the vitality of that economy that produces the student loans that creates the jobs that offers the future and the opportunity.

Most economists agree today that our current debt structure creates a 2-percent drag on our economy, and that 2-percent drag costs us hundreds of thousands of high-paying jobs annually as we work to increasingly compete in a world marketplace.

I find it absolutely amazing that this President will argue a $200 billion deficit and a debt that heads toward $5 trillion and says that that is growth and that is opportunity and that is going to create a productive economy.

Let me tell you what that kind of $200 billion deficit does to the average child of today, the college student of tomorrow, the job seeker in the future.

The average child today will pay $5,000 additional taxes over their lifetime with that $200 billion deficit. The Clinton budget projects deficits of that range out through the year 2000, and that alone adds up to an additional tax burden of $40,000 in the lifetime of that child. Those are statistics from the National Taxpayers Union.

Mr. President, in my opinion, that is the future. This Senator is going to vote for a dynamic program of student aid, but he is not going to deny that student the same opportunity that that student's parents had in their lifetime: to seek a better life, to have a job, to be productive, to be creative. That is our reality, and that is what we promise the American people.

So I suggest to all of us today that this really is a debate about the child and the child's future and his or her opportunity to be productive, to have a rewarding experience in their life, because just like the security of Medicare and just like the security of Social Security, they are all bound inextricably to the productivity of an economy. Not debt, not layoffs, not a sluggish economy that is not able to get up to speed and to be competitive in a world marketplace.

I am absolutely amazed that we cannot strike that balance or that we have to struggle so hard to argue that a balanced budget makes sense. Somehow this deficit syndrome that the President has caught himself in and is unable to escape—while he argued yesterday, "Look at the productivity, look what I have done," what he failed to say, "In the outyears, I am going to have to ask the American people for another large tax increase, because while my tax increase of a year ago has forced the deficit down, the Government has not changed its spending habits. And every program that I offer in my budget," i.e., the President, "I want more spending and more Government and more growth in the most nonproductive sector of our society."

The American people last November said it very clearly. They said, "Sorry, Mr. President, you're wrong; you've got to change and our Government has to change and we have to make sense of something, because we sense our vitality is slipping away, our ability to make a living is slipping away."

I do not dispute what the other side is saying about the less ability of the American family to pay for their child's education, but have they ever stopped to ask why there is less ability, why can the family of today not provide as much for the child as the family of 20 or 30 years ago? There is an obvious reason. They cannot provide the lifestyle. The economy has been dragged down by a debt structure and a Government that consumes ever greater a proportion of the gross national product of our country in the most nonproductive of ways.

I do not dispute the need for Government, but I do dispute its size, I do dispute the debt, I do dispute the deficit, because economic common sense says, and most economists agree, that if this Government can live within its means, our economy will be a much more productive place, I say to my fellow Senators, and we all know what that means. That is opportunity, that is jobs, that is productivity, that is the average family being able to care for their children and having the pride to say to their children, "You are going to have a better life; you are going to have greater opportunity; we want you to have that college degree, and we can assist you in doing so because our lives are better lives."

That is the issue at hand. It is the debt. It is the question of deficit. It is the drag on the economy and the nonproductive way that we have found ourselves increasingly caught up in, unable to provide those kinds of opportunities.

I applaud what this side is attempting to do in response to the American people and future generations to come.

You see, Mr. President, I have parents—like we all do—who grew up in the Depression days, and they tell me about the phenomenal difficulties and the attitudes that for a generation that experience provoked on the American scene; that somehow they thought less of themselves and less of their ability to produce because of the phenomenal negative economic experience that that generation went through.

Can we assume that that could never occur again? Well, we should not, and that is what Republicans and Americans are doing today in their effort to produce a balanced budget to control the growth of Government and say to future generations, "We heard you and we provided an economy that will give you the opportunity you seek."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I am delighted to join my colleague from Massachusetts in supporting this amendment. As I listen to some of the rhetoric on the floor, I really feel like this is Alice in Wonderland out here. This is not a debate about whether we are going to reduce the deficit or balance the budget. The Republicans keep coming back and saying, "By God, the only way we are going to deal with the deficit and the budget is to do these things."

The choice here is how we are going to balance the budget. They want to spend more money on B-2 bombers. They want to continue the Market Promotion Program. They want to take a $5 million asset on a trust fund and give people a $1.7 million tax break. It is a question of how we are doing it.

What we all understand is, we should not be doing it at the expense of students and at the expense of the colleges and universities that have entered into the Direct Loan Program so that you can put more money back into the pockets of the lending institutions. It just does not make sense.

The Senator from Idaho stands up and says, "We are going to take a lesser amount of money, but we are still going to be able to give you the same amount of education." I wish he had been there yesterday when the chancellor of the University of Massachusetts and the folks from Lowell, MA, and New Bedford and Fall River, which have 15 percent unemployment, working class people came in and said to me, "Senator, if these cuts go through, our kids are going to drop out of school." And they are going to drop out of school because they are going to have $5,000 of additional costs in interest on the PLUS loan that is going to be $700 to $2,500 of debt because they eliminate the interest subsidy on the 6-month grace period. They are going to have a transfer tax on colleges and universities participating in the student loan program, and they are going to end, for half the universities, direct participation.

Mr. President, those kids cannot go to school paying that additional money. But they are giving the money to people earning more than $300,000, and to all of these other interests. They are continuing additional defense spending. The question is how we will balance the budget. It should not be done on the backs of the future generation in education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, has leader time been reserved?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that I may use a portion of that leader time without it being charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF WAR CRIMES

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today's Washington Post reveals shocking news about what happened to the men of Srebrenica after this so-called safe area fell to Bosnian Serb forces in July. Twelve thousand men from this U.N.-designated safe area tired to flee to Bosnian Government-held territory and more than half were brutally butchered by forces under the command of Gen. Ratko Mladic.

Yesterday's Christian Science Monitor reported that Serb officers—from Serbia—actively participated in the massacre of Moslems from Srebrenica.

No doubt about it, General Mladic and his forces are directly responsible for these war crimes. But, these reports beg the question: What was the role of the Yugoslav Army in this attack on Srebrenica and the subsequent massacre of Moslems. And more importantly, what was Slobodan Milosevic's role in these savage war crimes?

Reportedly Mladic is often in Belgrade—where he coordinates with senior Serb officers, including the Chief of Staff of the Yugoslav Army. The Yugoslav Army has continued to actively assist Bosnian Serb forces. And Bosnian Serb and Serb air defenses are integrated.

The bottom line is that the Congress—and the American people—need to hear what the administration knows about the relationship between Bosnian Serb forces and the Yugoslav Army, and the relationship between Mladic and Milosevic. Have we been told everything the administration knows about Milosevic's possible culpability in this hideous war crime?

Frankly, I am highly skeptical that the buck stops at General Mladic. In any event, these questions need to be answered by the administration now.

Next week, the proximity talks will begin in Dayton and Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic will attend. We need to know whether we are rolling out the red carpet for a war criminal. We need to know who the administration is dealing with—the butcher of the Balkans or the peacemaker of the Balkans?

Furthermore, the President should publicly commit his administration to ensuring that these war crimes will not be swept under the rug as part of the price of peace settlement. If Milosevic is responsible for war crimes, he should be held accountable—even if this complicates the peace negotiations.

Mr. President, if the administration fails to effectively address the matter of war crimes in the former Yugoslavia, the Congress will. The fiscal year 1996 foreign operations bill includes an amendment I offered on the Senate floor which would prohibit bilateral assistance to any country that provides sanctuary to individuals indicted by the U.N. War Crimes Tribunal on Yugoslavia. It also instructs U.S. representatives in multilateral institutions to vote against aid to any country that provides sanctuary to indicted war criminals.

The United States is the leader of the free world—this requires not only political, but moral leadership. We cannot repeat the United Nations' grievous error of looking the other way when confronted with enormous crimes against humanity.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have 30 seconds to thank the majority leader for his statement.

Mr. DOLE. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thank the majority leader for his statement made on these war crimes, these atrocities. I do not believe that those who committed these crimes should be able to get away with it. I think it would be a terrible mistake for the world.

I appreciate the power of what the majority leader says. I very much appreciate his focus on the war crimes.

THE BALANCED BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1995

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. When I heard what my colleague from Idaho said, I could not be in more profound disagreement. The debate is not on a balanced budget, deficit reduction; it is on a Minnesota standard of fairness. This agenda here is not connected to the reality of the lives of people that we represent back in our States: "Senator, I am a student at Moorhead State, I work three minimum-wage jobs. The college years are not the best years of my life."

"Senator, I am a nontraditional student. I am older than you and I lost my job; I am going back to school, and I do not have much money. If you cut my financial aid, I will not be able to get back on my own two feet."

"Senator, I am a single mother, and I am going back to school, and I have two small children. If you cut my financial aid, I will not be able to move from welfare to workfare."

I hear it in community colleges; I hear it in public universities; I hear it in private schools. I asked my colleagues, I say to my colleague from Massachusetts, during markup, "Have you held town meetings in the campuses? Do you know what the consequences of what you are doing here in the Senate will be for students in this country?"

Mr. President, this is outrageous.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the text of a petition from 515 students at Inver Hills Community College and Lakewood Community College.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PETITION FOR SAVING OUR STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM

Students are concerned about federal financial aid cuts Congress proposes to higher education. If these cuts are made, they will affect my ability to go to college and find a living wage job. Please help me continue to have an education that is affordable and accessible. The economic security of our nation depends upon a well-educated work force. America's future rests in your hands.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I simply say it loud and clear, and I will shout it from the mountaintop. I only have probably 30 seconds left. If you want to do deficit reduction, cut the subsidies for the pharmaceutical companies, cut the subsidies for the oil companies, cut the subsidies for the insurance companies, cut the subsidies for the tobacco companies; do not spend more money on stealth bombers and Trident and all of the rest, and do not have tax cuts that disproportionately go to the wealthiest people.

Do not do deficit reduction by denying all too many young people—and not-so-young people because many of our students are older—their opportunity for a higher education. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of the Kennedy amendment. It speaks to basic economic justice. I hope 100 Senators vote for it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has 5 minutes 12 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield myself 4 minutes, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I want to repeat what I mentioned at the outset, that our amendment is budget neutral. We have been asked about that.

Mr. President, in the final few moments, I have been amazed by the silence of our Republican friends in defending an indefensible policy. Silence in defending a policy that will put a stranglehold on the sons and daughters of working families trying to achieve a better education. The most that was said in defense of this indefensible policy, Mr. President, by one Member of the Republicans, is that this proposal is "changing the parameters of the obligation." Let me tell every working family in my State and across the country the truth. This Republican proposal is going to mean more dollars out of your pocket and more obligations on the students of this country.

In the final breath, Mr. President, there is an extraordinary reliance by our Republican friends on raising the revenues. In their proposal, they put a tax—described by the majority of the Republicans as a "fee"—on every educational institution in this country. They would mandate a tax on every educational institution. The cruelest part of all is that the amount of that tax increases as they provide more and more assistance to the neediest students that go to those schools. The institutional tax goes in the opposite direction of every educational policy that we have made in the last 30 years. It requires more and more payment by the sons and daughters of working families and the neediest families. That is just an extraordinary admission, Mr. President, of a bankrupt effort by our Republican friends by taxing these working families.

In the Republican proposal, working families are going to have to pay more out of their hard-earned income because of the tax increase in the EITC. Then, the same working families are going to pay more out of scarce resources for the copays and the deductibles we will have to have.

Because of reductions in Medicaid, these working families are going to pay even more to provide health care coverage for their children.

For what reason? To give a tax break for the wealthiest individuals and the wealthiest corporations. That is what this is all about. They are taking the money out of the pockets of the neediest families in this country and transferring it to the wealthiest individuals. That is the parameter of the obligation that our Republican friends refer to when they try to justify their position.

Mr. President, this bill and these cuts are too harsh and too extreme. But, in addition to their cold heart, Republicans are now getting cold feet. The verdict of the American people is coming in.

Republicans are being found guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of hurting senior citizens on Medicare; guilty of hurting helpless elderly patients in nursing homes; guilty of punishing innocent children on welfare; guilty of closing college doors to the sons and daughters of working families; guilty of pandering to polluters and endangering the environment; guilty of massive giveaways to powerful special interest groups; guilty of taxing low-income workers; guilty of taxing hard-pressed college students to give tax breaks to millionaires.

Whatever became of the antitax Republicans? I say shame, shame on the Republican Party for using their majority power to hurt the vast majority of Americans. This bill will be dead on arrival at the White House, and we ought to bury it right here in the U.S. Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. I hope we have an opportunity to vote on this amendment soon.

What is the Chair's understanding about when we will be able to have a disposition of this amendment?

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, if I could answer briefly the Senator's question. It is a good one.

We have been trying to work on this since yesterday afternoon. It appears we are very close to agreement that allows us to start voting up or down on these amendments sometime early this afternoon and very late into the evening.

Mr. KENNEDY. Would the Senator yield half a minute on the bill?

Mr. EXON. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have heard that my Republican colleagues are trying to doctor up some different proposal on student loan cuts. We have had months to change the proposal. I hope we will support this amendment that represents the best judgment of parents, educators, and working families.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his excellent presentation, and I agree with his remarks. I agree with his conclusion. I hope we can move in an expeditious fashion.

I yield 8 minutes off the bill to my colleague from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have been puzzled here for nearly a day and a half because we have some very important decisions to make in the U.S. Senate, one of which deals with Medicare, and we are not voting on them.

Reconciliation is a process that provides us 20 hours. We offered an amendment that does not take great skill to read. It does not take many staff people to read it. It is very simple.

It says, "Let's reduce this tax cut for the wealthy and use the savings to reduce the cut on Medicare for the elderly." That is a very simple proposition.

It has been almost 30 hours since it was offered yesterday on the floor of the Senate, and no vote. Why no vote? Is it hard to understand? Are people still reviewing this? No, that is not why. What we have is a stall.

I understand we may be getting close to an agreement, and I hope we are, because if we are not, we are going to start reading this legislation—maybe two or three times. It is 1,949 pages, given us Tuesday night to come to the floor Wednesday morning.

Most people here do not have the foggiest notion of what is in it. Most of us have some suspicion about what is in it. Most of us believe that this, handed to the wealthier families in America, will provoke significant smiles because they will find some awfully good news in here for their families. Drive a Mercedes Benz, make half a million a year, there is awfully good news in here for you.

If you are an elderly person, dependent on Medicare or a poor person on Medicaid or a middle-income family trying to send your kids to school, or a poor mother who has a child in Head Start, the news here is pretty grim. It says we cannot afford you. It says you better tighten your belt because this is coming your way, and this is not good news for you at all.

I think some of the pieces of the puzzle are starting to come into focus about who is fighting for whom. Whose side are you on?

Here are a couple pieces of that puzzle. This was in the paper yesterday. One of the new Republicans over in the House of Representatives says "the Democrats once again have it all wrong when they claim the GOP's proposed $500 tax credit for families earning up to $200,000 is a tax cut for the rich." He says those folks are lower middle class.

> Heineman, former Raleigh Police Chief, told the Raleigh News and Observer that his salary of $133,000 plus $50,000 a year in police pensions "does not make me rich. It does not make me middle class. In my opinion that makes me lower middle class."

This new Republican, this fellow that has new ideas and came with a notion of change says, "When I see someone who is making anywhere from $300,000 to $750,000 a year, that's middle class." He said, "When I see anyone above that, that's upper middle class." Oh, really? These are the new ideas? Middle class at $750,000 a year? Now I can understand why they tell us their tax cut is aimed at the middle class. Now it is clear to me. I understand how these pieces to the puzzle start to fit.

Another big piece—in fact, it is the centerpiece for this puzzle in this morning's newspaper—the Speaker of the House, speaking candidly to Blue Cross Blue Shield, an insurance company, says this in talking about Medicare:

> Now let me talk about Medicare . . . we don't get rid of it in round one because we don't think that would be politically smart.

Let me say that again. The Speaker of the House says, and these are people who say, "We love Medicare; we want to save Medicare."

> We don't get rid of it in round one because we don't think that would be politically smart and we don't think that's the right way to go through a transition. But we believe it's going to wither on the vine because we think people are going to voluntarily leave it.

Now, put these pieces into the puzzle and see if you do not start getting the message. These are people who are going to save Medicare? No, I do not think so.

Round one. They do not get rid of it in round one. But guess what? This is a 10 rounder, and by the end of this match they plan on getting rid of Medicare. This is all about the middle class—yes, their middle class—somebody making $750,000 a year.

I said, good news and bad news around here. I was watching Star Wars the other night with my children. I have not seen that for a long time. Does anyone remember the characters in Star Wars, R2–D2 and C3–PO? I was thinking, if children in this society had names with numbers maybe they would do better; right?

Let me give some numbers that do well. I said that a lot of folks do not do well in this. A lot of kids do not do well. Fifty-five thousand kids, all of whom have names, will no longer be in Head Start because the majority cannot afford them in the Head Start program. A kid by the name of Tim or Martha or Tom, they get bad news, no Head Start program.

But if you had an initial like a B–2 or an F–15 or a UH–60 Blackhawk—go down this list. I do not have time. But this is a list, all of which represent spending add-ons; in other words, money that the Defense Department did not ask for, for helicopters, amphibious ships, fighters, bombers, star wars, and on and on and on that the Defense Department said they did not want, they did not need, and they did not order.

Guess what? The conservatives say, "We insist you buy it because we got the money to pay for it." And then they bring 2,000 pages out here to the floor and say, "We are sorry. We are broke. You are poor? You are young? Out of luck."

So we say to them on Medicare, on our first amendment, offered nearly 30 hours ago, how about establishing priorities here? How about at least forgetting the tax cut notion you got for the wealthiest Americans and using some of that money to provide Medicare for the elderly? Do you know what, 30 hours later we cannot get a vote. Why can we not get a vote? Is it because they cannot understand the amendment? No. It is because they are stalling. They do not want to vote on the amendment.

One way or another, somehow we are going to vote on this amendment. We might stand here for 6 days, but we are going to vote on this amendment, and we are going to vote on the education amendment, and we are going to vote on the next amendment which is fiscal responsibility, which says do not give a tax cut until we have a balanced budget.

I am a little disappointed about what has been going on the last 30 hours. I can understand a shuffle when I see it. I can understand a stall when I see it. But nobody ought to claim to us they do not understand this issue. After 30 hours you would think everybody understands it well enough to have a vote.

So, it is 10 minutes to 1. How about a vote at 1 o'clock? Why do you not give the elderly in this country an opportunity? Express yourselves and give us an opportunity to express ourselves about tax cuts for the rich and Medicare cuts for the rest? Let us decide if we are going to have a vote soon.

If we are near an agreement, I say fine. I want us to have an agreement and get through this. But I say, at the end stage of this process, that I happen to know and all of you in this room know what is really at work. We have a Medicare amendment on the floor. The Speaker of the House gives a speech to Blue Cross/Blue Shield. He says he wants to save Medicare. And here is what he says in his speech. "We don't get rid of it in round one because we don't think that would be politically smart."

We understand what that means about round two. That is why this is important. That is why there is some passion in this debate, about a lot of folks who have reached their senior status in life and fear they are going to get sick and they are not going to have the money to deal with that illness. This is important.

Mr. President, I ask for 1 additional minute.

Mr. EXON. I am sorry. Another 30 seconds. I am trying to conserve time on this side.

Mr. DORGAN. I yield the floor to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I will yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I listened very carefully to the very distinguished Senator from North Dakota. What is the date of that speech the Speaker made when he said that this is only round one to get rid of Medicare?

Mr. DORGAN. The speech apparently was given the other night, October 24.

Mr. SARBANES. On the same day, October 24, Senator DOLE made a speech. Listen to this. "I was there, fighting the fight, voting against Medicare—1 of 12—because we knew it wouldn't work in 1965."

So you have the Republican leader in the Senate and the Republican leader in the House, both of whom have been trying to portray themselves as helping Medicare, now bragging about the fact that they are against Medicare or that this is only the first round in getting rid of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise the Senator 30 seconds has expired.

The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, as I understand it we are now prepared to go to the next item that will be offered by the Senator from Arkansas with 30 minutes equally divided; is that correct?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Yes. We are prepared to do that.

Mr. EXON. So I hope the Chair could recognize the Senator from Arkansas, following 1½ minutes that I would like to yield at this time to the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DEWINE). The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I have repeatedly said on the Senate floor that balancing the Federal budget is so important we need to set our partisan differences aside.

Unfortunately, balancing the budget was the most serious problem facing our country—until today.

The American people are fed up with Washington—and how can you blame them.

The single working mother who is holding two jobs to take care of her children should expect nothing less than having the Federal Government pay its own bills.

Vermonters must balance their checkbooks each month, why should the Government that they send their taxes to not be held to the same accountability.

Mr. President, Republicans laud this budget reconciliation bill that we are debating today as the solution to the deficit problem.

Well, this bill may balance the budget but the wake it leaves behind threatens to irreparably divide our country. This bill is a cruel prank on hard working Americans who have asked Congress to get our budget in order.

The Republican leadership has answered the call to balance the budget with a plan that radically redistributes the wealth of our country.

Playing on the desires of hard working Americans, the Republican leadership has seized the opportunity to protect the wealthiest in our country.

This plan balances the budget on the backs of the people who are working the longest hours, in the lowest paying jobs.

Ironically, as these Americans have shouted out the loudest about getting our fiscal books in order, they will be the ones who feel the pain the most.

Under the guise of saving Americans from the burden of debt, the Republican leadership has devastated programs that help hard working men and women realize the American dream of economic opportunity.

We are told that in order to save programs, we must first kill them so that 7 years from now they will emerge solvent and robust.

It is a leap of faith that I cannot make, much to my embarrassment, because my distinguished colleagues in the majority have been telling us what a bold and courageous moment in time that they are seizing.

They are the self appointed saviors out to rescue us from the trillions of dollars of debt accrued during the Reagan-Bush administrations. They never mention that latter part—no doubt an oversight—and in the press of time, it is perfectly understandable why the subject never arises.

A case in point is education. This bill makes short-sighted cuts in education. It cuts student loan programs by $10 billion over the next 7 years.

Students will be hit with 70 percent of these cuts—increasing the costs to the 20,000 Vermonters receiving higher education and their families by at least $5,800 over the life of a student loan.

Congress should be working to make education more affordable—not less.

These additional financial burdens will discourage many students from continuing their education after high school.

The Contract With America has sealed the fate of the next generation of Americans. They may never have the chance of post high school training or a college education—the key to a better paying job.

Mr. President, the list of programs that the Republican leadership are slashing under the thin guise of reform is long.

This bill is a back door version of the New Federalism, the short-lived brainchild that was the predecessor of the Contract With America. Congress piles up the rhetoric while dumping the tough decisions on the States.

Governors are increasingly wary of this, because the cost for maintaining any of these programs will rest squarely on the local taxpayers.

We know that Medicaid is a life-line to provide essential health care to low-income pregnant women, children, the disabled, and the elderly.

It is also the safety net that rescues middle-class families when a factory closes down and the jobs that are available do not provide health insurance.

It spares middle-class families from choosing between nursing home care for a parent or financing the college education of a son or daughter.

I think we all agree that the Medicaid reform proposal before us turns the program over to the States, at greatly reduced funding levels.

Despite all the disclaimers from its supporters, I remain unconvinced that it is anything more than a recurrence of policies that once made poor farms and orphanages the sanctuaries for low-income children and families in America.

I agree that States should have more flexibility, but not at the cost of our national responsibility. Our States will find themselves hundreds of millions of dollars short of funds to provide necessary health care over the next 7 years.

Vermont already has flexibility through the Federal waiver process.

Vermont's plan continues the Federal/State partnership nature of Medicaid and enables Vermont to cover 15,000 more of the State's growing number of uninsured.

This bill will nullify Vermont's initiatives to administer the program more economically.

The budgetary pressure on States to make cuts in eligibility and benefits will be very strong. On average, States will lose 30 percent of their Federal Medicaid payments by the year 2002.

There is no provision in this bill that would provide Vermont, or any State, with additional resources in times of economic downturn or recession when the Medicaid rolls have historically increased.

Vermont will lose 10 percent on average over the next 7 years and cuts are backloaded so that Vermont will lose 27 percent in the year 2002.

This cut is estimated to reduce Federal Medicaid payments to Vermont by $205 million over the next 7 years.

If the sharp reductions in Federal Medicaid funding cannot be offset by managed care savings or cuts in payments to providers, States will have to cut benefits or severely limit the number of people eligible unless they are willing to pay a much larger share of the cost of the program with State funds.

Competition among States may contribute to the pressure to restrict eligibility.

Without Federal standards, many predict a race to the bottom where no State wants to be seen as providing broader coverage or more generous benefits than its neighbors.

While there was much talk about this bill partially retaining an entitlement for low-income pregnant women, children, and the disabled, the truth is that the bill fully follows through on the Contract With America proposal to provide no assurance to any low-income American that they will get the health care they need.

This fact was certified by the Congressional Budget Office earlier this week.

The plan also repeals requirements that now protect nursing home residents from being restrained, drugged, or forced to live with substandard care in disreputable homes.

It replaces these safeguards with 50 separate State regulations with no standard minimum requirements.

I have been pleading for Congress and the President to join in bipartisan negotiations on balancing the budget without jeopardizing the success of our health programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I send a motion to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] moves to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The motion is as follows:

MOTION TO COMMIT WITH INSTRUCTIONS

Mr. President, I move to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report the bill back to the Senate within 3 days (not to include any day the Senate is not in session) making changes in legislation within that Committee's jurisdiction to delay the effectiveness of any revenue reductions until the first fiscal year in which outlays no longer exceed revenues.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, this is very simple and straightforward. The Members of this body should vote for this on a purely intellectual basis, without regard for partisanship. That is hard for me to say, and I know it is hard for people around here to respond to that kind of request. But it simply says: Do not cut taxes until you balance the budget.

I can remember not too many months ago when that idea had great credence in this body, on both sides of the aisle. I had even hoped at one time that the chairman of the Budget Committee who crafted this whole thing, Senator DOMENICI, would join me, today, with this amendment saying we are not going to cut taxes until we balance the budget. Here is what Senator DOMENICI said on May 29, this year, just a few months ago.

"We are working through some very, very tough terrain," he said, acknowledging that most battles lie ahead. "But I am convinced that most people share our view that we must balance the budget first before we cut taxes."

Here is a chart for anybody who chooses to look at this thing economically and sensibly. Here it is. You cut taxes in accordance with $245 billion, the figure that is bandied about here, and if you cut taxes by $245 billion over the next 7 years you add $293 billion to the national debt and our children and grandchildren will pay interest on that $293 billion as far as you can see.

I do not want to mix Social Security in this, but when you add this $300 billion, also bear in mind there are about $656 or $660 billion in Social Security surpluses that are going to be used. To say we are going to have a balanced budget when we are using Social Security surpluses, when we are $78 billion short even by the Republicans' own numbers, it is a scam to lead the American people to believe that we are going to have a balanced budget. If we never have another deficit after 2002, our grandchildren and great-grandchildren are going to pay interest on this tax cut.

You know, the reconciliation bill provides $5,600 per year—listen to this—$5,600 per year in tax cuts for the wealthiest 1 percent of the people in this country, and the bottom 50 percent wind up with less money than they had before this reconciliation bill passes.

What does that say about the values of the U.S. Congress, about their attitude—not toward people with stocks who get dividends and interest, but about working people who sweat and toil every day to keep this Nation going, who get nothing out of this except increases, lowered standard of living?

Do you know something else? This bill stands squarely on the shoulders of 50 brave Democrats who, in August 1993, passed a reconciliation bill. I want you to think about this. If it were not for 50 brave Senators who stood on their hind feet and voted to raise taxes on the wealthy and to cut spending accordingly, the Republicans would be faced with raising another $1.081 trillion to balance the budget.

The senior Senator from Texas, a candidate for the Presidency, said we want all of those people in the back of the wagon to get out and help the rest of us pull. They were. Every single Republican in the Senate was in the back of the wagon that day when a lot of people lost their jobs a year and a half later for doing something so sensible. And here they are still in the back of the wagon taking advantage of $1.8 trillion that the Democrats provided, the most courageous, sensible thing that the President of the United States has proposed since he has been President.

Mr. EXON. Will the Senator yield for a second for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BUMPERS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. EXON. I ask unanimous consent that the unanimous-consent request not be charged to either side. In order to try to accommodate as many people as possible we are trying to shrink down this time.

I ask unanimous consent that, rather than one-half hour of time on this amendment, it be reduced by 5 minutes each to 25 minutes per side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INHOFE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. I thank my friend and say, to accommodate a lot of people, we have subtracted 5 minutes.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, our friends on the other side of the aisle have the best of both worlds. They can criticize and carp about that bill in 1993, and yet they have never tried to undo one penny of it; did not undo the gas tax, did not undo the 36-percent tax rate increase, have not done anything about the surcharge, and they get the benefit of over $1 trillion in balancing the budget because 50 Senators stood up—and 2 of them are not with us today because they did; and about 17 Members of the House are not with us today because they did.

This tax cut is the height of fiscal irresponsibility. That is the reason we call it the fiscal responsibility amendment, to do away with the tax cut until we balance the budget. We have the rest of our lives to cut taxes. Our first chore is to keep faith with the people of this country.

If you eliminate the tax cut, you do not balance the budget in the year 2002 even by the Republican figures. You can do it in 2001. That would be shocking.

But the most important thing I want to say, Mr. President, is do not cut taxes when we are running this kind of a deficit. Balance the budget, and then talk about taxes. When you are talking about tax cuts, talk for a change about working people and real middle-class Americans.

Mr. President, I yield the floor. Does anyone wish time?

I yield to the distinguished Senator from Michigan 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Arkansas.

This tax package which is contained in the massive budget reconciliation bill is ill timed. It is inequitable. It provides the $224 billion tax break which, when fully phased in, would go disproportionally to the wealthiest among us. Indeed, more than half of those tax breaks would go to the wealthiest 14 percent of Americans, and we are talking about the fully phased in tax package. In that tax package, while the upper 14 percent get over 50 percent of the tax reductions, 14 million Americans of modest means would actually get a tax increase.

This maldistribution is reason enough to reject this tax package. But it becomes all the more unacceptable when one considers the extreme lengths to which the majority has gone to pay for these large tax breaks. Senior citizens are hit hard, students are hit hard, and working people are hit hard. But, above and beyond those flaws, there is the simple fact that we in this tax package would be providing tax cuts before assuring the reality of the deficit reduction that is projected. In other words, under this bill we would be spending the money before it is in the bank.

We have seen this before. In 1981, President Reagan introduced the Economic Recovery Tax Act which had large tax cuts, and also had projections, aspirations, hopes, and plans that the budget would be balanced by 1984. The tax cuts were not made dependent upon those projections taking place. If they had been, we would have been a trillion dollars better off in those years. But it seems to me that history is so recent that we ought to take its lessons and say to ourselves that we have to get deficit reduction under our belts before we enact tax cuts. This time let us make sure that projections of deficit reductions turn out to be true before we do the easier part.

On October 18, the Congressional Budget Office Director, June O'Neill, wrote the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee to provide the critical certification which the budget resolution calls for. The claims of a balanced budget are based on that certification, and the tax cut is based on an argument that we are reaching a balanced budget by 2002, which in turn is based on that certification. But when you read the certification, it is a bunch of hedges.

The Congressional Budget Office letter says, "Based on estimates using economic and technical assumptions underlying the budget resolution, assuming the level of discretionary spending specified in that resolution, the Congressional Budget Office projects . . ."—and later on the letter says—"the Congressional Budget Office projects that the resulting reductions in interest payments will be $50 billion in the year 2002 and $170 billion over the 1996–2002 period." Then the Congressional Budget Office says, "Those projections were based on a hypothetical deficit reduction path." It is based on those hypothetical estimates, projections, that the balanced budget claim is made for the year 2002. But even more significant, for the purpose of this amendment which is pending, it is based on those hypothetical paths, projections, and estimates that the tax cut is being defended.

This letter does not certify much except that the Congressional Budget Office has a long list of wiggle words which are available to us. And it is the foundation; it is that certification again which is the foundation for the assertion that the budget is going to be in balance in the year 2002. And you cannot help that because you have to have projections and estimates. But what we can avoid doing is providing a tax cut before we know in fact that the budget is going to be balanced.

So what this amendment says is hold off the tax cuts until we balance the budget. In fact, let us put the money in the bank before we spend it.

And, let's not be fooled by the happy talk about reaching a balanced budget. It is not balanced by any commonsense or legal definition. We know already, as Congressional Budge Office Director June O'Neill's letter to Senator CONRAD acknowledges, this plan falls short of balancing the budget by $105 billion in the year 2002. This is because the Republican majority's budget uses the surplus in the Social Security Trust Fund to mask the real Federal deficit.

The law, section 13301 of the Congressional Budget Act, states:

> [T]he receipts and disbursements of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund shall not be counted as new budget authority, outlays, receipts, or deficit or surplus for purposes of:
>
> (1) the budget of the United States Government as submitted by the President,
>
> (2) the congressional budget, or
>
> (3) the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

And, the law further states:

> The concurrent resolution shall not include the outlay and revenue totals of the old age, survivors, and disability insurance program established under Title II of the Social Security Act or the related provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 in the surplus or deficit totals required by this subsection or in any other surplus or deficit totals required by this title.

We're not only spending the dollars before they are in the bank, we are spending them earlier and faster than we are even projected to have them to spend.

Nearly half of the savings in this budget are projected to come in 2001 and 2002, while the tax breaks are set in law now. In fact, the budget resolution assumes $440 billion in discretionary spending cuts over 7 years. Only $18 billion of that would be cut next year, less than 5 percent. We know from past history what happens when tax cuts are put in law now while most of the actual cuts are to take place later.

Some of our Republican colleagues have appeared, in public statements, to agree that a tax cut should be put off until we are sure deficits will drop as predicted. Let's join together on a bipartisan basis and do just that.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Wisconsin 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, this amendment is simple and straightforward. It eliminates the fiscally irresponsible and reckless tax cut that is the core of this fatally flawed reconciliation package.

All the other provisions of the reconciliation bill, in my view, flow from this singular act of fiscal irresponsibility. Cuts to Medicare and Medicaid, student loans and the earned income tax credit, as well as the other provisions in this measure, all driven by the need to fund a quarter of a trillion dollar tax cut, are so out of proportion to any consensus the public would support that I think they doom any hope their supporters might have of really balancing the budget.

Mr. President, just as we are beginning to climb out of the hole that was dug 14 years ago, somebody wants to shove us back in.

Mr. President, we have made remarkable progress in lowering the Federal budget deficit during the 103d Congress. The President's deficit reduction package produced $600 billion in lower deficits and got us about half the way there—almost half the way there to a balanced budget, from over $300 billion to about $160 billion. In fact, Mr. President, but for the debts rung up during the 1980's, we would be in balance today.

But we still do not have a balanced budget, and we cannot afford any tax cut—not the President, not the House, not the Senate tax cut. We need to balance the budget. That should be our first priority.

Actually, Mr. President, this bill is really an alchemist's dream. Those who have crafted this measure have finally invented a machine that makes gold. The reconciliation bill really amounts to just that. It is a machine that makes gold. All you do is feed health care services for the most vulnerable among us in our Nation, and out comes gold.

Of course, Mr. President, not everyone shares equally in that bounty. The gold from this machine largely benefits the best off in our Nation. The better off you are, the more you get. The less well off you are, the less you get.

I am not going to dwell any further on the distribution issues relating to the tax cut. As I have noted many times on this floor, this issue comes to me as an issue of pure fiscal responsibility. Even if the benefits of tax cuts were more fairly distributed, I would oppose it. We cannot afford to cut taxes while we still face a Federal budget deficit of $160 billion. Nobody out there believes that makes fiscal sense. It is the opposite of sense. And you cannot spend $1 three times. You cannot say you are spending the dollar to save Medicare and then you are going to use the same dollar to eliminate the deficit and then you are going to use the dollar for tax cuts. You can only spend it once. This budget uses it not to save Medicare, not to reduce the deficit, but to fund tax cuts. For that reason, I regard this as the most important amendment in this process, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. I wonder if the minority leader has a speaker here he wishes to recognize at this point?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Is the Senator referring to me?

Mr. BUMPERS. Yes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. He mentioned the minority leader.

Mr. BUMPERS. Majority leader. I am sorry; I have a hard time breaking the habit.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I will have somebody here shortly. If the Senator has a short speech, we would be ready to go after that.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Like the previous amendments, this one is also painfully simple. It is an amendment that will not take a dozen staff to explain, an amendment that will not take a great deal of research, an amendment that probably should not take a great deal of thought. No one can misunderstand what this is. This amendment says we ought not do a tax cut until the budget is balanced. Do not serve dessert before the main course.

It is a pretty simple proposition. My expectation is they will not want to vote on that either. We have been here 30 hours. They do not want to give a vote on Medicare so we will not get a vote on this. One of these days we will, I guess.

Let me talk about the proposed tax cut. This is the center pole in the tent called Contract With America. This is the center pole of the tent, the tax cut. And I understand why. It is enormously popular. Go take a poll and ask people: Would you like a tax cut? Heck, yes, I would like a tax cut; the bigger the better.

So I understand why it is there. This is about polls and focus groups and finding out what is popular—let us give a tax cut. I wonder how the American people would feel if they were told that every dollar of this tax cut will be borrowed in order to give it. In other words, we are going to increase the Federal debt during these 7 years with this plan by $660 billion roughly—this plan, a $660 billion increase in the debt and then a $245 billion tax cut. In other words, every single dollar plus much more will be borrowed. We will borrow money, float bonds to give a tax cut, a substantial portion of which will go to upper income Americans.

I think most people would say, well, that does not make much sense. But that is not what this debate is about—sense. If it were about sense, we would not even have to offer this amendment. We would have people say let us do the honest work and the tough work, the heavy lifting to balance the Federal budget. Let us do that. When we are done with that, then let us talk about the Tax Code, what is wrong with it, how do we fix it, who gets a tax cut.

That is not what we are doing. What we are doing is pretending to balance the budget and saying now that we pretend to balance the budget, we will offer up a tax cut. Unfortunately, we have a letter dated October 20 from the Director of the Congressional Budget Office. I asked, is the budget in balance in the year 2002? The answer is no—$105 billion deficit in 2002. That is, of course, if you take the Social Security trust funds and put them in the Social Security trust funds where they should be. If you take them out and use them as operating revenue, then you balance the budget.

I guess those who took remedial accounting and believe that double entry bookkeeping means you can use money twice in two different places at the same time, I guess they are comfortable and they can sleep with this. But, of course, if you were in private business and said, let me take the money out of my employees' pension funds and use it on my operating statement, you would be doing years at hard tennis at some minimum security prison. Instead, it is "budget technique" to say, let us misuse Social Security trust funds, show a balanced budget in the year 2002 by misusing that money, and then claim we have a balanced budget so we are going to give a tax cut. Every single dollar of this tax cut will be borrowed in the next 7 years and every Member of this Senate knows it. They can pretend they did not hear or they did not know; it escaped their attention. But they know it. This amendment is very simple. It is called a "fiscal responsibility amendment." It says, let us do the tough, honest work first, get the budget balanced, really balanced, and then let us decide how to fix our tax system.

Having said all of that, I hope one of these hours we will get a vote first on Medicare and then on the sequential amendments because these are not difficult for anybody to understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I need. I will be very brief, and then I will yield further time on our side.

Mr. President, the fact is it is not surprising that the minority is arguing against tax cuts. They are the party that raised taxes in this country in the last Congress by a record-setting $270 billion. In my State and across America, everywhere I go, the people I talk to say we need a tax cut to make ends meet. The middle-class squeeze we talk about on the floor all the time is in no small measure the result of the fact that today in America average families send $1 to Washington for every $4 they earn versus $1 for every $50 they earned back in the 1950's and the 1960's. Those are the families who are paying the bills and paying the taxes.

As we go through the belt-tightening process here in Washington to bring down the deficit, we believe it is only fair to let those hard-working families keep more of what they earn. What we have been presented with today is an amendment that says to all of those families: Wait. Wait, American families, hard-working families, for your $500 tax credit. Wait, spouses who work in the home, before you get your IRA. Wait, to people who want to adopt and need a little help making an adoption feasible. Wait, to jobseekers who need the opportunities created by progrowth tax cuts.

We believe the waiting should be over. We say this: If America's taxpayers want to wait for the Democrats and President Clinton to produce a tax cut, fine. But we have already gone through a lot of waiting for the tax cut that was promised in the 1992 campaign by the President. It has never been delivered. The waiting that this amendment suggests will have to continue will also be undelivered. We are prepared to allow hard-working families to realize tax savings now.

At this time I yield 6 minutes to the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, we have entered a new age in American politics. All of us know that. The days are long gone when elected officials can get elected, duck controversy, avoid hard choices, and, yes, hide from the judgment of the people. Governing in 1995 requires hard choices, adherence to principle and accountability. As party defections increase, as State legislatures and governorships change hands, my former colleagues on the other side of the aisle scratch their heads and ask why. The answer is simple, Mr. President. On the other side of the aisle there is no accountability and no willingness to make hard choices.

Instead, I believe they remain wedded to the status quo politics and policies that have led this country to the verge of bankruptcy.

For 60 years the other side has steadily created a Federal monster that now handles $1 out of every $4 in our economy. While the growth of the Government that past half century is stunning, it should come as no surprise to all of us. The politics of the status quo promoted on the other side of the aisle operates on the simple premise that the American people will always trade their freedom and their hard-won dollars for the promise of Government security.

"Tax and spend." Yes, Mr. President, "tax and spend, and the docile American people will never resist. Tax and spend, tax and spend, and the American people will never support the reform or repeal of a Government program. Make the American people dependent on the Federal Government for everything from income and health care to business subsidies, and they will never resist or even reject us."

These, Mr. President, I believe, are the maxims by which the agents of the status quo operate. But, Mr. President, the agents opposed to change have vastly underestimated the American people. The reason, Mr. President: The price of a balanced budget is so high that the American people will reject any politician who attempts to do the right thing and bring the budget into balance. They are dead wrong. We are allowing families to keep more of their hard-earned dollars, and we are ending welfare as we know it, and, above all, we are balancing the budget. The agents of change have a solemn obligation to do the unheard of, keep their promises. And I believe we will.

Mr. President, I would just like to show two charts in the short time I have of what parents can purchase with a $500-per-child tax credit in America.

For example, with a $500 tax credit, items parents can purchase: a winter jacket, $30; winter boots, $30; athletic socks, $6.50, six pairs of those; a sweat shirt, $12; books, $100; a tutor for their child, $230, 32 hours. That is $498.50. We checked it out.

We also have another chart for the $500 tax credit. Parents can purchase 847 jars of baby food or, Mr. President, 2,370 disposable diapers or approximately 6 months of electric bills.

The $500 tax credit for working families in America is real, and they need it.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the fiscal responsibility amendment. Mr. President, we should not cut taxes until we balance the budget. This reconciliation legislation cuts taxes before the budget is balanced. This is like eating dessert before dinner.

I support a balanced Federal budget and I have voted for significant deficit reduction over the past 2 years. But reducing the deficit cannot be accomplished if we are simultaneously cutting taxes for the wealthiest of Americans.

This is fiscally irresponsible. This highlights the Republican's real priority in this reconciliation bill—cutting taxes for the wealthiest Americans.

Balancing the budget must be based on principles that uphold basic values. Protecting our seniors, providing opportunities for our young people, and protecting the ladders of opportunity for working families are my guiding principles. This reconciliation legislation violates those principles by gutting Medicare and Medicaid, cutting student loans and repealing the earned income tax credit [EITC].

The fact is Mr. President, the Republican tax cut would add nearly $300 billion to the national debt by 2002. All but the last few billion of the tax cut is borrowed money, under the Republicans own deficit reduction timetable.

This reconciliation bill is fiscally irresponsible—and don't think otherwise. Requiring the budget to be balanced before we cut taxes is the responsible, fair and principled action to take. That's what this amendment ensures. This amendment also ensures that future tax cuts will be targeted to low and moderate-income working American families, not the wealthiest Americans. That is why I support this amendment and urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. President, the tax cuts proposed by the Republicans are fiscally disastrous. I urge my colleagues to vote for fairness and common sense and vote for this amendment.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I have long believed that it would take courage and wisdom to develop and implement a plan that would lead to a balanced budget. Without the courage to make tough choices and the wisdom to place budget policy above partisan politics, our ability to develop an equitable plan that can stand the test of time and public opinion is severely limited.

While I give our Republican friends credit for bringing this package to the floor, I must say that a certain element of this plan does not reflect courage, wisdom, or equity. A particular concern to me is the tax breaks which have been included in the bill.

Mr. President, it does not take courage to cut taxes. That is one of the easiest votes a legislator can cast. What takes courage is to revisit politically popular tax cuts at a time we have a nearly $5 trillion debt, and even a unified balanced budget is at least 7 years away if we get there at all. And for all the talk about fiscal responsibility recently, how can we endorse a $245 billion tax cut that makes balancing the budget much more difficult and adds to the debt over the next 7 years?

Mr. President, I was one of three Democrats who supported the original Senate budget resolution this year because I strongly believe that we have a responsibility to make tough choices that are necessary to balance the budget.

Unfortunately, during the budget resolution conference between the House and the Senate, fiscal responsibility gave way to political expediency as tax breaks were added up front and the deep spending reductions moved into the next century. Were these particular changes wise? In my judgment, absolutely not.

I think most in this Chamber would agree we should not be cutting taxes until we prove capable of carrying out these spending reductions and actually balance the budget.

If we get further down the road and decide spending reductions, particularly Medicare and Medicaid, in this plan are politically unsustainable, I fear, Mr. President, that we will abandon the spending cuts and leave the tax cuts in place at a time when their cost will begin to explode. And as we have seen before, the end result will be, we will simply be further away from a balanced budget.

The last point I would like to address is equity. Including the tax cut in this plan is not equitable. At a time when we are asking the American public to sacrifice by restraining the growth of programs which benefit low- and moderate-income individuals, how can we, in good conscience, adopt a tax cut which, according to the Treasury Department estimates, will disproportionately benefit upper-income Americans? I simply cannot agree.

Including $245 billion in tax cuts in this budget package is not courageous, it is not wise, and it is not equitable. I would implore my colleagues to reject the proposition that we should have tax cuts before we have a balanced budget.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I thank the Chair.

YOUR'RE RIGHT MR. PRESIDENT, YOU RAISED TAXES TOO MUCH!

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, why after shackling American middle-class families with the largest tax increase in history, has Bill Clinton finally admitted that he made a mistake? Why does his confession come just days before Congressional Republicans are scheduled to meet in conference to finish one of the largest tax cut proposals since the Kemp-Roth income tax rate reductions brought our economy roaring back in the 1980's?

Because Bill Clinton knows his taxes did not deliver on his promise to improve the economy, bring down interest rates, and thereby reduce the deficit.

Tax increases never do.

History proves that increases actually poison economic growth while tax cuts unlock capital, encourage savings, improve investment, and create jobs, opportunity, and growth.

Kemp-Roth led to the longest peacetime economic expansion in history. Eighteen million jobs were created, along with four million new businesses. Family income rose and home ownership boomed as interest rates and inflation fell. At the same time, Treasury revenues doubled, not because Americans were paying a higher percentage of their income to taxes, but because Americans had higher incomes.

We must unlock this kind of growth again. Only by creating an environment where our economy can expand can we simultaneously cut the deficit and meet necessary Government obligations.

Last spring the House passed a 7-year $354-billion tax reduction package, 76 percent of which, would go to family relief, and 24 percent to job creation. The plan offers a $500-a-child tax credit, encourages savings and investment, and offers other incentives for economic growth.

The proposal recently passed by the Senate Finance Committee cuts taxes by $245 billion, offers relief for our middle class—with over 70 percent of the $245 billion going to families making less than $75,000 a year—and, like its House counterpart, contains incentives that will encourage savings, investment, capital formation, and business growth. These provisions mean more jobs for Americans, greater economic security for our families, and stability in our communities.

Of the $245 billion Senate relief package, a full $223 billion will go to families. The remaining $22 billion will strengthen businesses and lead to increased employment opportunity. It will also improve America's ability to compete in the global community, with other nations that provide their businesses with strong incentives to compete with us.

The four pillars of both proposals are: First, a $500 child tax credit; second, restoration and strengthening of Individual Retirement Accounts; third, relief from overbearing estate taxes on families and businesses; and, fourth, reduction of the top rate of capital gains on individuals and corporations.

These measures meet our promise to the American people that in Washington we will change business as usual. The current system double-taxes savings, thwarts investment, hinders productivity, increases prices, stifles wages, and hurts exports. It is complex, controlled by special interest groups, and places disincentives on work.

Our proposals represent a major step toward correcting these deficiencies, and because we have cut spending, our bill balances the budget while making room for tax relief. The House has acted. Now, the full Senate must pass the Finance Committee's proposal. Following a House-Senate conference to iron out any differences between the bills, both Chambers must pass this historic reform, and the President must sign it into law.

Americans need relief. Our economy needs a shot in the arm. Even Bill Clinton has admitted as much. We call on him to join us in our efforts to unleash the potential our economy has to move us into a bold and exciting future.

He admits he made a mistake. Working together, we can fix it.

Martin Feldstein, former Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers and professor of economics at Harvard University spells out in a very livid fashion what the 1993 tax increases really did in an article in The Wall Street Journal. I request that article be included in the RECORD in its entirety.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From The Wall Street Journal]

WHAT THE '93 TAX INCREASES REALLY DID

(By Martin Feldstein)

President Clinton was right when he recently told business groups in Virginia and Texas that he had raised taxes too much in 1993, perhaps more so than he realizes. We now have the first hard evidence on the effect of the Clinton tax rate increases. The new data, published by the Internal Revenue Service, show that the sharp jump in tax rates raised only one-third as much revenue as the Clinton administration had predicted.

Because taxpayers responded to the sharply higher marginal tax rates by reducing their taxable incomes, the Treasury lost two-thirds of the extra revenue that would have been collected if taxpayers had not changed their behavior. Moreover, while the Treasury gained less than $6 billion in additional personal income tax revenue, the distortions to taxpayers' behavior depressed their real incomes by nearly $25 billion.

HOW IT HAPPENS

To understand how taxpayer behavior could produce such a large revenue shortfall, recall that the Clinton plan raised the marginal personal income tax rate to 36% from 31% on incomes between $140,000 ($115,000 for single taxpayers) and $250,000, and to 39.6% on all incomes over $250,000. Relatively small reductions in taxable income in response to these sharply higher rates can eliminate most or all of the additional tax revenue that would result with no behavioral response.

If a couple with $200,000 of taxable income reduces its income by just 5% in response to the higher tax rate, the Treasury loses more from the $10,000 decline in income ($3,100 less revenue at 31%) than it gains from the higher tax rate on the remaining $50,000 of income above the $140,000 floor ($2,600 more revenue at 5%); the net effect is that the Treasury collects $600 less than it would have if there had been no tax rate increase.

Similarly, a couple with $400,000 of taxable income would pay $18,400 in extra taxes if its taxable income remained unchanged. But if that couple responds to the nearly 30% marginal tax rate increase by cutting its taxable income by as little as 8%, the Treasury's revenue gain would fall 67% to less than $6,000.

How can taxpayers reduce their taxable incomes in this way? Self-employed taxpayers, two-earner couples, and senior executives can reduce their taxable earnings by a combination of working fewer hours, taking more vacations, and shifting compensation from taxable cash to untaxed fringe benefits. Investors can shift from taxable bonds and high yield stocks to tax exempt bonds and to stocks with lower dividends. Individuals can increase tax deductible mortgage borrowing and raise charitable contributions. (I ignore reduced realizations of capital gains because the 1993 tax rate changes did not raise the top capital gains rate above its previous 28% level.)

To evaluate the magnitude of the taxpayers' actual responses, Daniel Feenberg at the National Bureau of Economic Research (NBER) and I studied the published IRS estimates of the 1992 and 1993 taxable incomes of high income taxpayers (i.e., taxpayers with adjusted gross incomes over $200,000, corresponding to about $140,000 of taxable income). We compared the growth of such incomes with the corresponding rise in taxable incomes for taxpayers with adjusted gross incomes between $50,000 and $200,000. Since the latter group did not experience a 1993 tax rate change, the increase of their taxable incomes provides a basis for predicting how taxable incomes would have increased in the high income group if its members had not changed their behavior in response to the higher post-1992 tax rates. We calculated this with the help of the NBER's TAXSIM model, a computer analysis of more than 100,000 random, anonymous tax returns provided by the IRS.

We concluded that the high income taxpayers reported 8.5% less taxable income in 1993 than they would have if their tax rates had not increased. This in turn reduced the additional tax liabilities of the high income group to less than one-third of what they would have been if they had not changed their behavior in response to the higher tax rates.

This sensitivity of taxable income to marginal tax rates is quantitatively similar to the magnitude of the response that I found when I studied taxpayers' responses to the tax rate cuts of 1986. It is noteworthy also that such a strong response to the 1993 tax increases occurred within the first year. It would not be surprising if the taxpayer responses get larger as taxpayers have more time to adjust to the higher tax rates by retiring earlier, by choosing less demanding and less remunerative occupations, by buying larger homes and second homes with new mortgage deductions, etc.

The 1993 tax law also eliminated the $135,000 ceiling on the wage and salary income subject to the 2.9% payroll tax for Medicare. When this took effect in January 1994, it raised the tax rate on earnings to 38.9% for taxpayers with incomes between $140,000 and $250,000 and to 42.5% on incomes above $250,000. Although we will have to wait until data are available for 1994 to see the effect of that extra tax rate rise, the evidence for 1993 suggests that taxpayers' responses to the higher marginal tax rates would cut personal income tax revenue by so much that the net additional revenue for eliminating the ceiling on the payroll tax base would be less than $1 billion.

All of this stands in sharp contrast to the official revenue estimates produced by the staffs of the Treasury and of the Congressional Joint Committee on Taxation before the 1993 tax legislation was passed. Their estimates were based on the self-imposed "convention" of ignoring the effects of tax rate changes on the amount that people work and invest. The combination of that obviously false assumption and a gross underestimate of the other ways in which taxpayer behavior reduces taxable income caused the revenue estimators at the Treasury to conclude that taxpayer behavior would reduce the additional tax revenue raised by the higher rates by only 7%. In contrast, the actual experience shows a revenue reduction that is nearly 10 times as large as the Treasury staff assumed.

This experience is directly relevant to the debate about whether Congress should use "dynamic" revenue estimates that take into account the effect of taxpayer behavior on tax revenue. The 1993 experience shows that unless such behavior is taken into account, the revenue estimates presented to Congress can grossly overstate the revenue gains from higher tax rates (and the revenue costs of lower tax rates). Although the official revenue estimating staffs claim that their estimates are dynamic because they take into account some taxpayer behavior, the 1993 experience shows that as a practical matter, the official estimates are close to being "static" no-behavioral-response estimates because they explicitly ignore the effect taxes on work effort and grossly underestimate the magnitude of other taxpayer responses.

CURRENT PROPOSALS

If Congress had known in 1993 that raising top marginal tax rates from 31% to more than 42% would be less than $7 billion a year, including the payroll tax revenue as well as the personal income tax revenue, it might not have been possible for President Clinton to get the votes to pass his tax increase.

Which brings us back to President Clinton's own statement (half-recanted the next day) that he raised taxes too much in 1993. Congress and the president will soon be negotiating about the final shape of the 1995 tax package. The current congressional tax proposals do nothing to repeal the very harmful rate increases of 1990. Rolling back both the personal tax rates and the Medicare payroll tax base to where they were before 1993 would cost less than $7 billion a year in revenue and would raise real national income by more than $25 billion. Now that the evidence is in, Congress and the president should agree to undo a bad mistake. •

Mr. BUMPERS. I yield the Senator from Florida 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, we have just heard a speech about change versus the status quo. This is one place in which we are all together. This is the status quo. This is deja vu all over again. We started this process of saying that we were going to meet deficit reduction targets and committed to the American people our frugality and our dedication to their attainment.

We did it under what was called Gramm-Rudman. And in the years from 1986 to 1990, those 5 years, we had deficit-reduction targets for Gramm-Rudman that were supposed to bring us to a balanced budget early in this decade.

What did it, in fact, bring us? More enormous deficits. And every year of Gramm-Rudman, from 1986 to 1990, we failed to meet the deficit reduction target. In fact, the total amount of our excess deficits, deficits beyond the target, was $201 billion over those 5 years.

Did we change that pattern after President Bush went to Andrews Air Force Base and negotiated a new deficit-reduction plan? We did not—in 1991, 1992, 1993, again, failure to meet the deficit reduction targets in excess of $150 billion in just those 3 years.

Mr. President, we delude ourselves, we repeat the status quo, not engage in change if we are saying that we are going to give ourselves this tax benefit before we demonstrate, first, that we have a serious, credible plan for balancing the Federal budget that is not just smoke, mirrors, and ideas in the minds of a few people, but rather concrete law that has been passed, signed by the President and is a firm national contract and commitment to its attainment, and, second, a period of demonstrated fidelity to that plan and performance under that plan.

I am the grandfather of eight young boys and girls. I know one thing about children: They like to eat their dessert before they will eat their spinach. That is what we are being asked here to do, is eat the cake and ice cream before we have the carrots and peas. I think we should not go down that path one more time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KERREY. The Senator from Alabama's speech was earlier. It was helpful. I have to pick up some groceries on the way home. But I did not find it to be terribly helpful in this debate, saying that Democrats have no accountability, that Democrats are not willing to make hard choices, that we are for the politics of the status quo. That is just bunk.

I just stood out on the Capitol steps a little while ago endorsing a Democratic proposal that balanced the budget in 7 years, making very tough choices but without this tax cut. And one of the hard truths that we have to face right now is, the truth of the matter is Republicans in America, Mr. President, not Republicans in this Congress, by the New York Times poll this morning, Republicans in America oppose the tax cut. Indeed, more Democrats in America support the tax cut. And the most revealing thing of all is that the lower the income goes of working people, the more they favor a tax cut. Unfortunately, they do not benefit from this tax cut.

Indeed, as a consequence of change in the earned income tax credit, and according to the Republican Joint Tax Committee, every family under $30,000 will have a tax increase.

It is remarkable, Mr. President, in addition to not needing to cut taxes, we have got plenty of tough choices to make, and I hope we are able to vote in a bipartisan fashion for tough choices, that break the status quo of deficit financing and move us to a balanced budget.

But those are not the only goals that we need to move toward. That is not the only status quo that we need to make. We had another million Americans that moved into the ranks of the uninsured in 1994. We have another 1.5 million that will move to be uninsured in health care as a consequence of what is happening in the health care industry.

Almost 50 percent of the babies born in the State of Texas are paid for by Medicaid, working people, Mr. President, as a consequence of the status quo. There are lots of changes that need to be made. I am willing to make tough votes to change the status quo and move to a balanced budget, but not with a $245 billion tax cut that does not benefit the Americans that need to be benefited.

Mr. BUMPERS. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three and a half minutes.

Mr. BUMPERS. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. President, really what we are suggesting with this amendment is two concepts here: It is fiscal responsibility and equity. I know that there are those who believe that these tax breaks are critical. Some, I believe, honestly believe, I think, this is going to create some sort of a massive new growth, although there are no studies that I know of that indicates that is the case at all. But the cruel, hard facts here, Mr. President, are that what we are talking about is a deficit that will increase.

According to the hand-selected head of the Congressional Budget Office by our friends on the other side, they have said this produces a deficit, this proposal, in excess of $93 billion. So for those who are seeking fiscal responsibility, the inclusion of $245 billion in tax breaks does not get us there.

So, Mr. President, on the question of fiscal responsibility, this is irresponsible. On the issue of equity, what we are doing here with this proposal is we are taking significant cuts, far beyond what is needed to restore the integrity of Medicare or Medicaid, in order to pay for tax breaks, the bulk of which go to people at an upper-income category and simultaneously increasing the tax obligation of those people at the working class category.

If you make $30,000 or less, you have got a $352 tax increase. That is what is in this bill. It is in black and white, a $352 tax increase.

If you are the top 1 percent of income earners, your tax break is almost $6,000. That is not equitable, Mr. President. It is not fiscally responsible, and it is not equitable. And for that reason, we urge our colleagues to support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, let me just close by saying that I can remember when there were about 10 Republicans last summer who were strongly opposed to a tax cut until we balanced the budget. I do not think the majority leader was very keen for it. And the Senator from New Mexico, chairman of the Budget Committee, was devoutly opposed to it.

So what happened along the way? I can only conclude that NEWT GINGRICH said, "This is the major part of the contract. You do not have any choice. You have got to abandon all economic reason and sanity and vote for this tax cut."

It is the height of fiscal irresponsibility to do it. But even more importantly, it is a social disaster. It makes the working people of this country second-class citizens. They are in the second tier. I do not want to say the idle rich, but the rich who do not work, who get their income from the sweat of somebody else's brow, they are in the first-class tier.

Mr. President, the real tragedy is the American people are not asking for this. If you look at the New York Times poll this morning, the American people are strongly opposed to a tax cut until we balance the budget.

Here is a USA poll taken in December of 1994. Seventy percent of the people in this country said, "We want the budget balanced before you cut taxes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan controls 19 minutes. The time has expired on your side.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, at this time, we are prepared to yield back the remainder of our time. I inquire before I do as to whether the Senator from Nebraska is prepared to proceed with their next amendment? If not, until they are ready I will probably be putting in a quorum call request without the time running against either side.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time. I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time not run against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, at this time, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Texas, to be taken off our time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, if you are looking at our budget which is now before the Senate, it addresses two basic facts that I believe alarm all working Americans.

The first fact is that the average family in America with two little children, which in 1950 was sending $1 out of every $50 it earned to Washington, DC, is today sending $1 out of every $4 it earns to Washington, DC. And if, over the next 20 years, we do not start a new spending program nor eliminate an existing one, to pay for the Government we have already committed to will mean that in 20 years the average working family in America with two children will be sending $1 out of every $3 they earn to Washington, DC.

Bill Clinton looks at that trend and says, "Great, let's accelerate." We look at it and say, "It has to be stopped and it has to be reversed." And that is exactly what we do in our budget.

The second figure is a very simple fact and it is an alarming fact. A baby born in America today, if the current trend of Government spending continues unabated, will pay $187,000 of taxes in their working lifetime just to pay interest on the public debt. That is not just economic suicide, that is immoral, and we are determined to stop it.

Here is basically where we are. We have written a budget that over 7 years comes into balance. President Clinton has trumpeted the fact that the deficit today is down, but he does not show us that his own budget office shows that under his budget, and the Congressional Budget Office shows convincingly, that the deficit now skyrockets under the Clinton budget. He has sent us not one but two budgets, and under both of those budgets, the deficit explodes.

We have proposed a budget that achieves balance in 7 years, and now the President is saying to us that unless we increase spending on programs that we do not need and we cannot afford that the President is going to veto our budget.

Well, Mr. President, let me say as one Member of the Senate, there is no circumstance under which I am going to go back and rewrite our budget. There is no circumstance under which I am going to agree to increase spending, to continue the deficit spree that threatens the future of our country and that threatens the future of our children.

We have proposed a budget that cuts taxes. It gives a $500 tax credit per child for every working family in America. What it means is that if we are successful next year, every working family in America that pays taxes that has two children will get to keep $1,000 more of what they earn to invest in their own children, to invest in their own family, to invest in their own future.

Now Bill Clinton says the Government can spend the money better than that family can spend the money. We reject that. We think history proves that notion is wrong and we are confident that the people who do the work and pay the taxes and pull the wagon in America agree with us.

Our $500 tax credit per child, our elimination of the marriage penalty will mean that the average working family in my State will get to keep $1,100 more of their hard-earned income to invest in their own future, to invest in their own children, and we want that to happen.

We talk so much about balancing the budget, but it has been so long since we have done it that people forget what the benefits of a balanced budget are. First of all, since we are balancing the budget and cutting taxes, the first benefit for a working family with two children is they get to keep $1,000 more of what they earn.

But a balanced Federal budget would mean on an average mortgage of the average working family, that their mortgage payments per year over the next 20 years would be $1,664 less per year. In buying a new car every 4 years and financing it, as most working Americans have to do, they would pay $180 less in interest costs for buying that car every year because we balanced the budget.

Because we will have more growth when income is going into expanding the economy, that is $1,385 of income for every working family.

You add it all up and the average family in America gains, I repeat, gains $4,229 a year directly from a balanced budget. It means over 1.75 million more jobs annually and reducing the national debt mortgage on our grandchildren by $66,000.

This budget is a choice: Do you want more income, lower interest rates, higher growth, more jobs, less debt on your grandchildren and to keep more of what you earn?

We say, "Yes." The Democrats say, "No, Government can do it better."

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I send a motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] moves to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report the bill back to the Senate within 3 days (not to include any day the Senate is not in session) making changes in legislation within that Committee's jurisdiction to reduce revenue reductions attributable to tax breaks benefiting upper-income taxpayers over the next seven years in an amount necessary to avoid unfair cuts in Medicare payments to rural hospitals and other rural health care providers, to maintain federal support at the levels recommended by the President of the United States for federal agriculture and nutrition programs, and to maintain levels of federal support for education and child care in rural America.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time allotted be reduced to 15 minutes, equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, on behalf of our side, we will agree to that.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the whole country knows about the Medicare cuts in this budget, and the threats they present to rural hospitals and to health care for seniors.

A lot of people know that a few days ago, the House Speaker NEWT GINGRICH called this bill the round one in a long-term plan to kill Medicare.

Many people know how deeply it will cut student loans and assistance for elementary and secondary education.

THE 1995 FARM BILL

But very few people know that this year, the budget is also the farm bill. It will reauthorize all the commodity programs and the Conservation Reserve Program. It will eliminate several more. Altogether, for the next 7 years, it sets our national agriculture policy.

It is supposed to keep rural economies stable. And it should guarantee consumers a safe and dependable food supply at a reasonable price. But on the Senate floor today, we have something entirely different.

I am sorry to say it, but laying everything about Medicare, tax increases on people making less than $30,000 a year, education and the rest aside, this is a terrible farm bill.

WRITTEN IN SECRET

First, it is partisan. It is a hard-line, ideological approach to agricultural policy, not an effort to bring people together and take the best from everyone.

Second, it is secretive. It was written behind closed doors. And very, very few Americans even know it is up on the floor today.

At an absolute maximum, the agricultural part of this budget will get a grand total of 50 minutes for debate. It is a scandal, but it is not a surprise. Because if this were my bill, I would not want to say much about it either.

But in any case, I want to welcome all my colleagues to the debate on the 1995 farm bill. I imagine the other side will be awfully quiet. But we're here to make up for it.

We are going to use these 45 minutes to tell the truth about the big, gobbling, turkey out here on the Senate floor. And then we'll give the other folks a second chance.

Our motion to recommit will restore the traditional, bipartisan approach to agricultural policy. We can work together, restore some fairness and moderation. And if we adopt this motion, our friends on the other side of the aisle can have something to be proud of when they go home and talk to their farmers.

SEVEN LEAN YEARS TO COME

If you have read Genesis, chapter 41, you know the story of Joseph's dream. He compared the 7 years to come with:

> seven kine . . . poor and very ill favoured and lean-fleshed, such as I never saw in all the land of Egypt for badness.

These seven ill-favored cattle ate up the good cattle, just as seven ears of corn, "withered, thin and blasted with the east wind" ate up seven good ears of corn. So Joseph could tell that the future would bring 7 years of trouble—7 lean years, in which "all the plenty shall be forgotten in the land of Egypt."

Well, we may not be as wise as Joseph. And the days of inspired prophecy may be gone. But on the other hand, we have a lot more than a dream to go on. We have hard facts and numbers. And these facts and numbers tell us that our farmers have 7 pretty lean years ahead.

This bill makes dramatic cuts in farm supports, which have already been cut 60 percent in the past decade. If this turkey survives Thanksgiving of 1995, the year 2002 will see us fund just half of today's Conservation Reserve Program. Bad for farmers, bad for hunters, bad for recreation.

The Emergency Livestock Feed Assistance Program will end. Our deficiency payments—the safety net our producers need in tough times—will be capped. In the very worst years, when our producers need help most, it won't be there.

Then look at nutrition. School lunch, daycare meals, and meals for senior citizens are all cut. And these are not surgical strikes—these are repeated blows with a meat axe.

These cuts affect more than farmers. They affect all of rural America. Schools, grocers, bankers, fuel dealers, equipment and automobile dealerships, and even our local and county governments will all feel the pinch.

And we are doing all this at a time when our competitors in Europe are not giving up a thing. They already give their farmers over 10 times the export subsidies we provide.

This budget cuts the Export Enhancement Program by 20 percent, and market promotion by 30 percent. We will end up exporting less, and that means lower incomes for farmers.

KEEPING YOUNG PEOPLE OFF THE LAND

Finally, maybe the most painful item of all. That is the apparent exclusion of beginning farmers from all these services. This spring I went to a lot of high school graduations in rural Montana. Places like Geyser, Hobson, Stanford, Opheim, Harlem and Dodson.

We have some great kids in these communities. They are looking forward to a career in agriculture like their parents. They want to work and provide for their families on their own land.

This bill shuts them out and puts them at a competitive disadvantage. Combine that with the trouble young farmers have in obtaining credit, and the message they get from this budget is clear. There is no place for you in production agriculture. There is no place for the small family farm in America.

OUR AMENDMENT: A SECOND CHANCE

Well, we can do better. And with our amendment, we will do better.

Our amendment is very simple. It says, go back to the drawing board. Take it back to the Finance Committee. Restore some sense and moderation to agricultural policy, nutrition and our rural economic approach as a whole. The amendment doesn't dictate how we should do it, but it gives us a chance to take a second look and get it right.

Let us remember the story of Joseph. He saw the 7 lean years coming. He told Paraoh about his dream. And Paraoh listened to Joseph. He changed his agriculture policy, promoted production, and stockpiled corn. And therefore Egypt got through the 7 lean years.

We can do the same. if the folks on the other side will listen, we can take advantage of this second chance. We can vote for the motion to recommit, and come back with a moderate, nonpartisan farm policy that is good for everyone. I hope it will get the Senate's support.

Thank you, Mr. President, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. President, there is kind of a joke in Illinois that goes: "Just outside of Chicago, there's a place called Illinois."

That joke, or that phrase, used in the tourism industry, is based upon a notion that when people think of Illinois, they often first think of Chicago, and the rest of the State is overlooked. And that part of the State, the part "just outside of Chicago," is rural. That part of the State has vital agricultural industry. That part of the State is where you will discover more rural communities than any other State in the Nation except Texas.

In fact, when you discover that fully half of the 11.5 million people of Illinois live in the places outside of Chicago, that, I think, paints a more accurate picture of what Illinois is about than what our popular mythology would lead you to believe.

The reason I mention that, Mr. President, is that what happens in this bill, in this Reconciliation Act, with regard to rural programs is, therefore, vitally important to the State that I was elected to represent.

I hope always to represent all of that State and speak to the interests of rural Illinois—speak to the interests of what we call downstate as much as any other part of my State. That part of Illinois, just outside of Chicago, is a part of Illinois that I am determined to see is not overlooked. But being overlooked, I think, captures the general feelings shared by many rural Americans this year when it comes to Federal dollars and Federal attention this part of the country needs and deserves.

Mr. President, rural Illinoisans understand the meaning of shared sacrifice. No group of Americans should be asked to share a disproportionate burden of cuts any more than any other group. Rural Illinoisans have told me, and I have been around my State in town meetings, the deficit reduction should be a priority for this Congress. They understand that no Federal program should be off limits, that nothing should be excluded from review, and that everything should be on the table.

However, they also understand that shared sacrifice is something that means everybody. Shared sacrifice is exactly what this reconciliation bill fails to accomplish.

Some Americans will see huge and significant tax cuts from this bill. But more than half of all Americans, including most rural Americans, will see no tax cut at all. What is more, the net effect of the overall bill is to tighten the economic vise on rural America.

The $13 billion in farm program cuts proposed by this bill means that Illinois farmers will lose over three-quarters of a billion dollars in economic protection. With $113 million in title I education cuts, rural Illinois loses $3 million at a time when many rural school districts face a funding crisis. The cuts proposed for grants and loans for water and waste disposal programs mean thousands of rural Americans will not have access to safe drinking water.

I understand my time is concluded. I would like a further minute to finish up.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Illinois.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. In closing, Mr. President, for rural America, this bill, in fact, is "Robin Hood in reverse." The cuts on the rural programs are needlessly excessive, and given the fact that the tax breaks called for in this bill are absolutely inconsistent with our objective of deficit reduction, I believe we should recommit this bill back to the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, just outside of Washington is a place called rural America, a place populated by hard-working Americans who are willing to do their share—and then some—to achieve real deficit reduction, but who cannot afford the loss of economic opportunities this bill entails.

Surely we can do better than this bill.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to talk about safety nets. The policy relative to agriculture is designed around a safety net. They have target price tied to some degree to the cost of production. This is a policy that has been established where there is no payment in good years. When you have a bad year, you need a safety net.

The proposal in the House eliminates the safety net. The proposal in the Senate puts gaping holes in the safety net for farmers. The idea of doing away with farm programs over a period of time, in my judgment, fails to realize the calamities, the disasters, that farmers face. They are subject to weather, they are subject to foreign competition, to price changes, all sorts of disastrous effects that can occur to the market.

I think we are making a serious mistake. We have cut agriculture programs from $30 million in 1986 down to $9 million last year. Here we come along with a $13.7 billion further cut in agriculture over 7 years. I think it is too much. We are not doing right by the farmer. We are doing away with the policy of safety net.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I yield a minute of my time to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 1 minute to the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to mention, also, the safety net in regard to rural hospitals and the people.

In effect, what we are doing under the Medicaid and Medicare situation, we are eliminating a safety net for hospitals for rural America. In my judgment that is a mistake.

Safety nets go across the board. In my judgment, this bill is wrong in regard to what it does to rural America.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, 2 minutes is hardly any time at all.

Let me just put it to you this way. This is thoughtless. This is not a farm bill. It is not agricultural policy. It is slash and burn. It is $48 billion over the next 7 years. It plays off children and nutrition programs against family farmers, against the environment. It is a 50-percent cut in the Conservation Reserve Program, which in my State of Minnesota and I bet every State, has brought together those that love outdoor recreation and the environmentalists and the farmers.

This is really, Mr. President, the opposite of a careful policy—the very opposite of a careful policy. What we have here is the worst of all worlds—keep the farm prices low, then have some subsidy. Have the subsidy in inverse relationship to need, with taxpayers having to pick up the cost.

Mr. President, why do we not understand that rural people are not going to stay out of sight and out of mind? Why are we picking on the people that we think do not have the voice, picking on the people we think do not have the power, picking on people who are not the heavy hitters, not the players, are not the big contributors.

That is what this is about. We should not have these tax cuts that go to wealthy people. We should not have a Pentagon budget that is $7 billion over what the Pentagon wanted, and we should not lavish subsidies on most of the major large corporations and financial institutions in the country.

Rural people in Minnesota, the people of greater Minnesota, ask for one thing and one thing only: A fair shake. There is no fair shake and there is no fairness to this plan.

That is why I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this amendment.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I rise to support this motion to recommit. I am deeply concerned about the Republican budget proposal and its all-out assault on rural America. I understand the need to balance the Federal budget. In fact, I've supported balanced budgets. But, I do not think we should do it on the backs of our working families and farming communities. They deserve better treatment than that. Just because the voice of rural Americans is not heard as loudly on Capitol Hill as others does not mean they can be ignored.

This Republican budget attacks rural communities in my State of Washington on a number of fronts. Republican cuts to Medicare will force 157,700 older and disabled rural Washingtonians to pay higher premiums and higher deductibles for a weakened second class Medicare Program. The cuts will increase the severe financial pressure on rural hospitals in Washington. The average rural hospital will lose $5 million in Medicare funding over 7 years, forcing some to close their doors. In addition, the American Medical Association has stated that the Medicare cuts "will unquestionably cause some physicians to leave Medicare". Rural America is already suffering from a shortage of doctors when compared to the Nation as a whole and it will only become worse under this budget. Rural Americans will be paying more for less, and that is unacceptable.

In addition, Medicaid cuts will eliminate coverage for children, nursing home residents, and people in need of long-term care. As many as 2.2 million rural Americans, including 1 million children will be denied medical coverage in 2002 if the Republican plan is adopted. Gordon Lederer, a farmer in Latah, WA, sits on the board of directors of the Tekoa Care Center. Patients pay $90/day at Tekoa, and Mr. Lederer said that the board does not know how the Care Center will continue to provide service to the community if the cuts to Medicaid are enacted.

Mr. President, cuts to the earned income tax credit will cripple working families and their ability to provide for their children in rural Washington. The Republican cuts to EITC raise taxes on 49,945 working families in rural Washington by an average of $388 in 2002, imposing a $1.4 billion tax increase on rural Americans overall. And there's more.

The 25 percent cut to farm programs will reduce farm spending in my State of Washington by $290 million, drastically reducing support for commodity programs. I am particularly concerned about the reductions in the loan rate for wheat. These reductions could threaten the viability of farms in my State. In fact, I just heard from Mack and June Crow, wheat farmers from Oaksdale, WA. Their son now runs the family farm and they are deeply concerned about the impacts of the farm program cuts on their farm's income and hence, their ability to survive. Farms are a symbol of American bounty recognized worldwide. They are a major part of Washington State's export-based economy. Most importantly, they are a way of life that roots us and grounds us in our history and our land. To balance the budget on the backs of family farmers is not only unfair, it is un-American.

Republican cuts to education programs will deny basic and advanced skills education to 937 children in rural Washington. Small town schools in Washington are already having difficulty making ends meet. A 17 percent cut in title I funds will deny these schools crucial assistance as they struggle to adequately prepare our children for the future.

In addition, cuts to rural nutrition, housing, and transportation programs as well as cuts to programs designed to protect the environment and public health add insult to injury, and will further undermine our rural Americans attempts to secure a solid future for themselves and their children.

Mr. President, this Republican plan to balance the budget unfairly targets rural Americans. It burdens them with far more than their fair share of cuts. I therefore encourage my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who care about rural America to support this motion to recommit.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, today my colleagues and I offer an amendment to the budget reconciliation bill that reaffirms our commitment to rural America. This budget before the Senate today will devastate the hard-working farmers and ranchers that provide our Nation's food supply. It will also decimate the main street businesses, schools and hospitals that make up our rural communities. The agricultural cuts in this budget are too extreme, are unfair to rural America and should be restored. Our amendment proposes to do just that.

No one should be fooled. The agricultural provisions in this bill represent the bulk of the farm bill. Buried in this 2,000-page document is the heart and soul of agricultural policy for the next 7 years. There were no hearings during the development of this bill and no opportunity for Democratic input. Now we do not even get a vote on farm policy. It is all rolled up in this enormous budget bill. Everyone knows this is not the way farm bills have been developed in the past.

This farm bill rips the safety net out from under our hard-working producers by cutting $13.4 billion from farm programs over the next 7 years. In South Dakota that translates into a loss of $460 million for our producers. Nationwide net farm income is projected to decrease over $9 billion over the next 7 years. Clearly family farmers who are already disappearing at the rate of 600 per week cannot tolerate this level of income reduction.

The pain of this budget does not stop at the farm gate. It bleeds into our rural hospitals. Ten to fifteen rural hospitals are projected to close in South Dakota if the proposed Medicaid/Medicare cuts are enacted. Some people already have to drive over 50 miles to reach a hospital or doctor. After this budget goes into effect they will have to drive even farther. Add to that the fact that over 2 million rural residents nationwide will be denied Medicaid, and anyone can see that this budget is a recipe for a health care disaster in rural America.

The sad truth of this situation is that it does not have to be this way. This severe level of cuts was required only to finance the lavish tax breaks for the wealthiest of Americans who do not need them. This amendment my colleagues and I are offering provides the opportunity to send the agricultural provisions back to the drawing board and to do it right.

Rural Americans deserve better than what they are getting under this budget. Farmers and ranchers are committed to balancing the budget as long as it is done fairly. Reducing farm income to pay for tax breaks is not remotely fair. No one is asking for a handout—only as fair shake. This budget gives rural America, the very heartland of the Nation, little more than a cold shoulder. We can and should do better than that.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, as I have said previously, this bill is about choices: 2,000 pages of making choices.

All across this country people got up this morning and ate breakfast food. Some ate rice that was crisped, called rice krispies. Some ate flaked corn, called corn flakes; wheat that was puffed, puffed wheat.

It is interesting. We have folks that raise these crops. They plow and raise wheat and corn. Down South they raise rice. Then we have a lot of folks that process it—the ones that put the crisp in it, put the flake in it, put the puff in it.

The big agrifactories have plenty of reason to smile at this. This bill is a really nice deal for them: tax cuts, major advantages.

But, the folks who get up in the morning and plow, they do not have much reason to smile. They get big cuts.

The President said $4.2 billion in cuts. We agreed to that.

But the Republican majority came along and more than tripled it. You cannot write a decent farm program that way. They painted themselves in the corner.

So instead of bringing a farm bill to the floor, which we have always done before, for the first time in history they threw it into a reconciliation bill and hoped nobody would notice.

Their approach is to say to farmers, do not worry. If you are a family farmer in trouble, move to downtown. That is their answer.

It is not an answer for North Dakota, in my judgment. A lot of farm families rely on us writing a decent family farm program. These people work hard, and all they are asking for is a fair shake.

We ought not to ask them to bear the entire burden of all the budget cuts. They have had a 60 percent cut in support prices alone in recent years. Now we are told to take a much higher proportion of cuts than virtually any other area of the Federal budget.

Frankly, it is not fair and it is not right. It ought not be done.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, 2 weeks ago I spent a crisp Monday morning at Claude Bourbeau's farm in St. Albans, VT, with Secretary Dan Glickman and a number of Vermont dairy farmers. I wanted to give him a chance to visit with some hard-working honest folks who will be severely affected by this budget bill.

Many of those farmers are concerned about this budget. I am too. I told the farmers that they lose thousands of dollars a year in revenue under the Senate Republican plan.

I asked the farmers, "Which of you could afford a cut like that?" Not a single hand went up.

It turns out that I was underestimating the impact when I was in Vermont. Just this morning, the Food and Agricultural Policy Research Institute and Texas A&M University released a new study.

This new, independent study says that under the Senate Republican plan, a typical 70-cow dairy farmer in Vermont would see net cash income fall by $9,050—from $31,120 to $22,070—in the next year. The House Republican plan is even worse—it would cost a typical farmer $17,850. Farm income would decline from $31,120 in 1995 to $13,270 in 1996. Under these plans, typical dairy farmers will lose 30 to 60 percent of their annual incomes. These farmers are already working dawn to dusk just to get by.

These numbers are consistent with a new analysis that USDA released a couple of days ago.

When those farmers in St. Albans hear how bad these cuts are, they will be stunned.

This budget is a war on rural America in many ways.

Over 27,000 working families in Vermont alone will see their taxes increase because the Republicans are scaling back the earned income tax credit.

The typical rural hospital will lose $5 million a year or more in Medicare. In rural Vermont, doctors and hospitals will lose $290 million in Medicare funds. I am afraid that doctors will simply abandon the small towns.

Schools in rural Vermont will lose $1.2 million in education funding. Our schools cannot afford that kind of hit.

Republicans want to create giant tax breaks for rich people and big corporations. The average rural family is not wealthy enough to benefit from the Republican budget. In Vermont, 63 percent of taxpayers earn less than $30,000—those are the people who will see their taxes increase.

According to Congressional Research Service, over half of all heads of households working in the agricultural sector qualify for the earned income tax credit, which Republicans cut.

In 1994, 328,000 farm families qualified for the EITC. Many of these were farm laborers, but 100,000 were farm operators and managers. Over one-third of all farm operators and managers nationwide will see their taxes increase under this Republican budget.

This Nation's farmers are struggling, and this budget says to them, "Tough luck."

The Finance Committee cut the EITC but it passed over $200 billion in tax breaks. Most of those tax breaks will benefit families earning over $100,000 a year. Only 3 percent of rural households earn that kind of money.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four minutes.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, this plan for rural America is the equivalent of dropping a neutron bomb in the middle of rural America. Remember the neutron bomb? That is where the buildings remain standing but the people are gone. That is what will happen in much of rural America if this farm plan and this plan for rural America ever becomes law.

The Republican plan would force farmers off the land. In a low-price year, it would mean a 60 percent reduction in net returns to farmers in my State. It would close hospitals in rural areas. The hospital association in my State has just done a survey and they say 26 of the 30 rural hospitals in North Dakota would go to negative returns on their Medicare patients. It would shutter nursing homes and represents unilateral disarmament in the world trade battle over agricultural trade.

We would pull the rug out from our producers at the very time our competitors are already supporting their farmers at a level three times ours. That would be a profound mistake, not only for the rural parts of this country but for the trade balance of the United States.

Agriculture is one of the two areas in which we still enjoy a substantial trade surplus. We ought not to wave the white flag of surrender in this trade fight. We would never do it in a military confrontation. We should not do it in a trade battle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, at this time I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, obviously I rise to oppose the motion that is before us. It may be well intended, but let me tell you, the simple truth is that this amendment will hurt the very people, the very rural America, and the very family farms that, according to their statements, it is intended to help.

People on the other side of the aisle probably do not intend it this way, but the fact of the matter is, with their tax policy, they do not believe in taxation, they believe in confiscation. Because, when you leave high estate taxes, when you leave high capital gains taxes and the impact of inflation on each, you are in a situation where, when you tax inflation, it is confiscation and not taxation.

The estate tax laws, the way they are—and they have not been changed for 15 years; the capital gains tax laws, and they have not been changed since 1986—are tying up a lot of property in rural America that will not move because people are not going to pay confiscatory, high rates of taxation. One sure thing, if you do not need the income and you do not have to sell, you are not going to sell and give it all to the Federal Treasury, because in most of the farms of America, the lifetime of savings is tied up just to create an income and a job for one family.

So, if you want to help rural America, we have to transfer the property from one generation to another, and I do not know how you are going to do that if you do not do it by increasing the exemption and encouraging people to sell their property.

People suggest what we are doing in this reconciliation bill on farm policy is wrong.

The fact is that the President's budget is not good for agriculture because it does not achieve balance in the next 7 years.

The Food and Agriculture Policy Research Institute ran some numbers on the impact of a balanced budget on farm income. They estimate that by the year 2002, under a balanced budget scenario, farmers will save $2.3 billion per year due to expected reductions in interest rates. It is important to note that farming is a very capital-intensive industry and benefits greatly from low interest rates.

Furthermore, FAPRI's preliminary numbers indicate that farmers' cash flow will increase $300 million per year due to the increased economic activity resulting from the balanced budget.

So the net positive impact on farm income from a balanced budget will be $2.6 billion per year. This gain will be lost if we adopt the President's budget numbers.

Mr. President, another vital point that my Democratic colleagues fail to mention is that their doomsday numbers on agriculture assume that the cuts will be made to the program as it is currently structured. They would want you to believe that the Republicans are taking $13.4 billion out of farmer's pockets.

This assumption reveals a lack of understanding about how farm programs work and a failure to recognize the important reforms contained in this bill. The next farm bill will significantly reduce the regulatory burden on farmers, allow farmers to plant for the marketplace, and continue to aggressively promote new markets and new uses for agriculture commodities.

Specifically, farmers will no longer be required to idle productive land because of a mandate from Washington. Furthermore, farmers will have the flexibility to produce whatever commodity they chose in response to market signals. These reform measures, along with reducing the regulatory burden and finding new markets for our products, will lead to an increase in farm income in the future.

It is true that Government payments to farmers will be reduced. But the future of U.S. agriculture must rest on the ability of farmers to earn income from the marketplace. The reforms to the farm programs contained in this budget reconciliation package achieve this goal and will allow our farmers to flourish.

So I urge you to vote against this motion. I yield the floor and yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAIG). Who yields time?

Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, we have moved away again a little bit and have gone into posturing this afternoon, I guess not unusually. There has been a good deal of misinformation floating around this budget and its effect on rural areas with respect to health care. Contrary to what we have heard, there are several provisions designed to recruit providers and to ensure that 24-hour emergency care is available, which we have not had in my State, even though the Senator from Montana has had some in his.

It is interesting, also, that several of the provisions talked about here my friends on the other side of the aisle supported last year when they were in the Clinton health care plan—reducing the updates for inpatient hospital services, section 4101. The Republican plan does not apply 2 percent reductions to all hospitals like the Clinton health care plan did. Rather, it receives the 1 percent reduction.

The copayment for health care services—this is a fee we have heard a great deal about—somehow it was not as devastating last year when it was in Clinton health care plan, section 4134.

But, happily, there are a number of provisions that are most helpful. One is the limited services hospitals. Frankly, there are going to be a continuing number of these in rural areas. With hospitals that are built relatively close together, you simply cannot support the hospital as a coservice hospital because there is not enough utilization. And we have had some experience with this. Under this bill, they can be reorganized and downsized into emergency rooms, or stabilizing facilities, and be reimbursed by HCFA—that is a very important change—so that you will have the facility in the town that cannot afford to have a full-blown hospital.

Medicare-dependent hospitals. The Clinton 1993 budget let this program expire, but the Republican plan reinstates it. The purpose is to assist high Medicare patient loads in Iowa, Wisconsin, Kansas, and other Midwest States. But it also has the extension of the sole community hospital. The Republican plan plans to extend these special payments to hospitals that have 50 beds or less and are 35 miles or more away from the nearest hospital. Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, and other Rocky Mountain States receive the most money.

Medicare HMO payments. It intends to put these on an equal footing and to put some parity in these payments. These HMO payments in Medicare were based on the fee-for-service history. In one instance, in Bronx County in New York, the payment was $678 a month as opposed to South Dakota where it was $177. We need to find some equity in that. This program does that.

Medicare bonus payments, payments to primary care physicians to help hold primary care providers in rural areas, a 10- to 20-percent increase there if they practice in health care professional shortage areas.

These are the things that are in this bill to help rural health areas. Specifically, we have been working on it for several years with our rural health caucus, both in the House and in the Senate.

Telemedicine grants. We are going to find that we can save a great deal of money and provide better services by using telemedicine. There are some grants here that allow for that to be developed as well as to develop systems within rural States to deliver services.

So, Mr. President, contrary to what we have been hearing for the last few minutes, there are some substantial rural health additions to assist in delivering rural health services.

I urge the defeat of this amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BAUCUS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield now to our distinguished leader in agriculture, a strong spokesman in our country for agriculture. I yield 2½ minutes and to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield the remaining time.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. President, in times past, when rural America was hit with droughts or floods, we brought disaster bills to the floor of the Congress. These bills were to ease the suffering of rural communities in hard times and to help stop disasters.

Yesterday morning we were handed this, a brand new 2,000-page disaster bill. But this bill does not cure a disaster in rural America; it provokes one. This is a disaster bill for agriculture. We were supposed to have a farm bill this year with a full debate on a sound food and agriculture policy for the Nation. Instead, agriculture has now been slipped into these 2,000 pages—I bet no one has really read the darned thing—and we have had no opportunity for real debate or amendments.

Once again, agriculture is being forced to take unfair and unreasonable cuts amounting to 25 percent over the next 7 years —even though agriculture has already been reduced significantly and commodity programs amount to about one-half of 1 percent of the budget. One-half of 1 percent, but commodity programs take a 25 percent cut over the next 7 years. Tell me if that is fair.

This is a disaster bill for rural health care. We all know that access to quality, affordable health care in rural communities has been a serious problem for years—especially for seniors. This disaster bill, with its drastic Medicare cuts, makes it even worse in rural America.

This is a disaster bill for America's farm families, who are already having a tough time making ends meet. Net farm income in real dollar terms will be at its lowest level this year since 1986, in the depths of the farm crisis. This disaster bill makes it worse by lowering farm income another $9 billion, according to USDA estimates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The majority controls 15 minutes 30 seconds.

Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I think we are in the process of trying to work out a unanimous-consent agreement that will start us voting. So I am going to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARKIN. May I finish my statement? May I have enough time to finish my statement?

Mr. DOMENICI. How long does the Senator wish to speak?

Mr. HARKIN. For a minute and a half. I was on a roll, and I did not want to stop.

Mr. DOMENICI. Of course; 2 minutes. Can the Senator pick up the roll?

Mr. HARKIN. I will pick up the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is yielded 2 minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the chairman for yielding me an additional amount of time because I did want to make another point—that this 2,000-page bill really destroys our basic commodity programs that we have had to put a safety net under our farm families. It puts a hard cap on deficiency payment rates, doubles the percentage of unpaid base acreage and decimates USDA's ability to respond to price-depressing surpluses.

What if commodity prices and farm income fall as they did in the 1980s? Under this disaster bill, if corn prices fall to $2 a bushel an Iowa farmer with a 350-acre corn base—which is a modest size—would lose over $10,000 of income protection compared to the current farm bill. And, if corn prices fell to $1.80 a bushel, which is not out of the question, that farmer would lose over $17,000 in income protection compared to what we have now in the law.

Also, this is a disaster bill for hungry kids. The nutrition cuts in this bill are excessive and unsupportable. It is unconscionable that this bill is cutting our commitment to school lunches, school breakfasts, summer meals, and the special milk program.

Mr. President, these drastic cuts to rural America are driven by ideology and not by common sense. They are unfair, unreasonable, and unconscionable.

Enough is enough. Rural America is already paying its fair share for deficit reduction. So this amendment offered by the Senator from Montana is to send this disaster bill back to the Finance Committee with instructions to pare back the upper income tax windfalls, and to reduce the assault on rural America.

It is time, Mr. President, to put common sense ahead of ideology and to put the interests of rural communities over the interests of a privileged few.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, our side yields back its time, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. DOLE. I have been informed by Senator DASCHLE, the Democratic leader, that they will limit their amendments that they will offer after all time has expired, and with that commitment I now ask unanimous consent that all first-degree amendments pending to motions to recommit and all pending second-degree amendments be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. This will leave the following issues that need to be disposed of by rollcall votes that have been debated yesterday and up to this point today: The Rockefeller motion concerning Medicare, followed by the Abraham amendment concerning Medicare fraud, and the Bradley motion concerning EITC; the Graham, of Florida, motion concerning Medicaid; Kennedy amendment concerning education; Bumpers motion concerning deficit reduction; Baucus motion concerning rural restoration.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that all votes in this sequence after the first vote be limited to 10 minutes in length, with 2 minutes for explanation between each vote to be equally divided in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I further ask that Senator KASSEBAUM or her designee now be recognized to offer a first-degree amendment concerning education and the time be limited to 10 minutes equally divided in the usual form, with no amendments in order to the amendment, and the vote occur immediately following the vote on or in relation to the Kennedy amendment in the voting sequence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I further ask unanimous consent that the next 10 Republican amendments and the next 10 Democratic amendments be limited to 10 minutes equally divided in the usual form, with no amendments in order to any of the next 20 amendments offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Let me explain to our colleague where we go after the voting sequence that will occur after 10 minutes of debate by Senator KASSEBAUM or her designee. Republicans will be entitled to offer the next three amendments in a row as a result of a previous agreement. Then each side will alternate until the remaining amendments, limited to 10 minutes each, have been debated.

The Senate will then begin voting on those debated amendments, and then begin voting on all amendments Members are going to offer which would have no debate time. We would just offer it. There will be a little explanation. It will be the majority leader's intention to keep the Senate in until approximately midnight tonight and resume the voting sequence until concluded on Friday.

We could vary a little bit either way this evening depending on how much progress we make. And I have discussed this with the Democratic leader. It is our hope that we could finish voting and have final passage by midafternoon tomorrow. That will depend, of course, on whether Members on the other side feel compelled to continue to offer amendment after amendment after amendment when all time has expired. But that will be determined later. And I thank the Democratic leader for his cooperation.

I will be happy to yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank the majority leader for that explanation, and that is in keeping with our agreement. We have three tiers of amendments. We have just completed our work on the first tier, for which now there will be votes, without second-degree amendments.

Once those votes have been completed, we will go to the second tier, for which there will be debate of up to 10 minutes on either side. I should say 10 minutes total for 10 amendments on the Democratic side and 10 amendments on the Republican side.

That will then expire all of the time. We will then go to the third tier of amendments for which there will be no time, and we will encourage Senators to write the purpose of their amendments clearly enough to allow the clerk to read the purpose and give us the opportunity then to vote.

We would also expect that on occasion the managers might find the need to explain a particular amendment. But there would be no time for discussion of that third tier set of amendments.

I think this is a very good agreement. It is what we had hoped to achieve now for some time. I appreciate the cooperation of all of our colleagues on both sides of the aisle. I think this will allow us to accommodate our work and accommodate many of the priorities we have been talking about now for several hours.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I just say to my colleagues this would not be a good day to be absent. Neither will tomorrow be a good day to be absent. I assume there will be anywhere from 40 to 60 votes between now and tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. BAUCUS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. May I inquire of the majority leader when the vote on the Bumpers deficit reduction amendment and Baucus rural restoration amendments will occur. I was a little bit confused as I listened to the leader read the list and then say the Kassebaum amendment would come up after the Kennedy amendment. There was an ambiguous point as to when the vote on the Bumpers amendment and vote on the Baucus amendment would occur.

Mr. DOLE. They will occur after the Kassebaum amendment or her designee. So it will be KASSEBAUM or her designee, then BUMPERS, then BAUCUS.

Mr. BAUCUS. And then the other second-tier amendments?

Mr. DOLE. Then second-tier amendments. And then third-tier amendments, which we hope will find a way to the wastebasket.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, just one clarification, I ask the majority leader. I would expect that we will vote en bloc on the second tier. I wonder if it would not be appropriate to have a minute, 30 seconds on a side, just to remind everybody what that series of second-tier votes are prior to the time we vote. We may have done that. I do not have the agreement in front of me. We are going to do that on the first tier with 2 minutes on a side. We vote on the second tier and have 30 seconds on a side just to be sure people understand.

Mr. DOLE. I so amend my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. One minute equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One minute equally divided.

Mr. DOLE. Divided very quickly.

Mr. DASCHLE. That is right.

Mr. DOMENICI. Could I ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. We have agreed to this, have we not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Could I ask, yesterday, when the Abraham amendment was being discussed on fraud and abuse, we heard a comment from your side that it would be accepted. If that is still the case, we can just save a little bit of time. We are up against time constraints. I wonder if that is still the case.

Mr. DASCHLE. I would want to consult with our ranking member. It is my understanding we would be able to accept it, but let me confirm that after consultation.

Mr. DOMENICI. In any event, we are not precluding that and if the Senator could find that out, we would save a little bit of time.

Mr. President, I am informed that the other side ought not work too hard on that request. It may be that we do not want you to say yes to our request.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I would ask that the quorum call not be taken from either side as it relates to the time available on the bill, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The quorum call at this time will not be charged.

Mr. DOMENICI. It would not be because a vote is pending in any event. We are just following the rules?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is correct.

The absence of a quorum has been noted. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii off the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii has been yielded 3 minutes.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise to express my deep concern about the provisions in the reconciliation bill relating to Medicare and Medicaid. In my judgment, the proposals are a danger to the health of millions of Americans. House and Senate Republicans have called for a reduction of roughly $450 billion in health care expenditures over the next 7 years.

They argue that they are merely reducing program growth, not cutting Medicare. But the facts tell us a different story. We have very good estimates of what it will cost to fund the Medicare program over the next 7 years. The fact is that more people will become eligible and we will continue to have health care inflation.

The Republican proposal would cut Medicare below both the medical inflation rate and the private sector rate by cutting $270 billion, for tax breaks, from what is needed to fund the Medicare program. We are not just scaling back Medicare, we are eroding its foundation.

Medicare experts estimate that keeping part A solvent through the year 2006 requires $89 billion in cuts, not the $270 billion called for under the GOP proposal. Those who want to cut Medicare argue that cuts are necessary to get us to a balanced budget in 7 years. That puzzles me.

If the objective of this bill is to balance the budget, why are we simultaneously considering a plan to cut taxes by $245 billion over the same period? Clearly, the vast majority of the cuts are not needed to keep Medicare solvent, but are needed to pay for new tax breaks.

I am deeply concerned about the size of the Medicare and Medicaid cuts, and the fact that the savings will be diverted to provide tax breaks for the wealthy. But my foremost concern is the impact these proposals will have on the poor, elderly, and the disabled who will be drastically hurt.

Under the Republican proposal, Medicare premiums and deductibles will increase, and the quality and availability of care will be seriously compromised. Seventy-five and eighty-five percent of Medicare beneficiaries have incomes under $25,000, and the increase in out-of-pocket costs could make Medicare coverage unaffordable for many. Furthermore, the portion of cuts that do not fall on beneficiaries directly will be borne by the providers who deliver Medicare services. These cuts will be shifted to the rest of the population in the form of higher medical bills and higher health insurance costs.

I would also like to discuss briefly the provisions of the bill pertaining to the Medicaid Program. In addition to cutting $182 billion in Medicaid over 7 years, the proposal before us replaces the current Medicaid Program with a block grant capped at fixed dollar amounts each year. The bill would offer only minimal coverage and benefits, eliminate all Federal Standards for providers and delivery systems, and abolish the Federal standards set for nursing homes and institutions caring for the mentally retarded.

In 1987, national standards for nursing home care were established with broad bipartisan support. These standards were designed to protect nursing home patients because of the horrendous treatment many were receiving and because State regulations were inadequate. Yet the Republican plan to cut Medicaid by $182 billion contains a provision repealing the national standards for nursing homes, even though these standards have improved care substantially.

Mr. President, we all agree that we must balance the Federal budget. However, we must do it the right way. We must ensure a basic safety net and make adequate investments for the future. I question the priorities set forth in this legislation. This bill does not safeguard health care for our Nation's elderly, poor, or disabled; it does not ensure proper care of vulnerable people in nursing homes; and it certainly does not make adequate investments in our future.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that we recognize the tremendous benefits these programs have made in our society and urge that we continue the fight for dignity and security for our Nation's most vulnerable as we work to balance the Federal budget.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, this budget bill is a raw deal for Vermont. It makes deep and unnecessary cuts in Medicaid, Medicare, student loans, and dairy programs that will devastate our economy for years to come. And it will raises taxes on 63 percent of working Vermont families. This is the wrong way to try to balance the budget.

This bill cuts Medicaid by $182 billion over the next 7 years and turns this vital program into a block grant to the States. Over the next 7 years, these cuts will reduce Federal Medicaid payments to Vermont by $205 million. This plan defaults on our guarantee that seniors would receive health care assistance when they need it the most.

Vermont's acceptance of this enormous responsibility would leave the State hundreds of millions of dollars short of funds to provide necessary health care over the next 7 years.

The plan also eliminates requirements for nursing homes to provide proper health standards, a loophole that will be seized by some to lower the quality of care and life in these institutions.

It is not an easy decision to place a parent or a spouse in a nursing home, but often it is the only alternative to ensure that they get proper care. And it will be even more difficult if the Republican plan prevails.

The bill cuts Medicare by $270 billion over the next 7 years. It will cut payment rates to providers and hospitals, make seniors pay higher premiums and increase deductibles. Vermont will lose $356 million in Medicare payments over the next 7 years, losing $88 million in 2002 alone.

In Vermont, 73 percent of our elderly population have incomes of less than $15,000. And 1 dollar of every 5 dollars of that fixed income is spent on health care. Yet Republicans are cutting Medicare and Medicaid to finance tax cuts that will mostly benefit Americans making over $100,000 a year—less than 3 percent of Vermonters make that kind of money.

Republicans have the gall to tell us that these massive cuts are supposed to "preserve, protect and strengthen Medicare." I think William Wells of Rutland, Vermont, who recently wrote to me, had the right response to this claim.

With true Vermont common sense, Mr. Wells wrote: I have heard politicians say "they want to save Medicare." Their way of saving Medicare is like a hunter 'saving' a moose by shooting it and having it mounted by a taxidermist. It is still there but no longer functional.

Let us be honest with the American people. Congress can balance the Medicare budget and keep the system solvent—but the cuts must be gradual and spread over a longer period of time.

For 30 years, Medicare and Medicaid have contributed greatly to the decline in poverty and improved the health of seniors in America. We are now asked to turn our backs on the elderly and distribute the "savings" among our wealthiest citizens.

Mr. President, I will oppose any plan that attempts to dismantle the health care delivery system that has served our Nation's seniors so well.

This bill also makes short-sighted cuts in education. It cuts student loan programs by $10 billion over the next 7 years. Students will be hit with 70 percent of these cuts—increasing the costs to the 20,000 Vermonters receiving higher education and their families by at least $5,800 over the life of a student loan. Because of rising tuition costs, Congress should be working to make education more affordable—not less.

These additional financial burdens will discourage many students to continue their education after high school. The Contract With America has sealed the fate of the next generation of Americans. They may never have the chance of post-high-school training or a college education—the key to a better paying job.

This bill also makes deep cuts in our dairy program. The Senate plan scraps the price support system for butter and nonfat milk and sharply limits the price supports for cheese. Under the bill, the average Vermont dairy farm will lose more than $7,000 a year in revenue. These dairy cuts will deal another blow to Vermont's dwindling family farms.

At a time when many working Vermonters are struggling to make ends meet, the Senate Republican budget would hike Federal taxes on low- and moderate-income families by cutting $43 billion from the earned income tax credit—a program that rewards work and compensates for low-wages.

This Federal tax increase will also raise State taxes in seven states, including Vermont, that have a State earned income tax credit tied to the federal credit. As a result, 27,000 Vermont working families earning less than $30,000 a year—about 63 percent of Vermont taxpayers—will be forced to pay higher taxes. This is a double whammy on working families.

Mr. President, this budget bill is a raw deal for Vermont. It will leave my home State in an economy crisis for years to come. And I will urge the President to veto it.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995 is proof that this Congress is willing to make the difficult decisions that are needed to balance our Federal budget. That there is agreement between Congress and the executive branch, between Republicans and Democrats, and between the House of Representatives and the Senate, of the need to balance the budget at a date certain is a victory in and of itself. While we may not all agree on how to accomplish that feat, we are at least all proceeding toward a common goal.

This legislation continues the effort that is already underway in the Appropriations Committee to balance the budget. To date the Appropriations Committee has reduced Federal spending by $24 billion. My colleagues who have worked to put this legislation together know full well that reducing spending is not an easy task. However, given the size of the national debt, all members know that we must act now and make those tough choices.

The prime example that we are ready to make tough choices is proven in this bill's attempt to reign in the exponential growth in entitlement spending. Earlier this year I stated on this floor that I was sobered by the demise of the Bipartisan Commission on Entitlements and Tax Reform. The Commission was unable to agree on a specific set of recommendations on how to address the issue of continued entitlement growth. I am very happy that the taboo of reforming entitlements may finally be gone. Entitlement spending will continue to grow from 49 percent of the Federal budget in 1995 to 59 percent of the total budget in 2002. Based on these numbers it is clear the entitlement beast has not been slain, but at least the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995 takes us in the right direction on the entitlement issue.

Like many Members in this chamber, I have some disagreements with the spending decisions in this legislation ad drafted. One of those areas of disagreement relates to the $11 billion reduction in education spending over 7 years. Some members have argued that this cut is small in comparison to total spending in this area, or that the impact is painless on a per person basis. What these arguments fail to consider is the critical role education plays in the success of the Nation's children, the success of this Nation's industries, and the success of this Nation's standing in the world community. Education is an investment in the future. The Senate would be shortsighted to cut this investment short. I plan to work with my colleagues to ensure that this provision can be fixed before the Senate finishes its work on this legislation.

I am also concerned that this legislation deals a blow to States that have been innovative in addressing the rise in health care costs. The State of Oregon began an experiment in 1994 to expand health care coverage to more Oregonians. The Oregon Health Plan, as it is known, has increased access to basic health care to more than 120,000 low-income Oregonians. This has been accomplished by making rational choices about the effectiveness of health care services and making the delivery system more efficient. Already Oregon has seen significant results. Our costs per beneficiary are 10 percent less than the national average; hospital charity care has decreased by 30 percent; emergency room visits are down by over 5 percent; and our welfare caseloads have decreased by 8 percent in the past year. Unfortunately the legislation before the Senate would inadvertently penalize Oregon for being innovative in its delivery of medical services. I am working with the leadership to ensure that this type of creativity and effective governing is not penalized.

There are a number of tough choices in this legislation and the authors should be commended for their work. However, given the fact that 15 percent of the current budget is spent to pay interest on the debt, these tough choices need to be made. We have before us a proposal that will do the job. While I would like to see some reordering of priorities in the legislation, I am looking forward to working with my colleagues to assure that a balanced budget becomes a reality.

PENSION REVERSIONS

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today in opposition to a provision in the budget reconciliation legislation before us that could put at risk the pensions of hard-working Americans. Specifically, I refer to the provision allowing corporations to take money out of funds deemed overfunded by the IRS for deductibility purposes, and use that money for other employee benefits, without paying an excise tax. Of course, because money transferred in this manner is fungible, the money could actually be used for almost any purpose.

The principal problem with this provision is that pensions funds considered overfunded by IRS for tax policy consideration are not overfunded on an actuarial termination basis. As I understand it, this means that while the plans have enough money to meet their current ongoing obligations, if for some reason the plan terminated, the people who had paid into that plan would have no guarantee that the plan could provide the pension benefits that they earned over the years. In such a case, the U.S. taxpayer, through the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation [PBGC], would be forced to step in and pay the benefits.

Mr. President, we know that workers are concerned about their ability to retire with a decent standard of living. We also know that our Nation is suffering from a lack of savings and capital for economic expansion, and that institutional investors like pension funds are the single largest investors in capital. It therefore makes absolutely no sense to me to provide an incentive to decrease pension security, savings, and available capital through provisions like the one included in the budget reconciliation legislation before us.

I think we should be doing more to promote sound pension plans, and expand coverage for American workers. This provision seems to me to be doing just the opposite: putting existing plans at greater risk without expanding coverage. In the time since this and a similar House provision have come to the public's attention, numerous pension experts, including the American Academy of Actuaries and the PBGC, have expressed concern about the effect this provision could have on pension fund soundness. I have also heard from constituents expressing similar concerns. For all of these reasons, I urge my colleagues to strike this provision.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, in many respects this is an amazing debate we are having today, a debate I was not sure I would ever see—should we, or should we not, pass a bill which will get our budget into balance over the next 7 years.

It is historic. It is bold. It is unprecedented. And judging by the reaction, it is real.

Unfortunately, $5 trillion in debt has piled up waiting for this day, so even with this action, we are still passing on a huge debt to our children and their children.

When I first got to Washington, after coming from State government where we had to balance the budget every year, I was amazed at the cavalier attitude taken by so many about budget crisis.

It did not take me long to learn that walking away from budget problems had become so ingrained that success was defined as holding the deficit to only $200 billion—meaning we only added $1 trillion to the debt every 5 years.

Unfortunately, that is where President Clinton remains today. While we are willing to put before the public the real questions—when do we stop adding to the debt? When do we get serious about slowing the growth of runaway programs? When will Congress be willing to actually say No to a special interest, or a pet program and say "Sorry, I'm worried about adding to my kid's debt."

No one said it would be easy—but with the leadership of Senator DOMENICI, and the willingness of Members to stand up and vote for action instead of just talking a good game—this Senate will soon take that step.

Make no mistake, the step is a big one, as for the first time in 25 years Congress has the opportunity to pass a budget which will get us to a surplus—rather than just keep adding to our debt.

The budget before us is tough. It sets priorities. It recognizes that government cannot do it all. And it makes the statement that the time has come for leaders of today to start paying attention to the financial and economic devastation thy are creating for tomorrow's generations.

We have heard many speeches about the need to cut spending, reduce the deficit, and get our Nation's books into balance. Everyone who looks at our nearly $5 trillion debt recognizes the need to do something so that we don't keep piling on that debt for our children and grandchildren.

Over the next few days the American people will have a rare opportunity to see exactly what the political leadership's visions for our country's future are.

Too often Congress legislates for the present, ignoring the costs for the future. Political expediency replaces thoughtful debate, and at the end of the day it is with shock and dismay that the public finally realizes what has occurred—and recognizes what additional debt they or their children will be forced to pay.

It takes a long time to build up a $5 trillion debt. And even starting today it will take 7 years to get us to a balance, meaning that we won't even begin paying off a dime of debt until 2002.

Some would like us to put off the tough choices for a little longer. Others have abandoned finding a solution to the real budget crisis we are facing in their zeal to make political points. And still others claim to be on board with the concept of balancing the budget—they just don't like our approach.

But as I have said before—talk is cheap. If you say you want to balance the budget, let's see your plan.

If you say you understand Medicare is going broke, and must be fixed, let's see your plan.

Unfortunately, what we have seen and heard so far is much heat—and no light.

Medicare is one of the best examples. Medicare today is paying out in claims more than it is collecting in premiums. It is only because of the interest earned on the trust fund's surplus that Medicare is not insolvent right at this moment.

This means that as I speak, for every dollar a senior is paying in, more than a dollar in claims is being paid out. So why is everyone not saying stop, something has to be done?

Next year even including the interest earned on the trust fund's won't be enough to pay out all the claims. Thus next year Medicare will be insolvent, and it will be forced to start eating into its rainy day fund—the money which has been built up in order to be available for the baby boomers who start to retire in the next decade.

And then if nothing is done, by the year 2002 the surplus will be gone and the entire program will be bankrupt and will be forced to shut down.

So again I ask, why is the President not saying we must do something to fix this drastic problem—not just delay it again like has been done so often before—but actually fix it?

Why are my colleagues in the Democratic party not saying let us get to work on this problem?

Instead they want to paper over the problems in Medicare, only fiddling around the edges, while making no effort to make fundamental changes in the program as we realize must be done. We want to make savings by giving seniors a real choice—they offer a 2-year bandaid to get them beyond the next election.

So what does our bill do? It takes on the task of reforming and overhauling Medicare—both to protect it for today's seniors, as well as preserve it for tomorrow's. It also expands choices, and bring the program of the 1960's into the health care system of the 1990's. And it gives us 25 years of additional solvency—versus the 25 months of the Democrats' plan.

How much clearer can the choice be? A thoughtful long-term solution—or a get-me-through one more election BandAid.

Mr. President this debate is much bigger than Medicare. It is much bigger than Medicaid, agriculture, civil service retirement, or welfare. It is about what financial legacy we want to leave to our next generations.

It is about whether people believe that $5 trillion in debt is enough, and whether we in Congress have the courage to hit the spending brakes.

I hope we do. And hope that the President will find the courage to do the same.

Finally, I would like to express my opposition to the amendment that the senior senator from Arizona has indicated he plans to offer.

That amendment would, allegedly, eliminate 12 pork programs—a goal I would support if it delivered on that promise. Unfortunately, however, the amendment would target several programs which are critical to our international competitiveness and our ability to create high-paying export jobs. Let me quickly touch on just a few examples:

First, the amendment would require the Export Import Bank to raise loan fees which would have the impact of making Exim financing uncompetitive vis-a-vis other countries' export finance agencies. That means U.S. companies will lose deals and U.S. workers will lose jobs.

Second, it would reimpose recoupment fees on commercial sales of military equipment overseas. The Bush administration eliminated this fee because it was making U.S. export uncompetitive and costing jobs. It makes no sense to reimpose it.

Third, it would cancel NASA's subsonic and supersonic research programs. These programs are aimed at ensuring U.S. aerospace companies retain their technological edge into the 21st century. If it becomes technically possible, it will be economically viable to build only one supersonic airplane. I want that plane to be built by Boeing or McDonnell Douglas, not by Airbus.

CAPITAL GAINS—FAIRNESS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we need to consider some very important facts concerning the fairness of the capital gains tax rate reduction in the reconciliation bill before us.

We have heard some statements here on the Senate floor over the past few days by some of our colleagues who believe that a broad-based capital gains tax rate reduction somehow favors the rich at the expense of middle- and lower-income taxpayers. I want to set the record straight on this issue.

WHO PAYS CAPITAL GAINS TAXES?

First, Mr. President, let us start by examining who pays capital gains taxes in this country.

The fact of the matter is that most of the tax returns reporting capital gains come from taxpayers in the lower- and middle-income categories.

Since there are varying views as to where the middle-income category begins and ends, I have prepared two pie charts contained within chart 1 to illustrate who these taxpayers are.

The pie on the left shows that, on average, from 1985 to 1992, 62 percent of all returns reporting capital gains came from those reporting $50,000 or less of adjusted gross income [AGI]. I repeat, 62 percent. This amounted to more than 5½ million taxpayers per year.

The pie on the right, Mr. President, shows the same information for taxpayers with higher incomes, but still within what most would consider as the middle-income category.

As you can see, 79 percent of all returns reporting capital gains came from those reporting $75,000 or less of AGI. On average, this was over 7 million taxpayers per year.

Capital gains realization is hardly the exclusive domain of the rich.

Actually, these figures dramatically understate the number of people in the lower- and middle-income categories who will benefit from the capital gains deduction.

It is estimated that about 44 percent of all people reporting capital gains recognize such gains in only 1 out of 5 years, on average.

In 1986 alone, of the 7.6 million returns reporting capital gains, 3.1 million of these taxpayers reported no capital gains in the previous year.

THE "OCCASIONAL RECOGNITION PHENOMENON"

Since many taxpayers do not have capital gains each year, it is obvious that there are millions more of lower- and middle-income taxpayers than this chart indicates who will benefit from a lower capital gains tax rate.

This occasional recognition phenomenon also illustrates why the numbers cited for the rich are consistently overstated by capital gains tax cut opponents.

By only looking at 1-year segments, capital gains tax cut opponents erroneously conclude that once a taxpayer experiences an unusually large capital gains recognition in a particular year, he or she will stay in the rich category forever. Such is simply not the case.

Take, for example, a typical farming couple in Cache County, UT, who has struggled over the years to make ends meet and finally decides to sell the farm and move to the warmer climate of southern Utah.

Even though this couple may never have reported more than $30,000 of farming income in any given year, in that 1 year of sale they will be lumped in with the rich because they reported a $250,000 of gain on the sale of their farm.

To conclude that this couple is rich because they realized a large capital gain in only 1 year of their life is ridiculous. Yet, this is exactly the basis for many of the statistics given by my friends on the other side of this issue.

One study looked at those reporting over $200,000 of income per year from 1981 to 1984. Taking just single-year snapshots of the realizations, such taxpayers accounted for almost 40 percent of all capital gains reported.

However, when the entire 4-year period was considered as a whole and the occasional nature of recognitions was taken into account, their proportional share dropped to just 22 percent.

Thus, the more years that are included in the comparison, the smaller the share of gains going to the so-called rich.

Let me repeat, Mr. President, studies that show lower- and middle-income taxpayers who receive an occasional larger capital gain as being rich are misleading.

OPPONENTS IGNORE BENEFIT TO LOWER- AND MIDDLE-CLASS TAXPAYERS

Now, I am the first to admit that some who are truly wealthy will benefit from a lower capital gains tax rate, and rightly so, as I will discuss in a few moments.

However, the impact of the benefits of a capital gains tax cut to the wealthy are greatly overstated, while the positive benefits to lower- and middle-income taxpayers are mostly ignored by those who oppose this change.

For example, a Treasury Department study estimates that nearly half of the dollar value of all capital gains are reported by taxpayers reporting wage and salary income of $50,000 or less.

Moreover, the same study estimates that three-fourths of all tax returns with capital gains are filed by taxpayers with wage and salary income of less than $50,000. Yet, to listen to capital gains tax opponents, one could conclude that only the rich would be affected by a lower rate.

Mr. President, to get a better feel for how many lower- and middle-income taxpayers will actually benefit from the capital gains deduction in this bill, consider the following.

It is estimated that about 12 million lower- and middle-income workers participate in some sort of stock equity plans with their employers—12 million.

Moreover, many millions of Americans own investments in stocks, bonds, and mutual funds. In fact, as of September 1994, there were 93.6 million mutual fund accounts in America. It is interesting to note that 52 percent of the 30.2 million families owning mutual funds report incomes of $50,000 or below and that 80 percent of those families report incomes of $75,000 or below. This is middle America. This is the teacher who married the police officer planning for their future.

In addition, millions of people in the lower- and middle-income categories own homes and rental properties that could be subject to capital gains taxes upon sale. This bill will benefit all of these taxpayers.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX RATE DIFFERENTIALS

Mr. President, it is well known that in 1986, Congress raised the capital gains tax rates on the rich, from a 20-percent top rate to a 28-percent top rate. What is lesser known, however, is that we raised capital gains taxes on middle-income taxpayers as well.

For example, a family of four earning the median income saw a 50-percent increase in their capital gains tax rate. A family of four earning twice the median income—and these would be the upper middle class rather than the rich—saw a 47 percent increase in their capital gains tax rate.

In 1990, Congress once again created a differential between the top tax rate on capital gains income and the top tax rate for ordinary income.

By putting in a new 31 percent bracket, but keeping the top rate on capital gains income at 28 percent, we once again began to favor capital gains income—for some.

The differential was further increased in 1993 when Congress created the 36 and 39.6 percent tax brackets and again capped the capital gains tax rate at 28 percent. The result is that taxpayers in the highest brackets currently enjoy a lower rate on capital gains, but those in the 15 percent and 28 percent brackets do not.

As you can see from chart 2, Mr. President, this bill remedies this situation by giving those in the lowest tax brackets the largest percentage reductions in their effective capital gains tax rates.

Note that the wealthiest Americans will get only a 25-percent decrease in their effective capital gains tax rates, while those in the lowest tax brackets will enjoy a full 50-percent reduction.

Not only will large investors receive incentives to create jobs, but this relief will now be enjoyed by smaller investors as well.

It is high time that lower- and middle-income families get some meaningful capital gains tax relief. For the first time in years, lower-income taxpayers will enjoy single digit rates of taxation on their capital gains.

INFLATION

One of the best reasons for a cut in the capital gains tax rate is that a sizeable portion of all capital gains reported are caused by inflation. In fact, economists estimate that on average, about half of all capital gains are inflationary in nature.

Mr. President, I have never heard anyone try to argue that taxing inflationary gains is fair—either for the rich or for anyone else. There is simply nothing fair about having to pay tax on inflationary gains.

In fact, a tax on inflationary capital gains is not a tax on income at all or even on the increase in the real value of the asset. It is purely a tax on capital, very much like the property tax, but assessed only when the property is sold.

This bill helps to ameliorate inflationary gains by providing a 50-percent capital gains deduction. In most cases, this should effectively nullify the tax on the inflation element. This is fair tax treatment—for everyone.

TAX DISTRIBUTION

Many of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have expressed concern that the dollar amounts of a capital gains tax cut will go disproportionately to those in the highest tax brackets. Let me make three points about this, Mr. President.

First, despite the continual rantings and ravings by liberals about tax breaks for the rich, our tax system has gotten more and more progressive over the past years, as illustrated by chart 3.

Note that in 1993, the top 1 percent of all taxpayers paid almost 29 percent of all income taxes while the bottom 50 percent of all taxpayers paid less that 5 percent.

Since 1980, our income tax system has gotten much more progressive. If capital gains tax cut opponents think our system is so drastically unfair, I want to ask them a question: If these percentages do not satisfy you, what percentages will?

Second, many millions of American families currently pay no Federal income taxes at all. It makes little sense to talk about these people in terms of tax relief. A hundred percent of zero is still zero.

By definition, it is impossible to give income tax relief to those who pay no income taxes in the first place. If we want to talk about taking from higher-income taxpayers and giving to lower-income taxpayers, let us call it what it really is—welfare.

Third, opponents of capital gains tax relief must assume that wealthier taxpayers who realize capital gains take the money and bury it in the back yard or stuff it into a mattress.

Opponents ignore the fact that this money is almost always immediately put back into the economy, where it goes to work creating jobs and adding to investment capital available for business creation or expansion. The ultimate fairness of the cut in the capital gains tax is that economic and job opportunities will be enhanced for all Americans because of this bill.

In conclusion, Mr. President, for the reasons cited in chart 4, I firmly believe that the capital gains tax cut provisions in this bill are fair. They are fair for all American families because all American families will derive a great deal of benefit from them.

I sincerely hope that my colleagues will take the time to consider the points I have made and vote in favor of this much-needed reform to our tax law.

The bottom line, as I see it, is that our current capital gains tax rates are an effective tax on initiative, investment, and planning ahead—all things that we say we should encourage people to do.

It is time for our tax policy to reflect our national values.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the two tables referred to in my statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Chart No. 1—Who reports capital gains?

	Percent
AGI >$50,000, 3.4 million people	38
AGI of $50,000 or less, 5.5 million people	62
2.9 million people, AGI >$75,000	21
AGI of $75,000 or less, 7 million people	79

Source: Treasury Department.

CHART NO. 2—WHO ENJOYS THE GREATEST TAX RATE REDUCTION?

[In percent]

Income tax brackets:	39.6	36	31	28	15
Current capital gains tax rate	28	28	28	28	15
Effective rate under this bill:	21	18	15.5	14	7.5
Percentage Reduction:	25	36	45	50	50

* Assumes the Alternative Minimum tax applies.

CHART NO. 4.—WHY IS THE CAPITAL GAINS DEDUCTION FAIR?

It gives the largest percentage decrease to those in the lower tax brackets.

Most of the returns filed showing capital gains come from lower- and middle income taxpayes.

It reverses the 1986 capital gains tax increase on the middle-class.

It reduces, if not eliminates, the cruel and unjustifiable tax on inflationary gains.

It stimulates the economy to create more jobs and opportunity for those on the lower rungs of the economic ladder.

PMA VICTORY

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I rise today to declare victory for rural community and small city electric ratepayers. I am pleased that both the House and the Senate budget reconciliation bills do not contain any language requiring a sale of the Southeastern, Southwestern or Western Power Marketing Administrations—collectively known as the PMAs. As I have stated on this floor many times before, this is a critical issue to my fellow South Dakotans.

As my colleagues know, during Senate consideration of the Budget Resolution earlier this year, my colleague from Montana, Senator BAUCUS, and I offered an amendment that expressed the Senate's opposition to the sale of the Southwestern, Southeastern and Western Area Power Administrations. The Senate voted overwhelmingly against a motion to table that amendment.

The balanced budget reconciliation bill now before us reflects the wishes of the Senate. The PMAs represent a government program that works. They provide affordable power to rural communities and small cities and still manage to turn a profit for the Federal Government.

As I have said again and again, sale of the PMAs would have a devastating effect on South Dakota citizens in rural communities and small cities—and on people across the country.

Public power serves many functions in South Dakota. As a sparsely populated State, utilities are faced with the challenge of how to get affordable electricity for those who live in small cities and rural communities where there are less than two people per mile of transmission line. Public power provides the solution.

Public power, purchased through the Western Area Power Administration, known as WAPA, costs South Dakotans an average of 2.5 cents less than the market rate. This lower cost is essential to encourage economic development in small cities and towns. It allows revenue to be reinvested in additional transmission lines, and better service. The availability of hydropower from the Missouri River to rural cooperatives and municipalities has helped to stabilize power rates. With 7,758 miles of transmission lines in the Pick-Sloan region, WAPA can serve 133,100 South Dakotans—without charging them an arm and a leg.

Public power has brought more than electricity to South Dakota. For example, Missouri Basin Municipal Power

Agency, based in Sioux Falls, has embarked on a program offering incentives for planting trees. The goal is to plant at least one tree for each 112,500 meters in the Agency's membership territory.

Public power also brings new jobs to the communities it serves. In part due to the low cost of power from East River Electric, there are now three injection molding plants based in Madison, SD.

East River Electric also is involved in other economic development activities. It provides classes to help the community attract new businesses, and offers grants for feasibility studies associated with economic development projects. South Dakota clearly has benefitted from the work of Jeff Nelson, the general manager of the East River Electric Power Cooperative.

Public power is a South Dakota success story. It is a source of innovation, development, and community pride. I am sure the same is true in other small cities and rural communities across America. That is why I fought against proposals to sell WAPA and two other power marketing administrations. The proposal to sell the PMAs was a budgetary smoke-and-mirrors effort to disguise a backdoor tax on rural and small city Americans.

In fact, a PMA sale would force South Dakotans—and public power consumers everywhere—to cover for the rest of America. Why? Because the sale of the PMAs could result in rate increases totaling more than $47 million.

Some argued that the sale of the PMAs would generate revenue for the Federal Government. Would it? Let us look at the facts.

PMAs still owe almost $15 billion in principal. Also, more than $9 billion in interest already has been paid to the Federal Government. By selling the PMAs, the government would forfeit future interest earning on the outstanding loans.

In fact, the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] recently released its scoring of a House proposal to sell the Southeastern Power Administration [SEPA]. The proposal, approved by the House Transportation and Natural Resources Committees, limited the sale only to actual power generation and the right to market the power.

CBO scored the House proposal to sell SEPA at zero—showing that the sale would cause no gain or loss to the Treasury. In other words, CBO certified what I have said all along—that a PMA sale would not generate net revenue.

In addition, CBO estimated that the proposal to sell SEPA would cause rates to increase up to 75 percent in some areas. CBO noted that the supposed rate "cap" included in the House proposal would do nothing to protect 95 percent of the rural electric cooperatives or municipal utilities that buy power from SEPA from significant rate increases. This proves what South Dakotans have known all along—selling the PMAs would rob rural ratepayers and destroy a vital community resource.

Mr. President, I am pleased that with strong bipartisan support, we fought successfully to prove the worth of public power. We demonstrated how necessary it is to the lives of rural and small city Americans. I am proud of the people of South Dakota who have stated their message loud and clear—through thousands of postcards, letters, and phone calls. South Dakotans such as Ron Holsteen, Bob Martin, and Jeff Nelson have been leaders in their opposition to the proposed PMA sale and I again congratulate them and commend their hard work. They and their counterparts are the true heroes in this victorious battle.

Public power is a solid investment for the Nation. Public power is one of the great success stories of South Dakota. There is no question: For now, we have won the war for the continued existence of public power. This is a victory for all Americans who reside in small cities and rural communities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Would the Senator from New Mexico suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. DOMENICI. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I thank the Senator.

The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to Senator KYL off the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Thank you, Mr. President. If there is a single vote on which the American people will judge the success or the failure of this Congress, if there is a single vote this session that will change the course of American history, it will be the vote on the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act, which is before us today.

This single vote will determine whether we finally face up to the grim reality of a national debt that is $4.9 trillion and growing daily, a debt that now amounts to $18,500 for every man, woman and child in this country, or whether we continue the spending spree that we have been on for the last 20 years at the expense of our children and grandchildren.

This single vote is more important than the votes on the balanced budget amendment and the line-item veto. Those are the tools that will help us balance the budget and keep it there. This bill actually balances the budget.

This single vote will determine whether we keep the promises we made to the American people last fall that we would balance the budget and provide badly needed tax relief or whether it is business as usual: Promises out the door as soon as it is time to make the final decisions, the difficult decisions.

I believe that this Congress, the new majority and the American people who sent us here last year believe that it is different. We have spoken, we have worked, we have voted for the fiscal restraint for years but never had the votes in the Congress to prevail. This time is different. We finally have the chance and the numbers to prove what we say is what we mean: That Government is too big, that it costs too much, that it intrudes too far into the lives of our people and that, finally, we are willing to do something about it.

Mr. President, this is the most crucial vote that we will cast, and I am assuming that the majority of this body will support this Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act and put this country on the right course for the next century.

I believe this Congress—the new majority that the American people sent here last year—is different. We have spoken, we have worked, we have voted for fiscal restraint for years, but have never had the votes in Congress to prevail. This time is different. We finally have the chance, and the numbers, to prove that we mean what we say—that government is too big, it costs too much, and it intrudes too far into the lives of our people—and that we are willing to do something about it.

Former Education Secretary Bill Bennett probably said it best in testimony before the Budget Committee earlier this year. He said:

> We have created a nanny state that takes too much from us in order to do too much for us. This has created inefficiency, sapped individual responsibility, and intruded on personal liberty.

Mr. President, it is time to change course.

Fourteen years ago, President Reagan embarked on a similar mission to curb Federal spending, cut taxes, and reduce regulation. He succeeded in cutting taxes—and that launched the longest peacetime economic expansion in our Nation's history. And, I will talk about that a little more later.

Yes, deficits soared. But that was not because of the tax cuts. It was because the majority in Congress at the time did not have the courage or the will to limit Federal spending.

In the budget we have before us, spending growth is limited to about 3 percent a year. Had Congress been able to exercise the same restraint beginning in fiscal year 1982—the first year President Reagan had full control of the budget—the budget would not only have balanced in fiscal year 1989, there would actually have been a $73.5 billion surplus. Instead, Congress let spending grow by about twice that rate. Spending skyrocketed from $745.8 billion in fiscal year 1982 to $1.1 trillion by fiscal year 1989.

So even as revenues grew dramatically—from $617.8 billion in fiscal year 1982 to $990.7 billion in fiscal year 1989—the deficit soared because spending grew faster. A 60.4-percent increase in revenues was not enough for the spendthrift majority in Congress.

To my colleagues who say this is no time for a tax cut, let me tell you that the middle-class tax cut in our budget does not come at the expense of a balanced budget, but as a result of one. It is the dividend that the American people receive from the downsizing of government: the $200 million reduction in the congressional budget; the phasing out of the Commerce Department; welfare reform; and the consolidation and elimination of other programs to name a few.

In fact, the Congressional Budget Office has certified that our budget meets its deficit reduction target; will help the economy; and, as a result, will produce a $170 billion economic dividend. We can and should return this dividend to the people. The $170 billion, combined with $21 billion from the repeal of corporate welfare, and billions of dollars in other savings—none of which comes from Medicare—allows us to pay for the tax cut and balance the budget. That is certified by the CBO, the agency President Clinton praised as the most accurate forecaster of budget numbers.

My colleagues, taxes are a problem, but it is not because they are too low; they are too high. Go out and talk to people in your States. Listen to them. The typical family now pays over 40 percent of its income in Federal, State, and local taxes. That is more than it spends on food, clothing, and shelter combined. Americans are working more than 3 hours of every 8-hour workday just to pay taxes to various levels of government.

Back in 1948, the typical family paid only about 3 percent of its income to the Federal Government in taxes. The budget balanced that year. In fact, the entire Federal budget amounted to only $29.8 billion—about what we will pay this year for 43 days' worth of interest on the national debt.

Mr. President, the American people are not undertaxed. They are overtaxed. They need relief. When politicians say we cannot afford a tax cut now, it is because they do not want to give up the money that is available for them—for the politicians—to spend. Well, what about hard-working families? What about what they can afford?

These are people struggling every day to get the kids to school, go to work, and pay their bills. To the family with two kids earning $20,000 a year, a $500 per child tax credit means a lot.

The Heritage Foundation recently estimated that 344,152 taxpayers in Arizona—more than 28 million taxpayers nationwide—are eligible for the $500 per child tax credit. Heritage estimated that 47,552 taxpayers in Arizona—3.5 million nationwide—would see their entire income tax liability eliminated as a result of the $500 per child tax credit. Those taxpayers are not wealthy, yet they are the ones who benefit most significantly from the Senate tax cuts.

In fact, 83 percent of the tax reductions in this bill will go to those with annual incomes under $100,000, and 70 percent will go to those with incomes under $75,000.

The bill includes a capital gains tax cut. A recent study by the Cato Institute found that the capital gains cut will benefit poor and working-class Americans most. The study found that the tax reduction would unlock hundreds of billions of dollars in unrealized capital gains, thus promoting investment in new technologies and entrepreneurial ventures. It would "expand economic opportunities for working-class Americans by encouraging capital formation, new business creation, and investment in capital-starved areas, particularly inner cities, and lead to the creation of more than half a million new jobs and increase wages by the year 2000."

People across America are frustrated. They are struggling day in and day out to make ends meet, while they watch the Federal Government squander their hard-earned tax dollars on everything from farm subsidies to pork-barrel highway projects, helium reserves, and welfare for lobbyists. President Clinton even wants us to pay "volunteers" to do their work—pay "volunteers" in the AmeriCorps program more than the average American earns in a year.

People in homes across the country are struggling with an oppressive tax burden while Congress and the President argue about who is rich, and about how much "we" can afford to give up in tax revenue. My colleagues, it is the American people—not government—that needs help, and this bill takes a small, but meaningful, step in that direction.

This bill is not radical or draconian. In fact, the tax cuts will total $245 billion over 7 years—just 2 percent of the total amount that the Federal Government will collect over that period. It is modest, and if the American people knew we were having such a battle over just 2 percent, they would be stunned.

Throughout the debate over the next few days, we will hear a lot about tax cuts for the rich. Whenever politicians start to object to tax bills because they do not tax the "rich" enough, or they provide too much relief for the "rich," middle America better hold onto its wallet. As I pointed out before, more than 70 percent of the benefit of this cut goes to those with annual incomes of less than $75,000, so we are not talking about the super rich at all.

Remember in 1990 when Congress was supposedly going to soak the rich with a luxury tax on expensive cars, boats, jewelry, and furs? Well, it was not the rich who ultimately got soaked. The sale of yachts fell by 73 percent, and boatyards died. Sales of Cadillacs declined 17 percent. The rich simply avoided the tax by not buying the yacht or the Cadillac, and it was the guy on the line who ultimately paid the luxury tax—paid with his job. Congress had to repeal it.

In 1993, President Clinton called on the American people to pay higher taxes—he called it making a "contribution" to the Government. But it was the average woman on her way to work who found that she had to pay a higher price for gasoline to get there. It was the senior citizen making as little as $34,000 per year who found out he was among the "rich" President Clinton had in mind; he ended up paying higher taxes on his Social Security.

Now President Clinton says he made a mistake in 1993—that he raised taxes too much. I agree that he made a mistake, but if I recall correctly, he sent up a budget asking for $359 billion in new taxes—$100 billion more than he eventually got. It turned out that there was no support in Congress for a tax increase of that magnitude, even among members of his own party. He ultimately had to settle for a tax increase of "only" $258 billion—still the largest in history.

Yes, President Clinton did raise taxes too much, and we have the chance in this bill to undo some of the damage. Not only have people been taxed too much, but they have lost jobs as well. A constituent of mine, Tom Ford from Tucson, AZ, contacted me recently about what the Clinton tax increase has done to him.

Mr. Ford makes a living as a special effects specialist for the motion picture industry. He lost one job on a film called "China Spur," which was to have starred Willie Nelson, Ernest Borgnine, and Heather Locklear. The film was canceled when the Clinton tax increase took effect because the investor found he did not have enough money to take a risk on the film.

Tom Ford worked on another movie, "Waiting to Exhale," with Whitney Houston. Again, taxes hurt the little guy. The project went forward, but corners were cut. Salary and hours were reduced. Whitney Houston got her full asking price, and paid all her taxes, as did Gregory Hines and Angela Bassett who also starred in the film. But the guys behind the scene—people like Mr. Ford—were forced to work for less. It was they who bore the brunt of the tighter budget that resulted from higher taxes.

What does that mean? Wealthier taxpayers like Whitney Houston do not get hurt. She has a great deal of talent, and will continue to command a good wage no matter what taxes are levied. But others are not so fortunate. When Mr. Ford does not work, or works fewer hours or for less money, he cannot buy the extra equipment he needs for filmmaking. And this, in turn, means someone who produces the equipment is also put out of a job. He cannot buy the new pick-up truck he needs for his business. The Ford dealer in Tucson loses a sale, and the factory worker in Detroit sees her job threatened because sales fall off.

Mr. Ford pointed out the irony in a letter to me. He said, "the only good thing is that with a lower income brought on by higher taxes, I am now paying less in taxes to the government." But that is not what is supposed to happen according to the big taxers.

If you listen to the other side in this debate, you will hear that higher tax rates are supposed to bring in more revenue for the Government. But that is not what Tom Ford's experience demonstrates. High tax rates cost jobs and ultimately reduce revenues that might otherwise accrue to the Federal Treasury.

That is the experience of the 1980's. Tax revenues increased from $517 billion in fiscal year 1980 to $1.03 trillion by fiscal year 1990. They nearly doubled. And that is despite the fact that the top income tax rate fell from 70 percent to 28 percent. The share of total Federal income taxes paid by the top 10 percent of taxpayers, ranked by adjusted gross income, rose from just under 50 percent in 1980 to more than 57 percent by 1988. During a period in which their marginal rate fell by 60 percent, the wealthy paid almost 19 percent more in dollar terms in Federal taxes. That is because the tax base expanded as people worked more, invested more, and took money out of tax shelters and put it into taxable investments instead.

Just as the local department store does not lose money when it holds a weekend sale—volume more than makes up for a reduction in price—the Government does not lose revenue when it reduces tax rates. Just the opposite occurs. With businesses expanding, more people working, and more investments being made, tax revenues will increase.

The opposite occurs when tax rates are increased. People change their behavior to avoid the higher tax. After the tax increases of 1990 and 1993, income tax collections actually declined from 8.6 percent of gross domestic product [GDP] to 8.2 percent of GDP in 1994.

Even if you disregard the dynamic effect of the tax cuts proposed in the budget before us today, tax revenues are projected to increase substantially. They will increase from $1.35 trillion in fiscal year 1995 to $1.85 trillion in fiscal year 2002. That is $500 billion—half a trillion—more money than we are collecting today.

Mr. President, how much is enough? Can the Government not get by with an extra 35 percent worth of revenue—an extra half-a-trillion dollars—to spend? How much more is needed?

Now there is a lot of talk about the spending cuts in this package; that they are too deep or that one group or another is being singled out. The fact is, most programs are not being cut at all. Medicare spending, for example, will rise from $178 billion this year to $274 billion 7 years from now. In other words, we will be spending 50 percent more in 7 years than we spend today. The average Medicare benefit will go from about $4,800 per person today to $6,700 in the year 2002. That is not a cut. Let us be honest. It is not a cut.

Student loan volume will grow from $24 billion in 1995 to $36 billion in 2002—another 50-percent increase. Be honest: a 50-percent increase is not a cut.

It is the logic that defines a spending increase as a cut that has gotten us into this predicament. It is like giving someone a 50-percent raise and having that person quit because he thinks his employer cut his salary. Let us be honest. An increase is not a cut.

Let us make no mistake about what these deficits mean. When mom, dad, grandma, and grandpa want more from the Government than they are willing to pay for in taxes today—that is a budget deficit—we are all handing the bill, dollar for dollar—plus interest—to our sons and daughters, and their children yet to come.

Most people agree that the Federal Government should maintain a social safety net to provide individuals with the hand up that they need to escape hard financial times. No one here is proposing that we eliminate that helping hand. But, we have got to find a way to provide a safety net without leaving future generations with a legacy of debt and despair.

My grandson was born just 5 months ago and already owns a share of the national debt that is $18,500 and rising. He can expect to pay $187,000 in taxes during his lifetime just to pay the increase on the national debt. What will be left of his income to care for his children? How will the Government care for the needy of tomorrow when every dollar of individual income tax revenue is devoted to interest on the national debt?

Mr. President, a balanced Federal budget offers hope. Yes, it will require that Congress prioritize spending so that the most important programs are not jeopardized. And wasteful programs will have to be eliminated. Some of the luxuries will have to be postponed to another day. A balanced budget will require heavy lifting, but it offers hope and opportunity.

The Congressional Budget Office predicts that a balanced budget would facilitate a reduction in long-term real interest rates of between 1 and 2 percent. That means that more Americans will have the chance to live the American dream—to own their own home. A 2-percent reduction on a typical 30-year $80,000 mortgage would save homeowners $107 a month. That is $1,284 a year, or over $38,000 over the life of the mortgage.

A 2-percent reduction in interest rates on a typical $15,000 car loan would save buyers $676.

The savings would accrue on student loans, and credit cards, and loans to businesses that want to expand and create new jobs. Reducing interest rates is probably one of the most important things we can do to help people across this country.

This bill includes incentives to help people buy insurance coverage for long-term health care, and to save in medical savings accounts. It includes a tax credit for adoption expenses, and estate tax reform so that families are not forced to sell their small businesses just to pay estate taxes to the Government.

This budget represents a break from business as usual. We are finally making the tough choices the American people sent us here to make. We are keeping our promises—for a change.

Will some people be unhappy with the bill? Of course. It is always easier to hand out money other people earned than it is to say "no." Will some say they have been singled out? Of course. But if you look at the myriad of interests that say they have been singled out, you see that no one has been singled out at all.

This is a historic debate, the most important vote many of us will ever cast. Let us not miss this opportunity or another one might not arise until it is too late for our country. Vote for the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded and that I be allowed to speak for 2 minutes as in morning business, not to take away from the time on either side.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, just so everyone will understand, we cannot be doing this because we are very, very close on getting to the amendments we have agreed to. In this instance, for 2 additional minutes, I will not object, just so Senators on our side know we are not going to be able to do any more of this until we get on the amendment. At this time, I will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order for the quorum call is rescinded. The Senator from Texas is recognized as in morning business.

ATROCITIES IN BOSNIA

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Thank you, Mr. President, and I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

I want to talk for 2 minutes about the atrocities that we believe may be going on right now in Bosnia. I have submitted a sense-of-the-Senate resolution so that the Senate can speak out against these atrocities and ask the Bosnian Serb leadership to stop forthwith anything that might be going on that is a crime in the area of Banja Luka.

We saw in the Washington Post this morning and in the New York Times last week what now appears to be mass murders in Srebrenica by the Serbs in July. The problem, Mr. President, is this may be going on right now around Banja Luka. I want the U.S. Senate to speak forcefully, asking the Serb leadership, if they are going to try to sit down at a peace table, that the least they can do is allow our Assistant Secretary of State John Shattuck, people from the United Nations, people from the Red Cross into the Banja Luka area to certify that there are not mass murders going on right now to account for the men who have been rounded up in factories, in stadiums and, if they are still alive, to let them go back to their families and, if there are crimes being committed, to stop them forthwith.

I think it is time that we as a Senate, on a bipartisan basis, speak loudly and clearly.

My sense-of-the-Senate resolution has been filed as an amendment. It is HUTCHISON, MCCAIN, LIEBERMAN, STEVENS, LEVIN and THOMAS, and many cosponsors are coming from both sides of the aisle.

Mr. President, we must speak and the Serb leadership must stand up and say these atrocities have stopped.

Thank you, Mr. President, and I thank the manager of the bill for letting me speak on this very important subject. If we can stop one murder right now, it will be worth it.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BALANCED BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1995

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand Senator KASSEBAUM is prepared to offer an amendment with reference to education. I understand we have 10 minutes on our side and they have 10 minutes on their side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is not correct in that. There is 10 minutes equally divided, 5 minutes to a side.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

AMENDMENT NO. 2962

(Purpose: To strike the provisions relating to loan payments from institutions, the elimination of the grace period interest subsidy, and the PLUS loan interest rate and rebate)

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. COATS, Mr. GREGG, Mr. FRIST, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. ASHCROFT, Mr. ABRAHAM, and Mr. GORTON, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], for herself, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. COATS, Mr. GREGG, Mr. FRIST, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. ASHCROFT, Mr. ABRAHAM, and Mr. GORTON, proposes an amendment numbered 2962.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1421, beginning with line 15, strike all through page 1423, line 13.

On page 1424, beginning with line 2, strike all through page 1426 line 9.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to strike the provisions relating to loan payments from institutions, the elimination of the grace period interest subsidy, and the PLUS loan interest rate and rebate.

I will just briefly speak to this, Mr. President, because this has been something the Labor and Human Resources Committee has worked long and hard on. We passed the budget resolution earlier this year in the U.S. Senate. The Labor Committee, as a whole, expressed reservations at that time about the magnitude of the cuts that the resolution directed us to make in the Federal student loan programs. However, we agreed to try and meet the reconciliation instruction, and we did so.

As chairman of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, on behalf of the majority members of this committee, we worked to get a package that met the reconciliation instruction and had the least impact on students.

Much has been said on the Senate floor about the impact on students. We consciously directed the effort so that it would not impact strongly on students. This amendment would reduce savings by about $6 billion from the original $10.8 billion that was requested from and produced by the committee. Those costs will be offset by excess savings from the entire budget package.

Mr. President, this amendment would eliminate the provision of the bill that would require students to pay for the interest on their subsidized Stafford loans in the 6 months after they leave school. This would have only applied to new borrowers, but we now eliminate that provision. It would eliminate a raise in interest rate and the interest rate cap on the PLUS parent loans and would also repeal the assessment of a participation fee on institutions of higher education.

The main difference between this amendment and the amendment offered by Senator KENNEDY, is that we leave intact provisions in the budget bill that would decrease the size of the direct loan program to a more appropriate demonstration size, until we can fully assess the merits and feasibility of direct lending. Direct lending does not affect student eligibility for Federal student loans, nor does it affect the amount of funds available for loans or the rates and fees charged to students. They do not make financial aid more affordable or more accessible.

Mr. President, I just add that there are two members—one, a member of the committee, Senator JEFFORDS from Vermont, and the other is Senator SNOWE from Maine—who have felt strongly from the very beginning that we simply should not cut into the education funds as much as the reconciliation request required. They have fought long and hard.

I will yield what time I have remaining to Senator JEFFORDS and Senator SNOWE but I want to point out that a majority of the committee is cosponsoring this amendment. We are all united behind this amendment, and it has been a dedicated effort on the part of the committee majority members.

I yield the floor to the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has 1 minute, 21 seconds.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, let me briefly remind everybody that a while back, when we were dealing with the budget resolution, 67 of us voted not to cut more than $4 billion out of higher education. This amendment would bring this level closer to where we in the Senate voted earlier this year to be—a $5 billion cut from the $10.8 billion. I remind my colleagues of that. I hate to see anybody be inconsistent with their voting, and since 67 voted for something a little more draconian than this, I hope those Senators will stay with us on this amendment.

I will also say, while I believe that we should have direct lending stay in as it creates great competition for the programs, and am in favor of having a rate higher than 20 percent that is in the bill now, I could not go with the Democratic amendment because it essentially opens up direct lending fully. I will therefore be voting against the Kennedy amendment. But I will be voting in favor, obviously, of the Kassebaum-Snowe-Jeffords amendment.

Our amendment restores the 6-month grace period, eliminates the .85 percent institution fee, and lowers the interest rate on PLUS loans. Reducing the labor committee's instruction from $10.85 billion over 7 years to $5 billion.

Let me lay aside the issue of reducing education cuts for one quick moment and explain why this amendment is so important.

The amendment offered by my democratic colleagues restored direct lending to current law—or a transition to 100 percent. I simply could not support such a provision.

I have always been a supporter of testing the direct lending program and am on record as opposing the labor committee's bill to limit it to 20 percent. Twenty percent in my view is too small, it cuts out schools that currently participate in the program—that to me is wrong.

However, as I stated during debate of the 1993 reconciliation, I believe in a slow, implementation of direct lending. It should be undertaken thoughtfully and carefully. The amendment offered by my democratic colleagues is tantamount to a phase-in of direct lending. A phase-in suggests something very different than a thoughtful analysis of the two programs. My fear is that we have already made the decision to go full force without really looking at the advisability of such a move. It is like saying "ready, fire, and then aim."

For this reason I support a firm cap on direct lending. That cap, in my mind should be set at a point which protects the schools that are current participants and allows some room for growth. I suggest that number be set between 30–40 percent.

Mr. President, that is not the amendment we are currently considering. I offered that suggestion to my colleagues as a bipartisan approach. Unfortunately, that amendment coupled with billions of dollars in additional student aid, was rejected by the democrats and interestingly also by groups purporting to represent higher education. In particular the council on education.

I am truly disheartened that today we may have lost an opportunity to demonstrate to this Congress, the administration and the people of this country that education is not a partisan issue. Unfortunately, we gave up the chance to show that politics takes a back seat to sound policy.

I wish we could have put differences aside and discussed the real issue—reducing the labor committee's instruction and restore funding for education.

Certainly, we must balance the budget but we must cut expenditure not investment. That is what this amendment does. It strikes the .85 percent institution fee, restores the 6-month grace period, and eliminates the increase in the PLUS interest rate. Support for this amendment will provide savings to parents, students, and institutions.

Eliminating the interest subsidy during the 6-month grace period could increase the debt of an undergraduate who borrows the maximum $23,000 by almost $1,000, resulting in additional payments of nearly $1,400 over the life of the loan. For a graduate student who borrows the maximum $65,500, the result would be $2,700 in additional debt and almost $4,000 in additional payments.

Raising the interest rate and the interest rate cap on PLUS loans would increase the total payments of parents who borrow $20,000 for their children's education by $1,300.

It simply doesn't pay to cut education.

Consider the following: More highly educated workers not only earn more, but they work and pay taxes longer then less educated workers.

Between 1973 and 1993, median family income dropped by over 20 percent for families headed by a person with a high school diploma or less; but it held steady for those families headed by someone with 4 years of college; and increased for families head by someone with 5 years of college or more. (Mortenson, June 1995)

We need to encourage our young people to pursue higher education both to keep us competitive and to help balance the budget.

Higher education funds cannot be cut any further.

Unfortunately, the opportunity for individuals to go on to postsecondary education is getting slimmer and slimmer. Pell grant awards have not kept pace with college costs. Students have had to increase borrowing in order to make up the difference.

In 1985–86, the actual maximum Pell grant of $2,100 paid 58 percent of the total annual cost of attendance for a 4-year public institution $3,637. In 1993–94, the maximum Pell grant of $2,300 paid only 36 percent of the total cost, $6,454.

Because Federal grant programs have grown much more slowly than the cost of attending college, loans now, 1994–95 account for 56 percent of all student aid, up from 49 percent in 1985–96.

Borrowing has skyrocketed in recent years to such an extent that the amount borrowed through the FFEL program from 1990 to 1995 is greater than the total amount borrowed from its inception in 1965 through 1989.

With such statistics it is no wonder that polls show more and more students and families deciding that college is simply out of their reach. In fact, close to 20 percent of students consider leaving school because of debt. Considering the impact on our economy and the future earning potential of individuals with a postsecondary degree, this statistic is most disheartening.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment and tell the nation that the issue of education spending is a bipartisan issue.

I see that the Senator from Maine has arrived. I am happy to yield to her.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have 5 minutes, as I understand it. I will speak for 2 minutes and then yield 2½ minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. President, this is, first of all, an extraordinary moment because it is an initial victory for the students of this country and their parents that our Republican friends are hearing their message about the unfair, unwise, unjustified additional burden on working families. So that is the good news.

The bad news is that what Senator KASSEBAUM's amendment will effectively do is to say to the 1,400 schools that now have direct lending that half of them are out. Half of them are out. There is no suggestion about how you are going to cut those out.

Under our amendment, we are leaving the choice to the schools, to the colleges. It is so interesting that our Republican friends want to close the option for local control out. We leave it up to the schools. If they want to get in, they can—maximum choice—and we leave it up to the schools to have competition between the direct loan program and the guaranteed loan program.

Under the amendment of the Republicans, they will be preserving the $77 billion that will flow through the guarantee agencies and guarantee $5 million in profits. That is not competition. Where is the voice for competition among the Republicans? Where is the description about what colleges are going to be in and what colleges are going out?

The amendment that has been introduced by myself and Senator SIMON goes back to what was agreed to in terms of direct loans in 1993. We permit the colleges that want to get in, and we establish a ceiling. That was bipartisan. Someone tell me what happened in the 1994 election that was to say that we are going to jiggle the system and force the students into the guaranty system.

I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I agree this is a step forward. But it eliminates—cuts down to 20 percent direct lending. This is, frankly, a brazen kind of pandering to the banks and the guaranty agencies. There is not a college or university in this Nation that has a direct lending program that does not want to keep it. And as our friend and former colleague, DAVE DURENBERGER, said, "This is not free enterprise, the old system, this is free lunch for the guaranty agencies and the banks." We write into the law their profit.

In terms of the taxpayer, we wrote the budget resolution so that you would count the administrative cost for direct lending but not for the guaranty student program. CBO says, under current law, that leaving this 20 percent, as the Kassebaum amendment does, will cost the Nation $4.64 billion. All colleges and universities, again, who are in the program like it. It saves a huge amount of paperwork. Students like it, parents like it, taxpayers like it.

The Kennedy amendment is budget neutral. We do not add to the deficit. Why are we doing something that colleges like, students like, and taxpayers benefit from? We are doing it for one reason and one reason only: To benefit the banks and the guaranty agencies.

If we want to call this a bank assistance bill—and they have record-breaking profits right now—we ought to do that. If we want to call this an assistance to guaranty agencies, we ought to do that; but if we want to call it an assistance to students bill, then we ought to vote for the Kennedy amendment. Let me just point out that this idea came from Congressman TOM PETRI, a Republican from Wisconsin. DAVE DURENBERGER, Republican from Minnesota, was the chief cosponsor of this.

This should not be a partisan thing. I hope Members on both sides will vote for the Kennedy-Simon amendment. It makes sense for everyone. I just appeal to you on behalf of America's students.

Mr. KENNEDY. Do I have 30 seconds?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON). Ten seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this is a clear attempt to strike one of the initiatives of President Clinton—eliminate National Service, eliminate Goals 2000, eliminate direct lending for education.

Our Republican friends cannot stand a good idea when they see one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time under the amendment has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Congressional Budget Office dated October 26 saying there has been no scorekeeping activities that try to prejudice one of the programs versus another; that is, that guaranteed one versus another.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, October 26, 1995.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In your letter of September 5, 1995, you asked the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) to respond to several questions regarding the Credit Reform Act and section 207 of the 1966 budget resolution related to the treatment of administrative expenses in the student loan programs. Attached are CBO's responses to your questions.

If you wish further details, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contact is Deborah Kalcevic.

Sincerely,

JUNE E. O'NEILL,
Director.

RESPONSES TO QUESTIONS FROM CHAIRMAN DOMENICI

The Credit Reform Act of 1990 provided that the federal budget would record the cost of direct loans and guaranteed loans on a subsidy basis rather than a cash basis. The act defined the subsidy cost of a loan to equal the present discounted value of all loan disbursements, repayments, default costs, interest subsidies, and other payments associated with the loan, excluding federal administrative costs. Federal administrative costs of loan programs continued to be accorded a cash-accounting treatment. Estimates of proposals affecting student loans made from 1992 through early 1995 used the accounting rules established in the Credit Reform Act.

The budget resolution for fiscal year 1996, adopted in June 1995, specified that the direct administrative costs of direct student loans should be included in the subsidy estimates of that program for purposes of Congressional scorekeeping. Since June, for estimating legislation under the 1996 budget resolution, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) has used this alternative definition of subsidy costs. In addition, changes in economic and technical estimating assumptions complicate the comparison of estimates made at different times. The following questions and answers explore the implications of the change in accounting for direct student loans.

Question 1: The President proposed, and signed into law in 1993, the Federal Direct Student Loan Program to replace the guaranteed lending program. What was the time frame adopted for the phase-in of that program when it was initially enacted and what savings estimate was provided by CBO?

Answer: The President's fiscal 1994 budget proposed expanding the direct student loan program from a pilot program (which was about 4 percent of loan volume) to a program that would provide 100 percent of all student loans by the 1997–1998 academic year. As part of the request, the President proposed to lower interest rates to borrowers as of July 1997, substantially increase the annual capped entitlement levels for direct loan administrative costs, and subsidize schools for loan origination. The budget proposed no changes in the guaranteed loan program except to phase it out. CBO estimated that the proposal would save $4.3 billion over the 1994–1998 period. These estimates were completed using the CBO February 1993 baseline economic and technical assumptions. The President's proposal became the policy assumed in that year's budget resolution.

The legislation passed by the Congress differed significantly from the policies assumed in the budget resolution. The bill met the requirement to save $4.3 billion by limiting the volume in the direct lending program to 60 percent of the total and substantially cutting subsidies in the guaranteed loan program. Specifically, direct loans were to represent 5 percent of total volume for academic year 1994–1995, 40 percent for 1995–1996, 50 percent for 1996–1997 and 1997–1998, and 60 percent for 1998–1999. The legislation also provided that the ceiling could be exceeded if demand required it.

Question 2: In his FY96 budget, the President proposed an acceleration of that plan so that all student loans would be provided directly from the government no later than July 1, 1997. What "additional" savings did CBO estimate for the accelerated phase-in under the Credit Reform Act?

Answer: The President's fiscal year 1996 budget request included a proposal to expand the direct student loan program to cover 100 percent of loan volume by July 1997. This proposed change was estimated to save $4.1 billion from the CBO baseline over the 1996–2002 period. That baseline incorporated CBO's February 1995 economic and technical assumptions and the direct loan phase-in schedule provided under current law. This baseline reflected the rules that are currently in law for estimating the cost of credit programs.

The 1996 budget resolution specified that the direct administrative costs of direct student loans should be included in the subsidy estimates for that program for purposes of Congressional scorekeeping. This change conformed the treatment of the administrative costs of direct student loans with that for guaranteed student loans. For purposes of Congressional budget scorekeeping, the change overrides the Credit Reform Act, which requires that the federal administrative costs for direct loan programs be accorded a cash-accounting treatment.

For estimating legislation under the 1996 budget resolution, CBO modified its baseline for direct student loans to include in the subsidy calculations the present value of direct federal administrative costs, including the loans' servicing costs. This change means that direct loans issued in a given year have their administrative costs calculated over the life of the loan portfolio, with adjustments for the time value of the funds. Therefore, the subsidy costs of any year's direct loans will include the discounted future administrative costs of servicing loans which may be in repayment (or collection) for as long as 25 to 30 years. The inclusion of these administrative costs in the subsidy calculations for direct loans increases the subsidy rates for these loans by about 7 percentage points. Consequently, the resolution baseline for student loans is higher than the current CBO baseline. Under the assumptions of the budget resolution baseline, the President's 100 percent direct lending proposal would save $115 million over the 1996–2002 period.

Question 3: What would be the long term costs, under scoring rules in effect prior to the 1995 budget resolution, for the above proposal? How would those savings be affected over the life of the loan? How would those costs be compared with the same volume of loans made under the guaranteed program?

Answer: The response to the first part of this question is addressed in the previous answer. Compared to the CBO baseline, the President's 1996 budget proposal was estimated to save $4.1 billion over the next seven years. In order to provide an estimate of a proposal to return to 100 percent guaranteed lending by July 1997 under either the CBO or the resolution baseline, we would need more detail than has been provided on how the program would be restructured.

Question 4: Did the credit reform amendment adopted as part of the budget resolution direct the Congressional Budget Office to exclude any costs for guaranteed loans?

Answer: This year's budget resolution addressed only the budgetary treatment of the administrative costs of direct student loans. By defining the direct administrative costs of direct loans and requiring these costs be calculated over the life of the loan portfolio, the resolution allowed for the costs of direct and guaranteed loans to be evaluated on a similar basis. Thus, all of the program costs for both programs are included in the resolution baseline and are accounted for in the same way, whether they are calculated on the basis of subsidy or cash-based accounting.

Question 5: Are there any expenses of direct or guaranteed loans that are currently excluded from the government subsidy costs that would be more appropriately included in that subsidy? If so, what are they and why have they been excluded from the subsidy cost? For example, some have argued that the credit reform amendment did not include the administrative cost allowance which is paid to guarantee agencies.

Answer: Indirect administrative costs—those not directly tied to loan servicing and collection—are included in the budget on a cash basis for both programs. Some have asked whether these costs would be more appropriately included in the loan subsidy calculations. Although it might be appropriate to include some or all of these costs in the subsidy calculation, as a practical matter it is not straightforward to determine which costs to account for in this manner. For the most part the costs of government oversight, regulation writing, Pell grant certification, and other similar expenditures are personnel costs of the Department of Education or contracted services. In addition, many of the costs, such as program oversight, are not tied to a single loan portfolio but affect many portfolios and both programs. Allocating these costs to specific portfolios and programs for specific fiscal years would be difficult.

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 (OBRA-93) eliminated administrative cost allowance (ACA) payments to guaranty agencies. Until that time, the volume-based payments were always included in the subsidy costs of guaranteed student loans. However, OBRA-93 gave the Secretary of Education authority to make such payments out of the $2.5 billion capped entitlement fund for the direct loan program. Any expenditures from this fund would be accounted for on a cash basis. If the Secretary chose not to allocate any funds for this purpose, then there would be no payments to guaranty agencies.

As part of its current services budget estimates, the Department of Education announced plans to use funds available under the capped entitlement to pay administrative cost allowances to guaranty agencies at one percent of new loan volume for the next five years. Both the CBO baseline and the budget resolution baseline include these planned administrative expenses on a cash basis under the capped entitlement account at the Department's current services levels.

It makes little budgetary difference whether these payments are computed on a cash or subsidy basis. Because the payments are made at the time of loan disbursement, their estimated costs on a cash basis or subsidy basis would be essentially the same. As a result, over the 1996–2002 period the cost of the student loan programs and the budget totals would be changed only marginally by accounting for these payments on a subsidy basis.

Question 6: What possible mechanisms exist to reclassify these costs as part of the federal subsidy, to be scored on a present value basis?

Answer: The guaranty agency cost allowance could again be made an automatic government payment under the guaranteed student loan law. Including the current cash-based indirect administrative expenses for both the direct and guaranteed loans in the subsidy estimates would require amending the Credit Reform Act, but it would be difficult to estimate a wide range of federal personnel-related expenses over a 25- to 30-year period. Determining whether some types of expenditures that are now accounted for on a cash basis should be included in the subsidy calculation would require a more thorough review of the current expenditures of the Department of Education than has been conducted to date.

Question 7: Does the credit reform rule adopted as part of the budget resolution provide the proper framework to fairly assess all direct federal expenses of guaranteed and direct loans?

Answer: In general, the Credit Reform Act amendment allows direct comparisons between the costs of the guaranteed and direct loan programs.

Question 8: Some have claimed that savings associated with the Goodling proposal to repeal direct lending were a result of excluding administrative costs of guaranteed loans. What is the primary reason for the $1.5 billion in savings associated with the Goodling proposal under the new scoring rule?

Answer: On July 26, 1995, CBO prepared an estimate of the original Goodling proposal. The proposal had three components: (1) eliminate the authority for new direct student and parent loans effective in academic year 1996–1997; (2) change the annual and cumulative budget authority levels under Section 458 to reflect the elimination of indirect administrative cost anticipated for new direct loans and the termination of payments of Section 458 funds to guarantee agencies and limit the funds to $24 million annually; and (3) reestablish an administrative cost allowance (ACA) for guarantee agencies at 0.85 percent of new loan volume or 0.08 percent of outstanding volume, with an annual limitation on ACA subsides of $200 million. Assuming an enactment date of October 1995, the proposals would reduce outlays for student loans by $227 million for fiscal year 1996 and by $1.5 billion over the 1996–2002 period.

Relative to the budget resolution baseline, shifting loan volume to guaranteed loans would save $855 million over the 1996–2002 period. Administrative expenditures would be reduced by $1.97 billion over the next seven years by lowering the cap. Of this amount, $824 million reflects the elimination of the discretionary guaranty agency payments, and the remainder reflects the elimination of the discretionary guaranty agency payments, and the remainder reflects the elimination of the indirect costs for the phased-out direct loan program. Reestablishing the ACA for a 100 percent guaranteed loan program would cost $1.3 billion over seven years.

Although the Goodling proposal would have eliminated most of the funds to fund and oversee the phased-out direct loan program by reducing the capped entitlement level for these funds, it did not address the level of appropriated funds that would be necessary to oversee the larger guaranteed loan program.

Question 9: Did the Goodling proposal to eliminate the direct loan program and make changes to the guaranteed program you were asked to score, address all federal administrative costs of direct and guaranteed loans? When you applied the new scoring rule, were you able to properly categorize those expenses to provide a completed fair calculation of the cost differential?

Answer: All of the cost analyses of the Goodling proposal for both the direct and guaranteed loan programs were completed using the same budgetary treatment for both programs. The Goodling proposal, however, did not address the level of discretionary appropriations necessary to oversee the larger guaranteed loan program.

Mr. SIMON. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. SIMON. Under the scorekeeping in the budget resolution, you say count the administrative costs for direct lending but not for the guaranteed program, and we asked CBO, how do you score it under current law? There is a savings of $4.6 billion under direct lending.

Mr. DOMENICI. There is a statement in the letter from CBO on that issue.

Mr. SIMON. I will read it, and I thank my colleague.

Mr. DOMENICI. I want 30 seconds to say thanks to Senator KASSEBAUM and the other Senators who worked on our side. I think they have come up with a very good amendment, and I think ultimately the students across America who have been concerned will find they have done an excellent job in taking care of an overwhelming percentage of their issues.

We thank you for it.

AMENDMENT NO. 2950

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be 2 minutes of explanation equally divided on the Abraham amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chamber will be in order.

The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, the next amendment before us is very simple.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the remarks do not mean anything if we cannot hear them. May we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chamber will be in order.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I thank you, Mr. President.

The next amendment I will offer is pretty straightforward. It basically creates a mechanism by which the Medicare beneficiaries can be rewarded for assisting us in ferreting out the waste, the fraud, and abuse in the Medicare program.

Under the amendment, the Secretary of HHS has the responsibility of setting up two programs—one program that, in effect, is a whistle-blower program which would provide bonuses to Medicare beneficiaries who will identify Medicare fraud and abuse. The other program would be designed to provide bonuses to Medicare beneficiaries who identify waste, and to streamline and make more efficient and less costly the Medicare system.

Mr. President, I think this will help us to achieve cost savings in Medicare while at the same time providing benefits to Medicare beneficiaries who assist us in that effort.

I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to Senator HARKIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Thank you, Mr. President. I thank the Senator from Nebraska for yielding.

As I said, I support the Abraham amendment. It is not a bad amendment. It is a good amendment. There is nothing wrong with it. I would just point out it is sort of voluntary on the Secretary's part. It does not mandate that they have to do this. It says the Secretary may set these up. That is fine, as far as it goes. I would just say that probably later on today or tomorrow, the amendment that I had offered to the Abraham amendment last night will be coming up for a vote, which provides for some tough measures. We will talk about that later. This amendment is a good amendment. I intend to support it. It is in keeping with trying to give the Secretary more power to cut down on waste, fraud, and abuse.

So it is a good amendment. We will certainly support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The yeas and nays have not been ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

BRADLEY MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I understand that the Bradley motion is next. I would appreciate, if possible, the Chair recognizing the Senator from New Jersey for the purpose of a 1-minute statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, this amendment eliminates the tax increase on people making under $30,000 a year. This bill contains a tax cut for estates of $5 million, a tax cut in the amount of $1.7 million.

We are not touching that tax cut, but we are trying to prevent the tax increase that will come in this bill for people making under $30,000 a year. The EIC offsets income taxes, Social Security, and excise taxes. The other side has talked only about income taxes.

Last year, with $114 billion in Federal taxes, only $12 billion of that was income taxes from people making under $30,000 a year. Why increase taxes on those hard-working Americans? These are Americans who work every day, and they pay their taxes, and they support their families.

This motion is progrowth and profamily. It deserves to be supported because it is a tax cut for individual working families.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield our time to Senator NICKLES.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, one, let me just tell my colleague from New Jersey, and other colleagues, there is no tax increase for individuals making less than $30,000. That claim has been refuted by the Joint Tax Committee. It is totally false, and people making that claim should really be ashamed of themselves.

Mr. President, I am going to put in the RECORD the facts. The facts are, the earned income tax credit grows even under our proposal. It grows. The maximum benefit that anybody can receive today is $3,100. It grows next year to $3,200. And in 7 years it grows to $3,888. It is an increase.

This is a program that is a cash outlay program. Eighty-five percent of this program is Uncle Sam writing checks, not reducing liability, but writing checks. And it is the most fraudulent program we have in Government today. GAO said 30 to 40 percent of it was in fraud and in error.

It needs to be reformed. That is what we do. This program should be reformed. These proposals that we have made, I think, are the right things to do for American families.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the table be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FISCAL YEAR 1996: TWO PARENTS, TWO CHILDREN

GRAHAM MOTION TO COMMIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The pending business is the motion of Senator GRAHAM to commit the bill with instructions. There are 2 minutes of debate equally divided.

The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, this reconciliation proposal is filled with risk—risk of the unknown, risks that have consequences that are beyond our ability to forecast. There is no area in this entire legislation that has a greater risk to the people of this country than the proposals in Medicaid.

We are proposing to cut Medicaid by $187 billion—I repeat, a program which, last year, had a total Federal expenditure of $89 billion, we are going to cut, over 7 years, by $187 billion. It is at risk because we are proposing, for those funds that are left, to place them in an inflexible block grant, without Federal participation, in terms of dealing with unexpected circumstances, and we are freezing in many of the inequities that have made this program inappropriate in the past.

Mr. President, we are putting at risk poor children, our elderly and, particularly, the States of America, as they are all being removed from the safety net that Medicaid has provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the biggest risk is that we not balance our budget, and that we continue to spend your children's and grandchildren's money to pay for programs we cannot afford.

Obviously, this program is growing so fast, it is unsustainable. Anyone who thinks it is being cut is not hearing the facts. We are going to increase this program to more than $94 billion next year, $124 billion in 2002. And over the entire period of time, this program will increase at a rather healthy rate, while most programs in the National Government are either frozen or reduced.

It is time that we reform this system so we can deliver on what we promise. But we also have to deliver on a promise to get interest rates down, to have growth and jobs for our children. We cannot have the status quo and do that also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

The Senate will be in order.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until conversations cease, we will just have to hold up.

The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. This is an easy choice. My amendment strikes all provisions of the bill that increase the cost for students and families, and preserves choice and competition in the student loan program at the local level.

Senator KASSEBAUM's amendment rightfully pulls back the unfair and extreme provisions that increase the costs for students. It wrongfully prevents schools from choosing the loan program that best serves their students at the local level, and wrongfully provides a Government-mandated monopoly to the powerful special interests in the student loan industry.

I hope my amendment will be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the Senate will vote on an amendment offered by Senators KASSEBAUM, JEFFORDS, and SNOWE that removes all cuts affecting students. The Senate Republicans do this without raising taxes or taxing investment. The Republican plan will result in lower interest rates which will benefit all students and all Americans. That is what our entire deficit reduction package is all about.

I yield any time I have and I move to table.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

So, the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 2959) was agreed to.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Could I be advised how long that vote took?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last rollcall lasted approximately 13 minutes.

Mr. DOLE. Let me remind my colleagues three times 60 is a long time—we were about 3 minutes late on that vote—if we start slipping these votes for everybody who wants to step out for 5 minutes. If we just stay in the Chamber, we can do this in 10 minutes. I say to my colleagues, we are going to start ringing the bell here in 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. It also slows down the Senate when conversations are going on during debate time.

AMENDMENT NO. 2962

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The issue before the Senate is amendment No. 2962 by the Senator from Kansas, [Mrs. KASSEBAUM]. There are 2 minutes equally divided.

Senator KASSEBAUM will be recognized when the Senate is in order.

The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I yield the time remaining to the Senator from Maine [Ms. SNOWE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. I thank the Chair. I thank Senator KASSEBAUM for yielding.

Mr. President, I want to first recognize several of my colleagues who have been instrumental in helping to craft this amendment and reach a compromise on student loan funding.

First, the chairwoman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator KASSEBAUM, who has been a real leader on this issue. She has had to make difficult choices and tough decisions throughout this process—especially meeting instructions of $10.8 billion in savings for her committee, so I thank her for her work and for offering this amendment.

Second, the majority leader and the chair of the Budget Committee, Senator DOLE and Senator DOMENICI—for meeting our concerns and being responsive to our requests all along. Their support was obviously instrumental in crafting this amendment.

Finally, one of the main cosponsor of this amendment, Senator JEFFORDS of Vermont, for his concern, his support, and his compassion for the needs of America's students.

Mr. President, let there be no doubt about it, we are setting a course for America for the next 7 years and beyond as we debate the measure before us today. That is a heavy responsibility.

But the image of a better America, a stronger America, and a more fiscally secure America is incomplete for the next generations without one critical component: that is, a commitment to education funding and to students.

I believe one of our duties in this process is to keep the American Dream alive for our generation as well as the next generation of students—because we all know that educating today's students is also about preparing tomorrow's workers.

While I firmly believed that balancing the budget is the greatest legacy we can bequeath to our children and grandchildren, I do not believe it requires the sacrifice of educational opportunities to the children and students today.

Let us be clear about this: our two objectives—balancing the budget and providing quality educational opportunities—are not mutually exclusive entities.

I believe we can identify and set budget priorities within the framework of a balanced budget. I believe it is possible to be fiscally responsible and also be visionary about our education needs into the next century for the next generation.

That is basically what this amendment accomplishes. It is prudent. It is responsible. It's fair. And it maintains our commitment to excellence in education.

The amendment we are offering today would restore $5.9 billion in student loan funding that is sorely needed by America's youth to continue their education.

Basically, we are removing the most onerous and punitive provisions on students that are currently contained in this package.

Those provisions we are targeting for removal include the following: the imposition of a 0.85 percent fee on the student loan volume of institutions of higher learning; the provision increasing the interest rate on parent PLUS loans from T-bill plus 3.1 percent, to T-bill 4.0 percent; and—most importantly—the provision charging interest on student loans during the so-called 6-month grace period.

I believe we must support this amendment because student loans level the education playing field for so many in this country. In the world of education, student loans are the great "enabler". They afford everyone the equal opportunity to profit from a college education.

I should know, I owe my education and much of my career in public service to the student loan program, which sustained me at the University of Maine.

Now, it is important to add that the Senate has already gone on record and has made a strong statement in support of increased student loan funding.

Back in May, when the Budget Committee reported out a resolution that included a cut of more than $13 billion in student loan funding over 7 years—and when the House reported out a version that included a cut of over $18 billion, I joined several of my colleagues in taking action—because student loan funding programs would clearly result in leaving some needy students locked out of our Nation's colleges and universities, and therefore locked out of America's work force and a successful career.

And, with bipartisan support from both sides of the aisle, my colleague from Illinois, Senator SIMON, and I authorized and passed an amendment that restored $9.4 billion for student loans. No other amendment, except one, received as much bipartisan support during the consideration of the Senate budget resolution.

We should reaffirm that same level of commitment again today, and with this amendment, we now have an opportunity to do so.

If we pass this amendment, the Senate's strong support for this level of funding will be a strong instruction to the Senate conferees to maintain this level of funding during the upcoming House-Senate Reconciliation conference.

Now, I know that many of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle would have wanted more, especially when it come to direct lending. Obviously, there is a difference of opinion on direct lending.

While the amendment we are offering restores critical funding for loans, it maintains the bills current cap on direct lending at 20 percent. I could support raising this cap to 30 percent, which would cover the 1,300 education institutions currently involved in the direct lending program.

However, the sole purpose of this amendment is to restore funding for student loan programs. other opportunities may arise on the floor today or tomorrow to increase the cap on direct lending.

I have worked with many of my colleagues across the aisle, and I know that—in the final analysis—we share the same goals on funding for student education. That is the most important—the most critical-issue here.

Why is this amendment important to our students and to our future as a nation? What is the value of student loans?

it is unmistakable. Student loans have a tremendous impact on our nation's economy . . . on personal incomes . . . on careers . . . and especially on providing education to needy citizens.

Student loans have given millions of young Americans a fighting chance at reaching their own American Dream: in 1993, it gave 5.6 million Americans that chance, and that was almost double the number of loans made 10 years earlier, when it was 3 million, in fact, statistics show that almost half of all college students receive some kind of financial aid—many through student loans.

They have become especially important considering that the cost of college education and post-secondary education has become a very, very expensive proposition for students, as well as their families.

For example, a College Board survey says that 1995–1996 is the third straight year that tuition costs have risen by 6 percent. Since this rise outpaces income growth in America, there's heavy borrowing for a college education—up an average of 17 percent yearly since 1990.

Each year, college costs rise 6.6 percent for private college while we have recorded a rise in disposable personal income of only 4.4 percent. That 2 percent disparity is what is making student loans a pipe dream for our college-bound students.

In fact, since 1988, college costs have risen by 54 percent—well ahead of a 16 percent increase in the cost of living. And, more tellingly, student borrowing has increased by 219 percent since that time.

Without student aid, increasing costs make higher education out of reach for millions of Americans.

We should not have to bankrupt the families of students in order to allow them to send their children to receive a solid college education.

You see, when we allow students to get the loans they need to complete their college education, we are making a sizable, long-term investment in not only personal incomes, but our economy as well.

Men and women who continue their education beyond high school, as we have seen in study after study, have consistently earned more money on average each year than those who do not.

In 1990, for example, the average income for high school graduates was almost $18,000. For those who had 1 to 3 years of a college education, earned on the average $24,000. Those who graduated from college and received a college diploma received on average salary of $31,000.

According to the U.S. Department of Commerce, a person with a bachelor's degree will average 50 to 55 percent more in lifetime earnings than a person with a high school diploma.

The entire country benefits, as well from student loans. For every $1 we invest in education we get enormous returns as a result. Back in 1990, another study was conducted that analyzed the school assistance that was provided to high school students back in 1972.

For every $1 that the Federal Government invested in the student loan programs at that time, the Government received $4.3 in return in tax revenues.

According to a study by the Brookings Institute, over the last 60 years, education and advancements in knowledge have accounted for 37 percent of America's economic growth.

At a time in which education is becoming paramount in this global arena, where it is going to make the difference for an individual and the kind of living that can be enjoying for themselves and their families, education puts them on the cutting edge.

Most of all, it puts America on the threshold of competition for the future.

If we deny individuals the opportunity to receive an education because they lack the financial assistance or the access to financial assistance, clearly, we—as a nation, a superpower, and the world's greatest democracy—are going to suffer.

Today, let's make sure that we retain policies that will make higher education accessible to millions of low- and middle-income families.

Today, let us make a significant contribution to students pursuing a higher education. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President and Members of the Senate, I am very pleased to have joined Senator KASSEBAUM and Senator JEFFORDS offering this amendment that essentially restores $5.9 billion to the student loan program. This essentially reaffirms the position that has been taken by 67 Members of this body when we had a vote on this issue last spring to the budget resolution.

This amendment removes the provision that increases the origination fee on student loans. It removes the provision that allows interest rates to accrue during the so-called 6-month grace period, and it also eliminates the provision that allowed interest rates to increase on the PLUS loans from 3.1 percent to 4 percent.

I think we all acknowledge that college costs have increased in this country. In fact, since 1988, they have increased more than 54 percent—16 percent beyond the growth of income for most families in America. That has resulted in increased borrowing of 219 percent for individuals and families all across this Nation so that their family and their children can pursue higher education.

I think it is essential for this country to retain the policies that ensure access for low- and middle-income families through these policies.

I also ask unanimous consent to include as cosponsors of this amendment Senators ROTH, DOMENICI, PRESSLER, STEVENS, and SPECTER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. SNOWE. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maine has expired.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Kassebaum amendment which strikes from the budget reconciliation bill the provisions relating to a .85 percent school fee, the elimination of the grace period interest subsidy, and the PLUS loan interest rate increase.

Mr. President, I am committed to balancing the budget—this is probably the single most important thing we can do for our children and our country. Today's students will save money if we succeed in balancing the budget. According to Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, a balanced budget will lower interest rates by 1–2 percent for everyone.

I am pleased that the leadership has found offsets which will make the Kassebaum amendment revenue neutral. It will allow us to balance the budget without imposing additional costs on students, their parents or schools.

This bill also benefits students by allowing those who have paid interest on education loans a credit against income tax liability equal to 20 percent of such interest up to $500.

As the father of three young children, I believe that education is one of the most important issues facing our nation today. We must continue to offer students across the country the opportunity to excel and obtain their goals. Many students depend on the federal student loan programs as their only chance to go to college. This amendment will allow us to preserve those programs without imposing additional costs on students.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished Senator from Illinois, Senator SIMON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I shall vote for the Kassebaum amendment, but I have to say I am doing it with real mixed feelings because it fails to address something that every higher education association favors, and that is direct lending. The colleges and universities in your States want direct lending. The bankers in your States and the guarantee agencies do not want it because they have a cushy deal going right now.

The Kassebaum amendment is an improvement over the resolution as it is right now, so I will vote yes for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are requested.

So the amendment (No. 2962) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EXON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BUMPERS MOTION TO COMMIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order of business is the Bumpers motion to commit to the Committee on Finance with instructions.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, in 1981, this body, all but 11 Senators, voted for a massive tax cut on the argument that it would help balance the budget. Eight years and $2 trillion later, we all knew we had made a massive mistake. We are about to repeat it, though not quite the magnitude of that.

This amendment simply says what my good friend from New Mexico, the chairman of the Budget Committee, said on May 30 of this year, that there is one thing our side has agreed on: There will be no tax cut until we balance the budget.

Senator DOMENICI was right on May 30, and to vote a different way now is wrong.

The New York Times this very morning shows that a vast majority of the American people, even the wealthy who benefit most from this, are all opposed to a tax cut until we balance the budget. It is fiscal responsibility, and that is the reason we call this the fiscal responsibility amendment.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 1 minute.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, this amendment, I think, points up the difference between the two parties. We have a balanced budget. It has been certified by the Congressional Budget Office. Once we adopt this reconciliation instruction, we will have a balanced budget. Then it is time to give the taxpayers of America some relief.

We get a $170 billion economic dividend for getting a balanced budget. What should we do with that money? Should we spend it, or should we give it back to Americans, especially families who are having difficulty raising their children because we whittled down their deduction such that they are kind of on their own?

I believe it is right when you have made savings and have a balanced budget, according to the Congressional Budget Office, that you ought to give money back to the people and not let the dividends sit around so we can spend it. The people want to spend their own money. It happens to be theirs, not ours.

Mr. President, I move to table the Bumpers motion, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

BAUCUS MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, according to the pending business, the next item of business is the rural restoration motion.

I yield to the Senator from Montana for 1 minute.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the budget bill before us is a raid on rural America. It cuts the farm program and begins to eviscerate, obliterate the farm program by cutting $13.4 billion over 7 years, 25 percent cut. The budget bill cuts health care, disproportionately affecting rural America because our hospitals have so many seniors. Medicaid is cut, hurting rural America. There is already a tendency for people to leave the farm and go to the city to seek some job to survive. We here should be sensitive to rural America, not insensitive, by raiding rural America. This bill before us raids rural America, accelerates the transfer of people from rural America to the city, which is something we should not do.

So my amendment simply says to the Finance Committee, go back and restore some of these provisions that affect rural America, but still balance the budget.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, under the proposed reforms in this bill, the Federal Government will be spending and continue to spend $64.8 billion in outlays over the next 7 years for commodity-related programs.

Farmers will benefit the most of all groups of Americans if interest rates come down because they rely most on borrowed money, as compared with any other group of business men or women in the country.

Farmers and rural America will also benefit from the capital gains reduction in this bill.

In addition, this amendment instructs the Finance Committee to make changes in programs that are not even within their jurisdiction.

Mr. President, since that makes it not germane, I raise a point of order that this motion violates the Budget Act.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the applicable sections of that act for the consideration of the pending motion, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to waive.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that time be charged to neither side.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand that it is our turn for three successive amendments, and the first of those three that we have on our side will be the Social Security earnings test by Senator MCCAIN.

Will the Chair announce how much time is on these three amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten minutes equally divided.

The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a minute? We were looking for what these amendment are. Can we have those? It just says "Finance Committee amendment," and we do not know what it is. We need a little bit of information. That was required of us last night.

I thank the Chair.

I am grateful to the Senator. I thank him.

AMENDMENT NO. 2964

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate regarding the need to raise the Social Security earnings limit)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. MCCAIN), for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. COATS, and Mr. NICKLES, proposes an amendment numbered 2964.

At the appropriate place in the Act, add the following:

SEC. . SENSE OF THE SENATE.—The Senate finds that

(a) The Senate has held hearings on the social security earnings limit in 1994 and 1995 and the House has held two hearings on the social security earnings limit in 1995;

(b) The Senate has overwhelmingly passed Sense of the Senate language calling for substantial reform of the social security earnings limit;

(c) The House of Representatives has overwhelmingly passed legislation to raise the exempt amount under the social security earnings limit three times, in 1989, 1992, and 1995;

(d) Such legislation is a key provision of the Contract with America;

(e) The President in his 1992 campaign document "Putting People First" pledged to lift the social security earnings limit;

(f) The social security earnings limit is a depression-era relic that unfairly punishes working seniors; therefore,

(g) It is the intent of the Congress that legislation will be passed before the end of 1995 to raise the social security earnings limit for working seniors aged 65 through 69 in a manner which will ensure the financial integrity of the social security trust funds and will be consistent with the goal of achieving a balanced budget in 7 years.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, this amendment signals the Senate's intent to move forward expeditiously on reforming the earnings test. The majority leader has let it be known that he will move this matter soon, as early as next week depending on the action of the House of Representatives. I appreciate the leadership of the majority leader, and I also want to thank former Finance Committee chairman, Senator Packwood, and Senator MOYNIHAN for their help and for their support on this matter.

Additionally, I want to note that the House of Representatives today passed a similar amendment by the overwhelming vote of 414 to 5.

Mr. President, the Social Security earnings test was created during the Depression era when senior citizens were being discouraged from working. This may have been appropriate then when 50 percent of Americans were out of work. But it is certainly not appropriate today. It is not appropriate today when seniors are struggling to get ahead and survive on limited incomes. Many of these seniors are working to survive and make it on a day-today basis.

Mr. President, most Americans are amazed to find that older Americans are actually penalized by the Social Security earnings test for their productivity. For every $3 earned by a retiree over the $11,160 limit, they lose $1 in Social Security benefits. Due to this cap on earnings, our senior citizens, many of whom are existing on low incomes, are effectively burdened with a 33-percent tax on their earned income.

I want to point out this only applies to people who have to go to work. If someone is very rich and has a trust fund, pension, stocks, all of the gain that is accrued from that is not taxable. It only applies to low-income and middle-income Americans who in our society today have to go to work tragically for a broad variety of reasons.

Mr. President, there has been a lot of partisanship back and forth today, some regrettably and some of it is a natural happenstance when a revolution is taking place because that is basically what this is all about.

Let me point out that I heard a lot of pleas and cries in behalf of seniors on the part of friends on the other side of the aisle. In 1987, I came to the floor of this body and sought repeal of the Social Security earnings test. There was a hearing in the Finance Committee chaired by former chairman and former Secretary of Treasury Bentsen.

In 1988, I brought this amendment to the floor, and in 1989 I brought it to the floor, and in 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994. And each time on the other side of the aisle it was turned down.

I am happy to say that now this side is in the majority. In both bodies we will repeal the onerous and outrageous earnings test which on the other side they failed to do.

Mr. President, if I sound a little excited about that, it is because we have had a lot of rhetoric today about how cruel Members on this side of the aisle are to senior citizens.

The best way, the most effective way that we can help senior citizens today is for those who seek to go to work and have to work for a broad variety of reasons to be allowed to keep their earnings. And, by the way, it would only be raised up to $30,000.

Mr. President, there is a couple who are friends of mine who live near me in northern Arizona. They are low-income Americans. They have a son who had prostate cancer. The son has a daughter that he has to take care of in a home. My friend's wife had to go back to work in order to support her son and her granddaughter. She went to work in a hospital where she has been working. She dramatically increased her hours because she is now helping her son who had prostate cancer and was out of work. And she gets what? She found out 2 weeks ago that she owes the Federal Government $1,200 because she exceeded the $11,000 limit.

So her ability to care for herself, her husband, her son and her granddaughter is dramatically penalized because this earnings test puts her in the highest tax bracket of anyone in America, amongst the richest.

Mr. President, as I said before, there is also a myth that repeal of the earnings test would only benefit the rich. Nothing could be further from the truth. The highest effective marginal rates are imposed on the middle-income elderly who must work to supplement their income.

Mr. President, finally it is simply outrageous to continue two separate policies that both keep people out of the work force who are experienced and who want to work. We have been warned to expect a labor shortage. Why should we discourage our senior citizens from meeting that challenge?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, in order to move things along, we have a great amount of work to do, we yield back our allotted 5 minutes.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that editorial endorsements from several newspapers, and also from various organizations, ranging from the Seniors Coalition to the National Council of Senior Citizens, and others, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EDITORIAL ENDORSEMENTS

Chicago Tribune: The skill and expertise of the elderly could be used to train future workers, while bringing in more tax dollars and helping America stay competitive in the 21st century.

Los Angeles Times: As the senior population expands and the younger population shrinks in the decades ahead, there will be an increasing need to encourage older workers to stay on the job to maintain the nation's productivity.

The Baltimore Sun: The Social Security landscape is littered with a great irony: While the program is built on the strength of the work ethic, its earnings test actually provides a disincentive to work . . . One consequence of this skewed policy is the emergence of a gray, underground economy—a cadre of senior citizens forced to work for extremely low wages or with no benefits in exchange for being paid under the table.

Dallas Morning News: Both individual citizens and society as a whole would benefit from a repeal of the law that limits what Social Security recipients may earn before their benefits are reduced.

The San Diego Tribune: The benefit-reaction law made some economic sense when Social Security was established in the 1930s and the government wanted to encourage the elderly to leave the labor force and open up jobs for younger workers. But with declining birth rates and the nation's need for more, not fewer, experienced workers, the measure is bad for the nation as well as its older workers.

Wall Street Journal: The punitive taxation of the earnings limit sends the message to seniors that their country doesn't want them to work, or that they are fools if they do.

The New York Times: . . . it is not wrong to encourage willing older adults to remain in the work force.

The Orange County Register: Indeed, repealing the tax might actually increase revenues. More people would be working, paying more taxes of all kinds, including the Social Security tax. If our government bureaucrats want us to keep paying their salaries, the least they can do is make it possible to work in the first place.

Houston Post: Equity and common sense demand that this disincentive to work be scrapped.

The Cincinnati Enquirer: No American should be discouraged from working, as long as he wants to and is physically able to do so.

The Indianapolis Star: On the face of it, the game appears rigged in favor of those who stop working at 65 and against those who keep working, in favor of well-to-do retirees and against middle- and low-income retirees who need a part-time job to help with expenses.

Forbes: Moreover, people are living longer; the economy is hurt when artificial barriers block the full use of our most productive asset, people.

Detroit News: Work is important to many of the elderly, who are living longer. They shouldn't be faced with a confiscatory tax for remaining productive.

WHY PUSH THEM OUT OF WORK?

CONGRESS SHOULD ELIMINATE OUTMODED SOCIAL SECURITY EARNINGS TEST

There are more than 40 million Americans age 60 or older, many of whom are eager to work beyond normal retirement age but can't afford to, thanks to an outmoded earnings test applied to Social Security recipients. The Senate, in a provision attached to the extension of the Older Americans Act, has voted to eliminate this punitive restriction. The measure now goes to a congressional conference committee, where House conferees will have a chance to accept the Senate's provision. They should do so, and the House should adopt it. Millions of workers would be the better for it, and so would government and society.

Current law says that people between the ages of 65 and 70 who draw Social Security and who earn more than $9,720 a year must lost $1 in Social Security benefits for every $3 they earn over that limit. This rule effectively applies to those workers a 33% marginal tax rate—higher than anyone else must pay—but there is more. Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) says that when federal, state and other Social Security taxes are factored in, the tax bite approaches nearly 70%. If that isn't age discrimination, McCain suggests, nothing is.

There is no earnings ceiling for Social Security recipients age 70 or older. It's nonsensical to have one for those younger. Maintaining the arbitrary ceiling and taxing away 33 cents out of every dollar earned from those who exceed it drives millions of productive workers into forced retirement. The nation's economy is not so robust that it can afford to lose willing, able and experienced employees. Federal and state treasuries are not so flush they can pass up the revenues that could be had from taxes on the higher earnings of older workers.

Why chase people who want to work out of the labor force? Why make this pool of talent lie stagnant? The earnings ceiling is an echo of an earlier time when it was argued that older workers had to be pushed into retirement to make jobs available for new entrants into the work force. Demographics and the needs of the economy have changed. Millions of those older workers want to go on working without being punished if they earn too much. The time has come to let them do so.

[From the Arizona Republic, Nov. 17, 1991]

AGE DISCRIMINATION: LIFT EARNINGS CAP

Congress dotes on its anti-discrimination record. How then to explain why its continuing prejudice is targeted at a particular minority?

The earnings cap on Social Security benefits is a form of discrimination. "The earnings test translates into an effective tax burden of 33 percent," Sen. John McCain told a Senate committee. "Combined with federal, state and other Social Security taxes, it can amount to a stunning tax bite of nearly 70 percent."

The cap on earnings—set at $9,720 for retirees age 65 to 70—is "age discrimination of the worst kind," the senator said, and that "is plainly wrong." For every $3 earned above the cap, seniors lose $1 in benefits.

As Mr. McCain points out, it is foolish to maintain a policy that keeps people with experience and a willingness to apply their skills out of the work force, especially when the country faces economic stagnation and declining international competitiveness.

Punishing people for working is wrong in an even more fundamental way. It violates an American principle known as the work ethic. Surely it is poor social policy to maintain disincentives to productive labor. Better to let seniors who have something to contribute slip back into harness. Besides, many of them need the extra income.

The Bush administration argues that eliminating the earnings test would cost $3.9 billion in fiscal 1992. Sen. McCain disagrees. He argues that lifting the cap would save money, both through the collection of additional taxes on the earnings of seniors and administrative savings.

A Senate-passed measure to lift the cap is now in a conference committee, where it must be reconciled with a House-approved bill that would not eliminate the earnings penalty. If the House cares anything at all about fairness, it will end the discrimination now in place and free older Americans to work.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Jan. 5, 1991]

END SOCIAL SECURITY EARNING CURBS

(By U.S. Rep. J. Dennis Hastert)

When a country doesn't support its stated goals by adopting policies to achieve those goals, its aims become unattainable. Such is the case with our goal of restoring U.S. competitiveness in the global market. We say we want to regain our competitive edge, yet we follow obsolete policies that preclude us from fielding the most productive work force possible.

The most pernicious example of this practice is the continued application of the Social Security Earnings Test, a Depression-era relic that penalizes senior citizens who work after they retire. By forcing seniors to, forfeit one-third of their Social Security benefits after they earn more than a ridiculously low amount, the Earnings Test tells the elderly we no longer value their expertise and experience.

Seniors between 65 and 70 who earn more than $9,360 are slapped with a 33 percent penalty. In short, the government siphons $1 in penalties for every $3 a productive senior earns over the limit. When coupled with federal taxes, seniors who earn a penalty $10,000 a year are faced with a 56 percent marginal income tax rate—twice the rate of millionaires.

The Social Security Earnings Test is age discrimination, pure and simple. Not only does it discriminate against one age group, it also afflicts the seniors who need extra income the most. Seniors can receive stock dividends and interest payments without losing Social Security benefits, but those who work at low-paying jobs to make ends meet are punished for attempting to remain financially independent.

At a time in our nation's history when the operative buzz word is "competitiveness," policymakers are hypocrites when they preach the gospel of working harder while retaining outdated policies that strip our labor force of productive and experienced workers. Just as business leaders must modernize their factories, congressional leaders must update public policy.

The Social Security Earnings Test was instituted in the 1930s to discourage seniors from working and make room for younger Americans to enter the work force. Whether this was a good idea at the time is hardly relevant; as the U.S. population ages, seniors are becoming an increasingly important segment of the labor force. The government should support them, rather than financially penalize them, for remaining active and productive.

By the end of this decade, there will be 1.5 million fewer members of the work force aged 16 to 24. Coupled with this trend is the fact that there is a sharply increasing number of older persons relative to the working population. To respond to these challenges, the United States needs to attract more people to participate in the labor force.

I have introduced legislation that would help our businesses adapt to the demands of the international marketplace by making our work force more productive. My bill, H.R. , the Older Americans Freedom to Work Act, has a majority of House members as co-sponsors, as well as considerable support in the Senate (Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., introduced the Senate version). But many in the House leadership remain opposed to it. The Ways and Means Committee chairman, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), and Social Security subcommittee chairman, Rep. Andrew Jacobs (D-Ind.), are laboring under the incorrect assumption that repeal of the Earnings Test will lead to a shortfall in government revenue, when exactly the opposite is true.

If the Earnings Test is repealed, more seniors—up to 700,000, according to the National Center for Policy Analysis, an economic research group—would rejoin the work force, expanding the tax base and increasing the amount of tax revenue the government receives from these returning workers and taxpayers. As a result, the NCPA reported, the annual output of goods would increase by at least $15.4 billion.

The NCPA, in concert with the Institute for Policy Innovation, another research group, revealed these findings in a recently published report, "Paying People Not to Work: The Economic Cost of the Social Security Earnings Limit."

Repealing the Earnings Test would also be a federal revenue gainer, the groups reported. "Government revenue would increase by $4.9 billion, more than offsetting the additional Social Security benefits that would be paid," the report stated.

The few remaining naysayers who continue to oppose repeal of the Earnings Test base their opposition on the belief that Social Security is an insurance policy. Specifically, Jacobs argues that benefits should be allocated only to those who are "retired"—and if someone is still working, and hence not "retired," he or she should not receive full benefits.

This reasoning ignores the difficulty seniors encounter in attempting to survive solely on Social Security or working at a job; seniors frequently need both to make ends meet. Because economic realities necessitate more money than Social Security or, say, a job at McDonald's provides, the Earnings Test must be repealed. Jacobs is simply out of step with the realities of the cost of living in the 1990's.

It is disturbing that two powerful committee chairmen are in a position to block landmark legislation that has the official support of a majority in the House.

It would be one thing to have the Older Americans Freedom to Work Act deliberated on the House floor and tabled. At least then the merits—or what some believe to be the lack thereof—would have been put in the open and subject to public inspection.

But a powerful minority of House leaders are doing everything in their power to make sure this bill is never debated on the House floor. Because of their refusal to allow deliberation on the proposed repeal of the Earnings Test, one can only conclude that they are fearful open discussion would lead to an even greater groundswell of public support and a demand that Congress move swiftly to approve the bill.

As our country takes steps to make itself more economically competitive for the 21st Century, it is clear that we will have to use every available resource, especially in the U.S. work force. Remaining competitive in the next century requires adopting policies that foster economic vibrancy and doing away with outdated policies that inhibit it. Repealing the Social Security Earnings Test will both encourage a large portion of the population to remain productive and help bolster the economy. The realities of our economic situation demand that we do so.

AIR FORCE SERGEANTS ASSOCIATION, INTERNATIONAL HEADQUARTERS,
Temple Hills, MD, January 8, 1992.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: The Air Force Sergeants Association strongly supports your amendment to S. 243 to repeal the Social Security Earnings Test. We have written to the House and Senate conferees expressing this support and are ready to assist in any way possible.

Sincerely,

JAMES D. STATON,
Executive Director.

THE SENIORS COALITION,
Washington, DC, January 26, 1995.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: I wanted to take just a moment to thank you for introducing the Senate measure to repeal the Social Security Earnings Test.

The Seniors Coalition has made this issue the cornerstone of our legislative agenda over the past three years. We have worked closely with Rep. Dennis Hastert in the House of Representatives and will continue to work with the House Republican Conference now that the Contract With America addresses the earnings limit.

I am enclosing for your information our Issue Paper on the earnings limit, as well as my recent testimony to the Ways and Means Social Security Subcommittee. The Seniors Coalition is ready to assist you in any way possible to ensure the success of your measure. This issue is very important to our two million members and they love being asked to get involved with legislative issues.

Please feel free to contact may assistant, Kimberly Schuld at (703) 591-0663 if there is anything we can do to help.

Sincerely,

JAKE HANSEN,
Vice President for Government Relations.

WALT DISNEY WORLD CO.,
June 9, 1994.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Senate Russell Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN. We fully support your proposal to eliminate the Social Security Earning Limit for senior citizens age 65 to 69. Furthermore, we favor additional relief for senior citizens in the age group 62 to 64 who are faced with an even more stringent limit on their earnings.

In today's society, Social Security is a supplement to a senior's income which is traditionally pension and investments. Unfortunately, some must continue to work to maintain a quality of life that is becoming evermore expensive.

Our opinion is formulated by the following compelling issues:

Our nation is faced with a shrinking labor supply for one of the fastest growing sectors of the economy—the service sector. Many seniors are fully capable of and interested in filing these openings.

As stated in your fact sheet, we should not have a system that has built-in disincentives that inhibit seniors from working.

The current "cap" of $8,040 does not permit a senior in the 62–64 age group to work in a minimum wage ($4.25/hour) job for an entire year without incurring a penalty on the last 10% of their income.

Seniors represent a growing part of our population who possess skill and attributes that employers are seeking. Seniors offer experience and an excellent work ethic to an employer.

Also, in light of the health care reform issue that is on everyone's mind, by raising the earnings "cap," this will allow seniors to avoid the Catch-22 of not being able to work enough hours to qualify for health care at most corporations.

In conclusion, we believe that seniors should always be able to work in a minimum wage paying job full time (40 hours per week) without being penalized. To ensure that this is not a future problem, we recommend that the Social Security Earnings Limit be indexed at 25% above the annual full time income based on prevailing federally mandated minimum wage. Currently, that would increase the cap to $11,050. Internally, this would allow us to hire a senior, have them work 30 hours per week, and penetrate the rate range to the second step before reaching this new ceiling.

Thank you for the opportunity to express our views on this important issue.

Sincerely,

DIANNA MORGAN.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF SENIOR CITIZENS,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1992.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: We urge your support of an early and positive vote for S. 3008, the Older Americans Act (OAA) reauthorization. We believe that further delay in reauthorizing the Act is a disservice to the millions of seniors and their families who depend on vital OAA programs.

The National Council of Senior Citizens, comprised of five million seniors active in five thousand clubs and Councils, has made passage of the OAA reauthorization one of our highest priorities for this Session. The Council has historically supported a sound Social Security retirement test amendment has caused a yearlong delay in final passage of the OAA. The two issues should be separated now and support of S. 3008 is the best way of resolving this matter.

Inaction on S. 3008 will be the cause of further loss of resources and a weakening of the national commitment to meet the needs of older persons at risk. We trust that we can count on your vigorous support of S. 3008.

Sincerely,

LAWRENCE T. SMEDLEY,
Executive Director.

COUNCIL OF JEWISH FEDERATIONS,
Washington, DC, July 23, 1992.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the Council of Jewish Federations, I am writing to urge the immediate passage of the reauthorization of the Older Americans Act, S3008. Millions of older citizens depend on the programs funded in this Act for community and social services, nutrition programs, senior centers, legal assistance, homebound care and assistance, research and demonstration, and employment opportunities.

As a network of over 200 Jewish Federations and their affiliated social service agencies, we are charged with the responsibility for providing thousands of elderly people with a life of quality. The Older Americans Act, with its coordination between local, state, and federal agencies, enables us to do this.

The Older Americans Act, originally enacted in 1965, has been a framework for providing vital nutritional and social services to the elderly community for over 25 years. At a time when seniors are growing as a population, the Older Americans Act should not be pulled from them. By passing the Older Americans Act the Senate will move one step further along in the process necessary to ensure that the elderly may continue to receive the quality care they need.

We urge you to pass this critical legislation immediately.

Sincerely,

MARK E. TALISMAN,
Director.

OLDER WOMEN'S LEAGUE,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1992.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the Older Women's League, I am writing to urge you to pass the Older Americans Act, S.3008, before Congress adjourns.

I cannot stress strongly enough how important it is to pass the Older Americans Act. The reauthorization of this legislation and its programs is critical to providing continuing supportive services for millions of older Americans, most of whom are low-income and women. Without final passage, important new programs cannot be initiated and the White House Conference on Aging cannot take place. Amendments of particular importance to OWL are those requiring data collection on long-term care workers, and supportive services for family caregivers.

From its inception, the Older Women's League has sought changes in Social Security that would make the system more equitable for women. While OWL has endorsed the Social Security provisions attached to the OAA conference bill passed by the House of Representatives, we believe that these and other changes to Social Security should be dealt with in a more appropriate legislative measure. We hope to continue working with Congress next year to make Social Security equitable for beneficiaries, particularly women.

Passage of the Older Americans Act is long overdue. The Act is the cornerstone of services for this country's most vulnerable older population. Congress must reaffirm its commitment to assure the quality of life sought for older Americans as declared in Title I of the Act.

Sincerely,

LOU GLASSE,
President.

NATIONAL COUNCIL ON THE AGING, INC.,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1992.

DEAR SENATOR: The National Council on the Aging, Inc. urges you to support for immediate Senate action to reauthorize the Older Americans Act, S. 3008.

Today, we are joining forces with many other national organizations to seek your help in passing a clean Older Americas Act.

For the past two decades, the OAA has provided vital services including congregate and home-delivered meals, transportation, information and referral, advocacy assistance, visiting and telephone reassurance, homemaker services, legal and employment services.

Failure to take action on the reauthorization means that none of the many significant improvements in OAA services crafted after long Congressional scrutiny will be initiated. Inaction has already had an effect on the current appropriation process in the House.

The delay in passing the OAA jeopardizes those services that allow millions of older Americans to maintain their independence and dignity. This year's amendments, many of which enhance services under the Act, cannot be implemented until it passes. Failure to pass the reauthorization will create a major rift in the covenant between Congress and the older population of our country.

I cannot stress strongly enough the importance of passage of S. 3008, the Older Americans Act at this time.

Sincerely,

DR. DANIEL THURSZ,
President.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF
AREA AGENCIES ON AGING,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1992.

JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: On behalf of the members of the National Association of Area Agencies on Aging, I am writing to urge you to take immediate action to pass the Older Americans Act reauthorization legislation, S. 3008. Thousands of older Americans in Arizona and millions of elders across our nation depend on the services provided under the Act—information and referral, supportive services, nutrition programs, transportation, in-home care and assistance, and the long-term care ombudsman program.

Senate inaction on S. 3008 is placing low-income, minority, and frail elders in jeopardy. Because of resulting funding problems, older persons are being denied services, there are increases in service waiting lists, and higher levels of unmet need.

As you are probably aware, passage of the Older Americans Act has been stalled by provisions to amend the exemption level of the Social Security earnings test. For the past nine months Congress has been unable to reach an agreement on the earnings test issue. We strongly believe it is time Congress moved beyond this impasse by decoupling the earnings test from the Older Americans Act—by passing S. 3008. Further delay will do a disservice to older persons who depend on Older Americans Act services. We, therefore, urge you to take the necessary steps to obtain immediate passage of this crucial legislation.

Sincerely,

CHERYLL SCHRAMM,
President.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF
RETIRED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1992.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: The National Association of Retired Federal Employees (NARFE), and its nearly 450,000 members, is greatly concerned that the Older Americans Act has not yet been reauthorized.

Today, we are joining forces with many other national aging organizations to seek your help in passing a clean Older Americans Act, S. 3008. Unless the Act is reauthorized soon, we fear that service programs that benefit low-income, minority and frail elders will be jeopardized.

We hope that you will join with us to urge passage of S. 3008 so that Older Americans Act programs for community and supportive services, nutrition programs, senior centers, legal assistance and elder opportunities serving millions of older Americans will be able to continue uninterrupted.

Sincerely,

HAROLD PRICE,
President.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATE
UNITS ON AGING,
Washington, DC, August 28, 1992.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: The National Association of State Units on Aging urges your support for immediate Senate action to reauthorize the Older Americans Act, S. 3008. While the Older Americans Act itself has received almost unanimous support on the floor of both Houses, it has been held captive for months by a host of seemingly never ending congressional procedural roadblocks and controversial and non-germane amendments.

Failure by the Senate to act swiftly will result in an unconscionable reduction in funds available across the nation to provide meals, transportation, in-home services, jobs, advocacy for nursing home residents, elder abuse prevention and similar, often life-sustaining, services to millions of low-income and frail older persons.

NASUA's members are the nation's 57 state agencies on aging, designated by Governors and state legislatures to represent and serve older persons in their states. They have tried to explain to older persons that these frustrating delays do not indicate a lack of congressional support for this program which is so important to them. However, their questions have turned to anger, their frustration to disillusionment.

Once again, we urge the Senate's immediate passage of S. 3008. Swift action can still avoid unnecessary and unwarranted reductions in Older Americans Act service funds and rescue literally years of congressional work to strengthen the Act from being lost when this Congress adjourns in a few short weeks.

Thank you for your consideration of our views on this issue of critical importance to millions of older persons.

Sincerely,

DANIEL A. QUIRK,
Executive Director.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE TO PRESERVE
SOCIAL SECURITY AND MEDICARE,
Washington, DC, October 25, 1995.
Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: Last year, Congress authorized a Commission to study the Social Security Notch Inequity as a way to examine the merits of the arguments for and against legislative action.

The National Committee welcomed the opportunity this Commission presented to adjudicate the merits of this long standing issue.

The Congress is to be congratulated for its efforts to bring this Commission to life.

This year, the leaders of both parties in both Chambers have made all of the eight Congressional appointments.

This month as a part of the Labor/HHS Appropriation Conference report, Congress appropriated $1.8 million so that the Commission can carry out its mandate and report back by the end of the year.

As soon as the President appoints his four members and designates a Chairperson, the Commission will proceed.

I hope that you will agree that the Notch Commission, when activated, will study the issue and note findings which will produce a recommendation. Please do your part to move this Commission into action.

Sincerely,

MARTHA A. MCSTEEN,
President.

THE RETIRED ENLISTED ASSOCIATION,
Alexandria, VA, January 14, 1992.
Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Russell SOB, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: On behalf of the more than 54,000 members of The Retired Enlisted Association (TREA) it is my pleasure to offer TREA's support to you in your efforts to repeal the Social Security Earnings Test.

We of TREA appreciate your willingness to address what we believe is a penalty imposed upon older Americans having a strong work-ethic.

Should you or a member of your staff have any specific tasking suggestions for this office on this issue, please don't hesitate to contact me.

Very respectfully,

JOHN M. ADAMS,
MCPO, USN (Ret.),
Director of Government Affairs.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand this amendment is stacked now. We do not vote on it now. We go next to another Republican amendment. We had a change in what our next amendment would be. But the Democrats have been advised. This will be the Helms amendment. Senator HELMS is ready on the floor, and they have a copy of it on the other side.

AMENDMENT NO. 2965

(Purpose: To allow senior citizens to continue to choose their doctors)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) proposes an amendment numbered 2965.

On page 461, line 13, after the period, insert the following:

"(3) POINT-OF-SERVICE COVERAGE.—If a Medicare Choice sponsor offers a Medicare Choice plan that limits benefits to items and services furnished only by providers in a network of providers which have entered into a contract with the sponsor, the sponsor must also offer at the time of enrollment, a Medicare Choice plan that permits payment to be made under the plan for covered items and services when obtained out-of-network by the Individual."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am sure that I am not alone in my strong feelings that the senior citizens of America must not be deprived of their right to choose their own doctors.

The text of my amendment has been modified to address both my strong desire to preserve the right of the senior citizens and the concerns of a number of Senators relating to options.

The pending amendment stipulates that if a Medicare choice plan offers a closed plan HMO within the Medicare margin, that plan must also offer a point-of-service plan enabling senior citizens to exercise their freedom of choice regarding the selection of physicians.

Three summers ago, I had a little encounter with some remarkable medical doctors, who are also my personal friends, in my hometown of Raleigh. I was at that time, of course, free to choose the team of surgeons who performed my heart surgery.

The point is that all senior citizens enrolled in Medicare should have the same choice that I had. And the pending amendment will enable senior citizens to preserve their right to choose their doctors.

Most Americans, whether their health is insured by private firms or by Medicare, enjoy their freedom to decide which medical professionals will perform their care and treatment. In reforming Medicare, Congress must make sure that senior citizens know their options and can choose their doctors and other medical providers instead of being required to accept somebody else's lineup of physicians and surgeons.

Mr. President, the Senate is considering major reforms to save Medicare and prevent its being pushed over the cliff. Medicare must be reformed before it goes bankrupt. We agree on that. Otherwise, the Medicare trust fund will be flat broke when the 21st century rolls around just a few years hence.

America's senior citizens—and I am one of them—depend on the health care coverage provided by the Medicare system, and those of us in Congress have a duty to make sure that they will not be forced to give up their right to choose their doctors. It is vital to their future security that our senior citizens retain this right. The power to choose will place senior citizens firmly in control of their health care.

Senior citizens may be enticed to join an HMO because they will gain coverage for prescription drugs and eyeglasses and hearing aids—coverages not presently provided by Medicare.

However, without some moderating legislation, senior citizens could very well find themselves locked into coverage that limits them to services provided by HMO-affiliated doctors, other professionals and hospitals. No longer would senior citizens have the freedom to choose their own doctors.

So, Mr. President, these are the reasons why I am introducing this amendment, to make sure that all Medicare-eligible Americans who choose to enroll in an HMO know their options of choosing the closed panel HMO or the point-of-service plan offered by the same insurance company.

Mr. President, consider if you will the predicament of a patient who requires heart surgery, and whose HMO will not approve the cardiologist with whom the senior has built up a long-standing relationship. My amendment will enable women being treated for breast cancer to have more options when choosing a lower cost plan that will allow them to continue to see the specialists familiar with them and their conditions. For this reason, more than a hundred patient advocacy groups have voiced their support for this amendment.

Point-of-service plans provide a safety valve to protect seniors who find themselves in the position of needing to see a doctor of choice. A point of service plan enables patients to see physicians and specialists inside and outside the managed care network. If seniors citizens are satisfied with the care they receive within the network, they will feel no need to choose outside doctors and specialists.

Mr. President, CBO has given me repeated assurances that a built-in point-of-service feature—the technical term for freedom of choice—would not increase the cost of Medicare. In fact, in testimony before the Senate Budget Committee, CBO stated that "the point of service option would permit Medicare enrollees to go to providers outside the HMO's panel when they wanted to, and yet it need not increase the benefit costs to HMOs or to Medicare. . . ."

Moreover, the actuarial firm of Milliman and Robertson concluded that depending on the terms of the plan and a reasonable cost sharing schedule, there should be no increase in cost to the HMO. In fact, there could actually be a savings.

The fastest-growing health insurance product is a managed care plan that includes the point-of-service feature. In fact, in 1993, 61 percent of all HMOs offer a point of service option.

Building a point-of-service option into health plans under Medicare will not interfere with the plan's ability to contain cost, nor will it limit their efforts to encourage providers and patients to use their health care resources wisely. It simply will ensure that health plans put the patient's interest first.

We can save Medicare. We can extend its benefits while lowering the towering costs that beset us today. And my amendment, we can also preserve a basic American freedom to choose one's own doctor.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration or yielding back of debate time on each amendment, the amendment be laid aside to consider the next amendment in order, and that when the next order of stacked votes begins, each amendment be voted on in the order in which it was offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and that it be charged to the 5 minutes on our allocated time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, could you hold up on the quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withhold?

Mr. EXON. Be glad to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Are we charging time because we have not given you this amendment?

Mr. EXON. We are having a great deal of difficulty. Since you have changed the order of offering amendments, our Senator was not alerted, and we are having trouble getting him here.

Mr. DOMENICI. Would you like to have 5 minutes and charge it to no one while the Senator gets down here?

Mr. EXON. I would appreciate that.

Mr. DOMENICI. We are just going to do that.

I ask unanimous consent we go into a quorum call for 5 minutes and that it not be charged to the bill or to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. EXON. I thank my friend for his courtesy.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I have a very brief, 2-minute colloquy with Senator HELMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. INHOFE. I say to Senator HELMS, just briefly, there was a little evolutionary process that we went through with this amendment. I think the amendment is very good, and I am in support of the amendment. Initially the Senator had it that under a managed plan, if a person wanted to leave the managed plan in one area of specialty, there was a split between the additional costs, if there were additional costs, of 70–30 percent. My suggestion in talking with the Senator and with his staff was it might be a better idea if we had a managed plan that allowed the market to take care of that differential so that if an individual went into a managed plan and at a later date wanted to go to another specialist, that individual would pay the differential himself so that the patient would have the choice of any practitioner he wanted to use and yet the savings of the managed plan would be effected.

My question would be, does the Senator think that perhaps this might avoid a duplication of all kinds of actuarial calculations, just to have one? And maybe we could talk about this or bring this up during the conference.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. The Senator's suggestion was excellent, and as he knows we undertook to adjust and modify the amendment to conform with the Senator's excellent suggestion.

Now, the HMO may set up a cost sharing plan in the manner that the Senator from Oklahoma suggested. A plan may require that the senior citizen pay up to 100 percent of the difference between what a network doctor would charge and what the HMO would pay for the doctor. And that is, of course, one of the many options.

My amendment is intentionally silent as to how an HMO should set its cost sharing schedule, but as the Senator has suggested, HMO's could set deductibles and other specific cost sharing arrangements.

So I commend the Senator on his suggestion. The modified version of the amendment is at the desk.

Mr. INHOFE. I thank the Senator from North Carolina.

I thank the Chair.

I would like to have a chance to look at that. I think we all want to accomplish the same low cost and choice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. INHOFE. I thank the Senator. I thank the Chair.

Mr. HELMS. I give the Senator a copy of the modified amendment which is now pending.

Mr. INHOFE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Now, Mr. President, could I get back to understanding where we are. We were on a 5-minute kind of recess waiting for the Democrats to have an opportunity and then we got a discussion going, which I think was good, for the record. Now where are we parliamentarywise?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has 5 minutes remaining on his time on the amendment.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague.

I yield back the 5 minutes of time that was allotted to us in the interest of conserving time and moving ahead.

Let me say the next amendment that we have now, which we do not have, is the amendment to be offered by Senator BROWN, as I understand it. We are having a great deal of difficulty with this shifting back and forth, trying to accommodate an awful lot of people. We do not mind accommodating people, but it is very difficult for us to make a determination on these things and get the proper people here the way we are receiving the amendments, or not receiving them, before they are introduced.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. Now, I say to Senator EXON, I am willing to accommodate whichever way he would like. We are not ready with the amendment that we styled for, the Finance Committee amendment. That is being worked on now. I mean, that is just a matter of fact. We cannot bring it until it is done.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, would the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Of course.

Mr. FORD. We have a Brown amendment, and Senator BROWN is not even on the list of 17 given to us. And the first four that were given to us——

Mr. DOMENICI. He is No. 17.

Mr. EXON. That is a question mark, yes.

Mr. FORD. BROWN is a question mark?

Mr. DOMENICI. We never thought he was a question mark.

Mr. FORD. That is a question mark on the list the Senator gave to us?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. FORD. Now, am I to understand that there will only be 10 out of the 17 that the Senator will give us?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes. There are only going to be 10 that we will have 5 minutes on a side. Any that are left over go into the——

Mr. FORD. Third tier.

Mr. DOMENICI. The third tier with no time.

Mr. FORD. The only thing we have on the Brown amendment is a question mark?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. FORD. We just got it. We do not know who to go to here or to have debate or if we want to even debate. This is getting completely out of hand, and we are not doing it properly. We are not being fair to either side. I think that we should stop now and go back and get it in order. And we will have ours. You had the first three, and then we get one, and we can tell you who that is and what it is about.

But I think we ought to take a few minutes, get them in order so we will know and we can have a decent 5-minute debate on each amendment on the floor.

Now, I think the Senator from New Mexico agrees with me because he has been a little bit frustrated by not being able to get them in the order in which he told me that we were going to get them.

So, Mr. President, I urge that we just take some time to get the amendments, because we do not know what the Senator from Colorado is going to offer, except the question mark.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, may I suggest in the interest of an orderly process—I already yielded back 10 minutes of our time, which still holds—therefore, I would suggest possibly it might be a good idea to take a 15-minute quorum call without being further charged to each side, and to come up with an orderly process so we can move expeditiously ahead.

Would the Senator from New Mexico respond?

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am going to yield.

Yes, I say to Senator BROWN, I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. BROWN. I did not mean to interfere. I think the distinguished Senator from Kentucky raises a very valid point. As far as I am concerned, I would be happy to limit my remarks to 1 minute and then to defer for a response time, which would give the distinguished Senator some additional time to review it. I think this is very straightforward.

Mr. FORD. We do not even know what it is yet.

Mr. BROWN. I delivered a copy.

Mr. FORD. We just now got it.

Mr. BROWN. I will try to accommodate any way I can.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, first, let me say we are in very good shape, comparatively speaking. So, I hope nobody is taken in by my exaggerations, or perhaps the exaggerations of the other side, on how muddled we are. We are not muddled at all. We were going to offer a Finance Committee amendment which is a very important amendment. We have been very forthright. It is not ready.

Now, having said that, we do not have your No. 1 amendment from the second tier. We have a statement of it. We have the Biden tax credit. We have not seen it either. And the Breaux child tax credit has been circulating around, so maybe we have seen it.

Now, what we would like to do is to have Senator BROWN go next. And, I say to the Senator, his is an important amendment, so I would ask him not to take less than 5 minutes. The Senator is entitled to explain it.

So we have that. And there are two changes. Let me see if we can help to get something done. I do not like being in this position either. So what we need to do is to get the Brown amendment. Or does the Senator have it now?

Mr. BROWN. We have copies, and both sides have it.

Mr. DOMENICI. We ask the Senator that he give us the remainder of his first three that we do not have.

We would like 15 minutes; do it the Senator's way. And we will try to get our amendments and get them to the other side. We are having some difficulty because our people did not know exactly when they were going to come up. We drew some arbitrary lines on who was in and who was out, which is tough for some of them.

So, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we have a 15-minute quorum call—

Mr. WARNER. Will the Senator withhold?

Instead of the quorum call, could others address generalities in the measure rather than just have a quorum call put in? This Senator would require about 6 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Sure. Sure.

Mr. WARNER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that we have 15 minutes without an amendment, divided equally, for any Senators, half on the other side, half on ours, that might want to speak to the bill, and that it not be charged to anything, because we are getting very short of time and it is sort of combined—our fault for the time. So let us not charge it to anyone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I have been listening with great attention and interest to this very important debate on both sides of the aisle regarding the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995.

I am pleased to support the budget which follows through on our promise to balance the budget by the year 2002, protect Social Security, and save Medicare from threatened bankruptcy.

While there has been much debate focused on the details of this massive package, I would like to address the promise to the American people, present and future, that this bill represents. This is not just a budget for another year. This is not a package of routine legislative changes. This is a historic commitment to America that deficit spending is about to come to an end and has been brought about during this first year of the Republican majority in the U.S. Congress.

The net result of a balanced budget will be lower interest rates for years to come and as many as 6 million new jobs. The reforms in this bill will give the States more control over critical entitlement programs that have become inflated with the Federal bureaucracy mismanagement of many years. These programs range from Aid to Families With Dependent Children to Medicaid. I strongly support these initiatives which will let the States decide how best to solve and serve the problems associated with their own citizens.

What is best for Virginia is not necessarily the same as what is best for another State. And this Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act will move more power and money out of Washington back to State governments and local communities where it properly, in my judgment, belongs.

I have received correspondence from many Virginians who support this bill because it will both balance the budget for the sake of future American families, particularly our children, Mr. President, and will pave the way for needed relief for the heavy tax burden on our present American families.

When this budget reconciliation bill is signed into law, we will not be at the end of the trail, but only at the beginning. We will have identified the path and the course, but each year we will have to make spending decisions that will keep us on the road that is being defined here today and tomorrow.

During my nearly 17 years as a privileged Member of this body, I have seen many instances where unforeseen spending requirements from hurricanes to peacekeeping operations have arisen and been funded by the Congress. These will surely occur from now until the year 2002 when the deficit is projected to disappear.

We are now committed to making our Government live within the funding levels contained in this bill. If emergencies occur, we will have to offset their costs with spending reductions. Those budget decisions will be as difficult in the year 2000 as they are this year. But this package is a commitment by the Republican majority and eventually by the entire Congress that we will stay the course.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX CUTS: A BOOST TO ECONOMIC GROWTH

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise in support of the capital gains tax cut provisions in the budget reconciliation bill that lies before us today.

I would like to focus my remarks on the economic effects that these provisions will have on our country.

Mr. President, what often seems to get lost in all of the debate about capital gains is economics.

Opponents of the capital gains tax cut seem content to promote class warfare while ignoring the economic effects of such a change.

It seems to me, however, that instead of worrying about whether the so-called rich will pay less in taxes under this bill, the most important thing to focus on is how to sustain and boost economic growth so we can balance the budget and create the jobs needed by the next generation.

The respected economic forecasting firm of DRI/McGraw Hill has studied our capital gains tax provisions very carefully. Their findings appear on this chart 1 following this statement.

First, we should note that between now and 1999, DRI projects that about 600,000 new jobs will be created as a direct result of the capital gains provisions contained in this bill.

Of paramount concern to all of us is the need to expand the job base so that no matter where one is on the ladder of success, there is opportunity to move up economically.

As this chart 2 shows, most of the new job creation taking place in this country is provided by new companies and those that are in the early phases of their growth cycles.

Look at the figures—while large companies are in the down-sizing mode, small and medium companies are expanding.

The expanding companies are not the long established blue chippers. There is more risk involved investing in these emerging enterprises than in mature companies.

By lowering the effective capital gains tax rates, the risk threshold for all investors will decrease and this will cause more equity funds to become available to companies that are in the growth stage.

To illustrate this dynamic, Mr. President, consider the following facts.

From 1969 to 1971, there were on average 510 new public offerings in this country per year.

From 1972 to 1976, when the effective capital gains rates jumped to just over 49 percent, only 145 new public offerings occurred on average each year.

When the effective capital gains rate fell to 20 percent between 1981 and 1986, the average annual new public offerings figure jumped to 577.

Between 1987 and 1992, when the capital gains tax rate jumped up again to 28 percent, the number of public offerings dropped to only 431.

While some growth in new company formations can be attributed to the fact that our economy was growing during those years, one wonders how much more it might have benefited if we had not increased the capital gains tax rate.

Obviously, there is a relationship between the capital gains tax rate and the rate at which new companies start and grow.

And, because these new and expanding companies are fueling most of our job growth—more than 70 percent of all new jobs are in small business—we can see that lowering the capital gains tax rate will increase the number of jobs in this country.

Mr. President, DRI has made three other projections on chart 1.

Because of the capital gains provisions in this bill, we should experience a 4.1 percent increase in our capital stock, a 5.1 percent increase in fixed investments and a 1.2 percent increase in labor productivity.

What does capital stock refer to? It refers to our investment in plant, equipment, and technology. Even a ditch digger needs a shovel.

While hundreds of millions of laborers around the world work for mere pennies per hour, how is it that most of our American jobs have not already been exported outside of our country? The answer is capital stock.

We have one of the highest ratios in the world of capital stock per labor hour worked.

In other words, for each hour a laborer works, we have more capital invested to support that worker in his or her job than most of our competitors around the world.

As a result, on a per capita basis, American workers are the most productive in the world.

This explains how our country grew from a predominantly agricultural economy to a predominantly manufacturing and services economy without reducing our agricultural output.

It has been estimated that at the turn of the century, about two-thirds of the American work force were in farming.

Today, only about 3 percent of Americans work in farming. Yet, our grocery stores and storage facilities are filled to overflowing even though the number of mouths to feed has gone up and the number of agricultural workers has gone down dramatically.

But for this tremendous infusion of capital stock into the equation, our American farmers would probably be about as productive and well paid as their counterparts in China.

Because of the capital investment supporting our workers, we have made their services more valuable which, in turn, has prompted higher real wage rates here than most other countries in the world.

Mr. President, the critical relationship between capital stock and real wage rates is illustrated by chart 3. Note that as our capital stock grows, real wages increase almost in lockstep. Thus, it is critical that we maintain growth in both capital stock, fixed asset investment, and worker productivity.

And, as the DRI projections show, the capital gains provisions of this bill will do just that.

Please note, Mr. President, the DRI projection in chart 1 that our collective cost of capital will drop by 8 percent as a result of the capital gains tax reductions in our bill.

Many believe that our relatively high cost of capital is a critical area of U.S. weakness when competing in the international marketplace.

Thus, in passing a capital gains tax reduction, we can take a meaningful step today toward narrowing this critical competitive gap and helping all Americans in the process.

It should go without saying that growth in our collective standard of living depends upon growth in our gross domestic product.

Mr. President, a 1.4 percent increase in GDP in the DRI projections contained in chart 1 might not seem like very much, but when applied to a $7 trillion economy, we are talking about an additional $100 billion of growth.

As can be seen from this chart 4, Mr. President, we treat capital gains more punitively than most of our major international competitors.

We can also see why the competitors in the Far East are gaining on us. We need to respond to this challenge in order to enhance our international competitive position.

Mr. President, much has been said about the wisdom of lowering capital gains taxes at a time when we are trying to balance the budget.

In my opinion, tax cuts and balancing the budget are not mutually exclusive, especially in the area of capital gains.

Before the Hatch-Lieberman capital gains proposal underwent minor changes in the Senate Finance Committee, the Joint Committee on Taxation projected that it would result in about $89 billion in lost Federal revenues over 10 years.

I very much doubt that this projection will be accurate, for a couple of reasons.

First, both the CBO and the Joint Committee on Taxation have a poor track record in estimating the revenue effects of capital gains tax rate changes, as can be seen from this chart.

In connection with estimated capital gains realizations for 1991, CBO originally projected realizations of $269 billion while the Joint Committee on Taxation projected realizations of $285 billion.

In reality, there were only about $108 billion worth of realizations for that year. In other words, the CBO was off by 60 percent and the Joint Committee on Taxation was off by 62 percent.

Estimating errors of a similar magnitude were made for 1990. In this case, the Bush Treasury Department projected capital gains revenues of $48 billion, while CBO projected $53 billion for that same year.

In reality, the revenue only amounted to $28 billion. The cumulative gap from 1989 to 1992 between the Bush Treasury's revenue estimates and what actually was realized totaled $85 billion. The CBO was $118 billion off the mark over the same period.

The problem is that the economic models used by CBO, the Joint Committee on Taxation, and the Treasury do not adequately take into account the macroeconomic feedback effects caused by changes in the capital gains tax rates.

This explains the wide divergence between their projections and reality.

It is a fundamental law of economics that people respond to incentives. If we tax a good or service more, people buy or produce less of it. If we tax capital more, we get less.

If we lower the tax on capital, we will create more of it.

For years, the revenue estimating agencies of the Federal Government have failed to adequately account for the feedback effects of taxation.

DRI has included these feedback effects in its estimate.

As the DRI study indicates in chart 1, rather than the loss projected by the Joint Committee on Taxation, we should actually experience at least a $12 billion increase in Federal revenues over the next 10 years.

Personally, I believe this estimate to be on the conservative side. I believe a 50-percent capital gains deduction will unlock the floodgates of capital gains realizations.

There is an estimated $8 trillion in unrealized capital gains in this country. Even if this bill only unlocks a small percentage of this vast mountain of capital, we will have unleashed a tremendous force for growth in our economy.

With the benefit of hindsight, it is easy to see that we made a serious mistake in raising the effective tax rates on capital gains after 1986.

Chart 5 shows the foregone realizations that we missed by the 1986 capital gains tax increase.

The lighter bars indicate actual realizations. Notice, Mr. President, how they drop off and stagnate after 1986 while the Standard and Poors stock index [S & P Index] continued to rise.

The dark bars represent what taxable capital gains realizations would likely have occurred if they had kept pace with the S&P Index, as they did before the capital gains tax increase.

This helps explain why our capital gains tax revenues have been so anemic since 1986.

After jacking up the top effective capital gains tax rate by 40 percent, from 20 to 28 percent, some might have expected a similar 40 percent increase in capital gains tax revenues.

However, we have only managed to generate an average of about 64 percent per year of the capital gains revenue received in 1986; 28 percent is clearly higher than the tax rate that maximizes capital gains revenues to the Treasury.

Mr. President, recent history has made it clear that there is a direct relationship between capital gains tax rates and the amount of revenue from capital gains realizations received by the Treasury.

Experience shows that reducing the capital gains tax rate actually increases government revenues.

Consider the period from 1978 to 1985. On November 1, 1978, the top capital gains rate dropped from an effective 49 percent to 28 percent. It fell again in the middle of 1981 to 20 percent.

Rather than experiencing a similar reduction in capital gains revenue, as some might predict, we saw the sharpest increase in such revenues since World War II.

Annual capital gains tax receipts grew from $9.1 billion in 1978 to $26.5 billion in 1985.

In other words, at the same time we experienced a 59 percent decrease in the top capital gains tax rate, our annual capital gains tax revenues increased by 191 percent.

Mr. President, some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are, in effect, saying that no tax benefits should go to the so-called wealthy.

This is ludicrous. How do we expect to attain the economic objectives that we all are seeking if the wealthy stay on the sidelines as mere spectators, rather than as active participants?

Some of my colleagues seem to hold that no matter how beneficial a certain course of action is to the economy and to average Americans, that action is totally unacceptable if the rich get any benefit from it.

Abraham Lincoln once observed that you cannot help the weak by weakening the strong.

Likewise, we cannot help all Americans by punitively taxing wealth. Our progressive income tax already does a good job of that.

Trying to craft a set of incentives that exempts from coverage the very people whose conduct is critical to the attainment of our economic goals just will not work.

By giving an across-the-board capital gains tax deduction to everyone alike, we will encourage an efficient reallocation of resources in such a way as to stimulate economic growth for all Americans.

As I mentioned earlier, at stake in all of this is about $8 trillion of locked-in capital gains, which if unlocked, would produce substantial revenue gains to the Treasury, as well as create more jobs and economic growth for all Americans.

Let me close Mr. President, with a real-life example that indicates that all of the economic principles I have talked about actually work and are not just theories that sound good.

As a division of a major parent company, Sungard Data Systems had $30 million in annual sales but was losing money.

The parent company decided to sell this division. Venture capitalists believed that they could turn things around and return Sungard to profitability. The new buyers were correct.

After the sale, the new management generated over $440 million in revenues and about $70 million in operating income.

What used to be a 400-employee division before the sale turned into a 2,400-employee company after the sale. This represents a 500-percent increase in jobs.

Did the rich venture capitalists get richer from all of this? Of course they did. But most importantly, 2,000 people had good jobs that did not exist before. This is the way our economy has always worked.

This is America, where it is possible to create wealth for oneself by investing one's sweat, one's brains, and taking a risk. By so doing, the risk taker creates wealth and opportunity for those around him or her.

Now is not time to abandon the economic principles that made this country the greatest economic powerhouse the world has ever known.

Mr. President, I urge all of my colleagues to vote in favor of the tax package reported out of the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that items referred to above be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

September 1995 DRI/McGraw Hill study projects the specific economic benefits that will result from a 50 percent capital gains deduction as follows:

150,000 new jobs created each year from 1997–2000.

4.1 percent increase in capital stock.

5.1 percent increase in fixed investment over 10 years.

1.2 percent increase in labor productivity.

8 percent reduction in the cost of capital.

1.4 percent increase in GDP over 10 years.

$12 billion increase in federal tax revenues over 10 years.

Who Generates the New Jobs?

Answer: New Companies and Those in the Early Stages of Expansion:

Small Companies: Added 1.6 million net jew jobs in 1993; and 25% job growth per year from 1989 to 1993.

Large Companies: Industries dominated by large companies had a net decrease of 200,000 jobs in 1993; and Fortune 500 companies lost about 3% of their jobs from 1989 to 1993.

U.S. AFFILIATED INSULAR AREAS

Mr. AKAKA. I would like to engage in a colloquy with the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, and my good friend, the senior Senator from Hawaii, on a matter of very great concern to me—a provision in the House reconciliation bill that is inconsistent with House and Senate Appropriations Committee actions and would eliminate our ability to meet some of the most basic needs in the U.S. affiliated insular areas.

What the House Subcommittee on Native American and Insular Affairs has proposed, and the House has accepted, may appear to many to be relatively noncontroversial—the repeal of a $27.7 million mandatory annual appropriation to the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands [CNMI] for infrastructure improvement projects. The reality, however, is that this recommendation would wreck—before it can even be implemented—a carefully negotiated bipartisan, bicameral agreement made by the Conference Committee on Appropriations for Interior and Related Agencies.

After outlining the facts in this case, I would hope and urge that the Senate conferees conclude that this proposal is misguided and must be rejected.

In the administration's budget request it was recognized that the needs of the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands for Federal financial assistance were decreasing due to local economic growth. Therefore, the level of financial assistance could be decreased. However, the Administration and the Appropriations Committees also recognized that there continue to be significant future needs and obligations to be met in other island insular areas.

The first of these other obligations is fulfilling the intent of section 103(i) of Public Law 99-239, the Compact of Free Association Act of 1985, which obligates the United States to undertake radiation mitigation measures and to resettle the people of Rongelap who were irradiated during the United States' nuclear testing program in the Marshall Islands.

Second, Public Law 99-239 also authorizes immigration from the former Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands to the United States and its territories. In recognition of the impact which this immigration would have on social services, particularly in Guam, section 104(e)(6) of Public Law 99-239 authorizes compensation to assist in offsetting the negative impacts of immigration under the compacts.

Third, economic development in remote American Samoa is still unable to generate sufficient revenue to meet all of the territory's basic needs. Of greatest concern is the Environmental Protection Agency's estimated $30 million backlog in waste water construction. If these projects are not undertaken, then the community will face an increasing risk of contamination of its groundwater, as well as destruction of its protective and productive surrounding coral reefs. In addition, American Samoa's hospital facilities are nearing the end of their useful life. The Department of the Interior and the Army Corps of Engineers estimate renovation or replacement costs for healthcare facilities to be between $20 and $60 million.

Finally, the fourth obligation facing the Federal Government with respect to the islands is fulfilling our commitment to the CNMI. In 1992, the previous administration and representatives of the CNMI reached an agreement under which the Federal Government would provide $120 million in financial assistance to the CNMI, to be matched by $120 million from the CNMI, to meet the capital infrastructure needs of their rapidly growing population and economy. From 1993 to 1995 much of these funds were provided to the CNMI under the mandatory appropriation established by section 702 of Public Law 94-241, the Covenant to Establish the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas. However, $77 million remains to be paid under the agreement.

Given the extreme pressure on the budget, how were these needs and obligations to the islands to be met? Fortunately, the administration proposed a solution which would allow the appropriations committees to avoid the nearly impossible task of meeting these needs through large annual discretionary appropriations. The proposal, contained in the Insular Development Act (S. 638), was to reallocate the CNMI's $27.7 million mandatory annual appropriation to meet needs among all of the islands. The Energy Committee held a hearing on this bill on May 25, 1995, and the full Senate passed the bill on July 20. The Office of Management and Budget and the House and Senate Appropriations Committees supported the proposal because it would allow for significant discretionary savings.

In short, there is a solution to a set of difficult problems. The administration's original concept was adopted and modified to specify priorities and funding levels among these needs. It was then agreed to on a bipartisan basis by the Conferees on Interior Appropriations, who could now also agree to eliminate discretionary funding to meet these needs.

Mr. President, it is with the greatest disappointment that I view the House recommendation to repeal the CNMI mandatory appropriation. This proposal completely wrecks the carefully crafted policy to meet the public health needs of Samoa, fulfill our commitment to the CNMI, compensate Guam for the negative social impacts resulting from compact immigration, and to acquit ourselves with respect to our commitments to the nuclear testing victims of Rongelap Atoll.

I would like to call on my good friend, the senior Senator from Louisiana and the ranking member of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, to confirm my presentation of the facts in this matter.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Senator is absolutely correct. The provisions of the Interior conference report were the result of weeks of careful bipartisan effort. As ranking member of the authorizing committee, I have been familiar with each of these issues for many years and have shared with the Senator from Hawaii the frustration of trying to find a solution. This is why I joined with my chairman, the senior Senator from Alaska, in writing to the chairman and ranking member of the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee urging that the administration's proposal, as modified and reported by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, be included in the Interior appropriations bill.

I have been dealing with territorial issues since I first came to the Senate in 1972, and I can assure my colleagues that although these islands are small and remote, their needs are just as real as those of the States. We have responsibilities to U.S. citizens and nationals and citizens of the former Trust Territory that we simply cannot turn our backs on. After three long years we have finally come up with a solution to meet four of our most pressing problems in the islands. I simply cannot understand how the House justifies its proposal, which would ignore these responsibilities and commitments.

Let me reassure my colleague from Hawaii that I will do all that I can to ensure that the Senate position prevails on this matter.

Mr. AKAKA. I thank my good friend and would also like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, whether my understanding on these matters is correct.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I agree with the Senator's statement. In fact, I ask unanimous consent that the letter sent by our Committee to the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee requesting the adoption of S. 638 be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES,
Washington, DC, July 25, 1995.
Senator SLADE GORTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Interior and Related Agencies, Committee on Appropriations, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We are writing to you concerning the funding for the Department of the Interior's responsibilities for territories and insular areas, including the freely associated states. We are concerned over the action taken by the House in eliminating funding for staffing and for very important programs, such as technical assistance, operations and maintenance improvement, insular management control, and disaster assistance. Each of these programs, while relatively small, have proved to be of critical importance in assisting the various island governments. We understand that both the Departments of Defense and the Interior have also expressed their concern over this action.

The elimination of the salaries for all staff is perplexing. Including the FY '95 appropriation, there are over $900 million in funding for the territories and freely associated states that the Department of the Interior is responsible for. The Department has reorganized and placed responsibility under the Assistant Secretary for Policy, Management and Budget. As part of that reorganization, the core permanent staff has been reduced from 45 to 25. We believe that the staffing level should be kept to the minimum necessary to enable the Secretary to fully discharge his responsibilities. We have strongly suggested that they give serious consideration to using at least a portion of the savings to obtain details from other agencies to enhance the Department's ability to deal with problems in the islands and to reduce the need for permanent staff. We expect that further adjustments will be made in the future as the responsibilities of the Secretary change. The expected efficiency and greater emphasis on technical and financial management assistance to the areas will be completely frustrated by the House action.

We do not see how the reductions proposed by the House can be supported. As you may be aware, the Senate has passed S. 638, which in part would redirect the permissible uses of that portion of the current entitlement for the Northern Marianas not needed to meet the 1992 Agreement on future funding so that the excess could be used for long-term infrastructure planning. Those funds would also provide the ability to meet United States responsibilities in areas such as assisting in the resettlement of Rongelap. In part, the Committee felt that this action would increase the flexibility of the Appropriations Committee to address critical needs such as financial management. Enactment of that provision would also provide a significant portion of the infrastructure funding for American Samoa needed to meet critical health and safety concerns. Given the increasing pressures on the budget, we see no alternative other than reallocation of the excess CNMI funding if essential needs are to be met.

Accordingly, we urge you to reject the action taken by the House in eliminating funding for staff and for essential programs for the insular areas. If you agree with the action taken by the Senate with respect to the use of excess funding for the Northern Marianas, we suggest that you seriously consider adopting such a provision as part of the Appropriation measure.

Sincerely,
J. BENNETT JOHNSTON,
Ranking Minority Member.
FRANK H. MURKOWSKI,
Chairman.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Let me also reassure my colleague of my strong desire to see that our agreement, as set forth in the Appropriations conference report, not be undermined by the House reconciliation proposal which contradicts that agreement.

Mr. AKAKA. I thank the Chairman for his reassurance. Mr. President, finally I would like to ask the senior Senator from Hawaii, for his support on this matter.

Mr. INOUYE. The Senator is correct. It comes as a great disappointment to me that just as the United States was finally coming to a resolution on how to meet its obligations on these issues, the House has proposed to repeal the source of funding that had been agreed upon.

I stand with my colleagues on the authorizing and appropriations committees in urging that the Senate insist on its position in conference—that the CNMI's mandatory funding be preserved in order to implement the bipartisan, bicameral agreement to reallocate these funds as set forth in the Interior Appropriations conference report.

Mr. AKAKA. I thank my colleagues for their support in ensuring that the Senate position prevails on this issue.

Mr. KEMPTHORNE. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of passage of the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995. This is not only good legislation. It is historic legislation. For the first time, in a long time, Congress has the opportunity to vote for a truly balanced budget—not just a theory, not just rhetoric but an action plan to realize the goal that many thought impossible.

Only once in the past 30 years has the Federal Government had a balanced budget. Every other year we "deficit spent" our way toward a national debt that now stands at nearly $5 trillion dollars. That is $19,000 of debt for every man, woman and child in the United States. Because the interest on the debt is threatening to consume ever larger portions of the budget, this national debt is currently one of the greatest threats to our children's future.

For the fiscal year that ended on September 30 the Federal Government ran a deficit of $161 billion. If nothing is done, and we don't change our spending habits, that deficit will rise to $256 billion by 2002. We must stop borrowing from the future and learn to live within our means. This budget reconciliation bill gives us the blueprint to accomplish that task.

While the American people made it clear that they wanted the Federal budget balanced, they also made it clear that they wanted meaningful tax relief. The Republican leadership heard that message loud and clear. Besides balancing the Federal budget by the year 2002, the Reconciliation Act of 1995 provides the biggest tax cut in history—more than $245 billion. Of these cuts 84 percent go to those making less than $100,000 and 70 percent go to those making less than $75,000. These tax cuts are real, significant tax relief for the families of America. For example:

A $500 per child under 18 tax credit for couples earning $110,000 or less annually.

20 percent credit of interest paid on student loans up to $500 per year, per borrower, for couples with an adjusted gross income of $60,000 or less.

Raising the income limits for eligibility for IRA's by $5,000 annually until they reach $100,000 for couples and $85,000 for singles and indexing for inflation and creating a $2,000 IRA for homemakers.

Capital gains reform that deducts 50 percent of the gain for individuals that have owned property at least 1 year, which effectively lowers the tax rate to 19.8 percent. A reduction of the corporate rate on tax gains to 28 percent. Both changes are effective 10–13–95.

Estate tax reforms that will allow more Americans to continue operating family owned business after the death of the primary owner/founder. The first $1.5 million in value of family owned businesses and farms are exempt from tax and the tax on the next $3.5 million is reduced by 50 percent.

These tax cuts are both responsive and responsible solutions to the excessive taxation that is stealing the financial independence from American families across this country.

The Medicare portion of the budget reconciliation package is, in every sense of the word, true reform. It takes the current system, which is so obviously flawed and damaged beyond simple Band-Aid fixes, and transforms it into something which will truly work. It will work not only to meet the health care needs of current and future senior citizens, it will work to allow the marketplace, and therefore the people, to shape the future of health care.

We all know the level of political rhetoric which has surrounded the issue of Medicare reform. The fact remains, however, unless something is done, and done soon, Medicare will go bankrupt. This is not a political issue. This is not a matter of just whether or not Republicans want to change the system. It is a question of whether or not we have the courage to make the tough decisions needed to save the system. Simply delaying the pending bankruptcy for a couple of years will not be sufficient. We have had enough of that attitude. It is time to stand firm and to stop avoiding the difficult decisions before us. I believe the Republican Medicare reform package does just that.

The contents of the Medicare reform proposal have been significantly misrepresented. I believe it is important to point out what the measure reported out of the Finance Committee does.

The first thing the plan does is provide choice. For too long we have told this Nation's senior citizens that they may not have a choice. When they turn 65, they are placed on Medicare, whether they want it or not. Until recently, only a few were even allowed to choose managed care options instead of fee-for-service. I believe this is outrageous. To tell people in this country that they may not provide for their own health care as they see fit violates the basic principles of freedom for which so many of our seniors fought and sacrificed. Some have claimed seniors have all the choice they need, but that is simply not true. When older people are turned away from a health care provider's office because the provider no longer wishes to struggle with the regulations and bureaucracy surrounding the Medicare Program, they have no choice. This must simply change.

So what kind of choice will seniors get to make? Under the Republican proposal they can stay enrolled in the current Medicare program. Those wishing to go beyond the present system may choose from traditional fee-for-service indemnity health plans—(just like many of them had before retirement), coordinated care plans, and high-deductible health plans with medical savings accounts, also known as MSAs. In addition, the Medicare reform plan allows future enrollees to select from yet unforeseen health options as they become available, provided the plans meet minimum Federal standards. This, I would say to my colleagues, is the kind of choice most Americans already have. Do our senior citizens deserve any less?

The Medicare reform plan we are debating also addresses another issue, fraud, which Idahoans have told me should be one of the primary focal points of any reform effort. I am pleased our plan takes serious efforts to reduce health care fraud and abuse. Specifically, the bill provides for the establishment of coordinated efforts by Federal, State, and local law enforcement officials to combat fraud. The bill also instructs the Secretary of Health and Human Services to exclude individuals convicted of health care fraud from receiving payments under Medicare and Medicaid. Furthermore, the reform package would establish a new criminal statute, with specific criminal penalties, and would also increase fines and civil penalties for health care fraud.

With expanded choice and reduced fraud, one must wonder why there is so much opposition to our Medicare reform plan. I believe it stems from fear based on misinformation. In an attempt to set the record straight, I would like to take this opportunity to point out what the reform package does not do.

First, this proposal does not cut Medicare. Under the Republican plan, Medicare will continue to grow by 6.4 percent each year. Over the next 7 years, expenditures for Medicare will grow by nearly $2,000 per recipient. Only in Washington could a $2,000 increase in payments per person be labeled, by some, as a cut.

The GOP plan also does not force people to give up Medicare or to join managed care organizations. As I stated before, the plan offers seniors a choice. It lets them, rather than the Government, decide how one will receive health care. I believe this Nation's senior citizens can make those choices.

In addition, the spending reductions included in the Medicare reform package are not, and I will repeat this, are not, related to a tax cut. The bill explicitly states that savings generated from reforming the Medicare system may not be used for any purpose other than saving and preserving the Medicare system. Whether or not we adopt any tax cuts, we need these savings to preserve the system for current and future recipients.

Finally, to those who say smaller savings would be sufficient, I would ask them to define "sufficient." While the Democrat's proposal would prevent the system from going bankrupt in 2002, as it is currently on a pace to do, it would allow the system to fail only 2 years later. This attitude of "put it off until it is someone else's problem" is precisely why the United States is in the economic mess it is. As the Medicare trustee's said, "prompt, effective, and decisive action is necessary." Simply delaying the inevitable is not a solution.

I was pleased to note that my hometown newspaper, The Idaho Statesman, shares this view. In a recent editorial the newspaper stated, "Without enormous changes like those proposed by the GOP, the program will go broke soon after the turn of the century." The editorial went on to say, "somebody finally has the courage to begin fixing what's been broken for a long time."

Since before I first came to the Senate, Idahoans have told me they want Congress to face the important issues head on, to try to set this country on solid economic footing. The Medicare reform plan which the Senate Finance Committee approved does just that. It will not be easy, and it will not be painless, but it will achieve our goals. It will correct the financial difficulties the program faces, bring the efficiencies of the market into play, and give senior citizens the freedom to choose.

The Idaho Statesman's editorial ended with the following statement, "The numbers clearly show that Medicare, which served one generation well, cannot serve the next one without significant reform." The Republican package is just that, significant, and serious, reform.

The Finance Committee has also used this bill as a vehicle to redirect and energize the earned income tax credit. The EITC is a well-conceived and well-intended program designed to encourage work over welfare for low-income families. Unfortunately this worthy intent has been lost in what has become the fastest growing entitlement program we have. Just since 1986 it has grown from 7 million families receiving an average of $281 to 18 million families receiving an average of $1,265. The EITC no longer benefits only families with children but provides benefits to both individuals and families without children.

The Senate proposal redirects the EITC back to the truly needy, reduces the potential for fraud and abuse and puts money where we need it, in the hands of low income families with children. We will increase spending on the intended beneficiaries at the same time we save the taxpayers more than $32 billion.

I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act. It is good, smart legislation that demonstrates to the American taxpayer that Republicans are serious about changing the business as usual attitude in Congress.

S-CORPORATION REFORM

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, as many of my colleagues are aware, there are a number of tax issues of significant importance to the 1.9 million American businesses that are S corporations that did not get resolved during the Finance Committee markup last week. Many of those issues—which include the current law's severe limitations on capital formation, growth, corporate streamlining, family business planning, estate planning, and tax simplifaction—are addressed in a bill I introduced earlier this year with my colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH. That bill, S. 758, the S Corporation Reform Act of 1995, has the bipartisan cosponsorship of a third of the Senate.

While it is unfortunate that none of the provisions of S. 758 were included in the bill reported by the Finance Committee and made part of the Budget Reconciliation Bill that is before us, I am pleased to note that many of these provisions were included in the tax bill passed by the House Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I, too, share the concerns of my colleague from Arkansas and see S corporation reform as an important step in helping this nation's S corporations stay competive and grow. I firmly believe that S corporation reform is long overdue, and hope that we can work through the conference process and during the rest of this legislative session, not simply to adopt the key S corporation simplification provisions that have already been included in the House bill, but also to address and include several additional provisions that are critical components of S. 758.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I agree with my colleague from Utah. Specifically, I believe that it is very important that we extend the S corporation reform initiative in the budget process to include all the items in the House bill, as well as such provisions as:

The ability of S corporations to issue preferred stock and general convertible debt;

The ability of S corporations to form ESOPs, so their employees can share in the success of the business;

The ability of financial institutions to be shareholders of an S corporation's stock, which is often a critical element of obtaining financing for corporate growth; and

The ability of all members of a family to be counted as a single shareholder of an S corporation, since family-owned S corporations are frequently stifled as they continue to grow from one generation to the next.

I hope that these issues will be on the table for discussion, and that my colleagues will be willing to help S corporations—most of which are small and/or family owned businesses—be more effective competitors in the marketplace.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I understand the concerns of my colleague from Arkansas, and also hope that we will be able to resolve these and other critical issues in conference. I will be working closely with Senator PRYOR in the coming weeks on these very important legislative objectives.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, seeing no other Senators seeking recognition, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENNETT). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995 which, for the first time in many years, controls entitlement spending, restrains the growth of Government and eliminates annual deficits.

What a refreshing contrast this balanced budget reconciliation bill is to the budget proposals submitted over the past 2 years by the President. Those budgets enacted the largest tax increase in history, contained no plan to balance the budget, significantly increased the national debt, failed to restrain growth in nondefense Government spending and proposed dangerous reductions in national defense spending.

Mr. President, the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995 reverses direction on those policies which are strapping our economy and burdening all Americans with an overwhelming national debt.

I remind my colleagues that the national debt now stands at over $4.9 trillion. Outlays for interest on the public debt is well over $300 billion per year, exceeding outlays for any other Government Department or program, except Social Security.

Furthermore, failure to adopt this reconciliation act will result in annual deficits exceeding $200 billion for as far as can be projected. That is not an acceptable alternative. We must reduce Government spending. We must eliminate these annual deficits, and we must reduce the national debt. The Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act puts us on track to accomplish those objectives.

Mr. President, I support the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995. I vote yes for reducing the deficit. I vote yes for controlling the growth of Government spending. I vote yes for our families by reducing their tax burden. I vote yes for restoring the economic future of our Nation. Therefore, I will vote yes for this bill and encourage my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I was here listening to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina talking a moment ago. As always, I am impressed with his vigor, vitality, and enthusiasm and, indeed, his stamina.

I also found myself in agreement with much, if not most, of what he was saying. I agree that we should vote yes on deficit reduction, and I see my friend from New Mexico here. I want to tell him how much I admire him personally, the job he has done and the work that he has put in over the years on the Budget Committee, the years he has spent dedicating himself to budget reductions and trying to achieve a balanced budget for this country. So I do not want him in any way to regard the comments I might make in the next few moments as being in derogation of my respect and admiration for him.

I agree with what Senator THURMOND said; we have to vote yes on deficit reduction. I believe that. I believe we have to vote yes on cutting spending. I believe we have to vote yes on reforming programs which have heretofore been regarded as untouchable, being third rails we cannot touch. I think we have reached the point in our history where we have to look at virtually every program and not decide that any of them are immune from reform, from trimming, from cutting, maybe even elimination.

But there are other items in this package that I do not support. I do not support drilling in ANWR. I do not support opening that up. I do not, frankly, support calling for tax reductions at a time when we are calling for deep budget cuts. For me, it is the equivalent of putting our foot on the brake and putting our foot on the pedal at the same time. It is a personal decision on my part. I feel that I can support virtually all the cuts that are necessary to achieve a balanced budget by the year 2002.

I was pleased to hear President Clinton indicate that he, No. 1, believes we should strive for a balanced budget. Initially he said 10 years, then it was 9 years, and now I believe it is even 7 years. I think that is quite a concession on his part, that he agrees that we ought to have a balanced budget within a 7-year timeframe.

The dilemma that I face is like that of several other of my colleagues. This may be the only vehicle to date that we have for achieving a balanced budget by the year 2002. This may be only part of the process that is underway.

This may be act II of a three-part drama that has to be played out that was initiated by the Contract With America, as being part one in its adoption, and part two being our deliberations and debate, and, ultimately, votes here in the Senate and conference with the House, to present a package that will be sent to the President that most, if not all, of us anticipate will be vetoed by the President because it does not include some of his priorities. That may be act II.

Ultimately, we have to come to act III, which is where we sit down with the President and work out our differences—again, being committed to a balanced budget by the year 2002.

So I will listen with some interest as we proceed throughout the evening and into tomorrow as to whether or not I can support the final package. But I indicate today, as I did last evening, I think it is inappropriate that we have massive tax reductions at a time when we are trying to balance the budget and cut the deficit to achieve a balanced budget by the year 2002. And so I intend to support various amendments that will be offered.

I may, in fact, offer an amendment to strike the tax cuts in their entirety. But it may be that that matter has already been debated long enough on the Senate floor. It is my personal judgment that we ought to do everything we can to make the reductions that we have long deferred in making, that we ought to do it within a 7-year timeframe, that we should support our chairman in his efforts for what he has done to produce that.

But I must say, Mr. President, that I have great reservations about calling for substantial tax reductions at the same time we are asking for substantial cutbacks in programs.

So I will listen with interest as we proceed throughout the evening and tomorrow. But I indicate my great admiration and respect for Senator DOMENICI and the effort he has undertaken to produce a reconciliation package that, perhaps, is only part two or act II of the three-act drama that has to be played out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 15 minutes called for under the previous order has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is Senator BROWN's amendment before the Senate, on which he has 5 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator needs to call that amendment up.

AMENDMENT NO. 2969

(Purpose: To provide that the $1,000,000 limit on deductibility of compensation paid to an employee is extended to employees of all businesses, and to use the resulting revenues to reduce the Social Security earnings penalty)

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN], for himself, Mr. ABRAHAM, Mr. SANTORUM, Mr. MCCAIN, and Mr. CRAIG, proposes an amendment numbered 2969.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of chapter 8 of subtitle I of title XII, insert the following:

SEC. . $1,000,000 COMPENSATION DEDUCTION LIMIT EXTENDED TO ALL EMPLOYERS OF ALL CORPORATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 162(m) is amended—

(1) by striking "publicly held corporation" in paragraph (1) and inserting "taxpayer (other than personal service corporations)",

(2) by striking "covered employee" each place it appears in paragraphs (1) and (4) and inserting "employee", and

(3) by striking paragraphs (2) and (3) and redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (3).

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995, except that there shall not be taken into account with respect to any employee to whom section 162(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 applies solely by reason of such amendments remuneration payable under a written binding contract which was in effect on October 25, 1995, and which was not modified thereafter in any material respect before such remuneration is paid.

(c) USE OF REVENUES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commissioner of Social Security shall increase the earnings limit otherwise determined for each year under section 203 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 403) by an amount which takes into account the increase in revenues for such year as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury resulting from the amendment to section 162(m)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 made by the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, this is a very straightforward amendment, and it deals with an area this Congress legislated on in 1993.

In 1993, Congress passed a tax provision that placed a limitation of a million dollars on the deductibility for publicly held corporations. The limit of a million dollars was on the amount they could deduct on the salary of an employee of that corporation.

I might say, just in retrospect, that statute had other provisions. In other words, it was possible to earn over a million dollars and have it deductible but only if it was incentive pay or fit into other provisions. So it is not an absolute limitation. But that limitation, in this Senator's view, was somewhat limited and deficient. It was deficient in that it was not applied evenhandedly, fairly; it was not applied to everybody who had a salary in excess of a million dollars; it was only applied to a special few. So the suggestion of the first half of this amendment is simply to be evenhanded and apply that same limitation to employees of all businesses. Again, the tax is on the business, not on the employees.

Mr. President, I might say two important things here. We have not changed any of the exceptions to this provision. In other words, included in it was a provision that allowed incentive payments, and so on. None of that has been changed.

In addition, included here is a provision that prohibits them from being retroactive. That is, if you have an employment contract signed prior to today, that is valid and not affected by this provision. But it does raise, according to the preliminary estimates we have, $800 million. That $800 million, according to the amendment, is then used to ameliorate the impact of the penalty on Social Security tax.

As I think Senators are well aware right now, above the threshold level a very high tax is placed on Social Security recipients, many of whom are not wealthy at all, but are low-income or middle-income and struggling, and they are put into a very difficult penalty situation. So this is a net, even with regard to tax revenue to the Federal Government.

What it does is take that $800 million that will be raised and use it to offset the earnings penalty. It will not eliminate the Social Security earnings penalty. My guess is it will only have a small affect on it. It will only increase the threshold a small amount of money. But that amount of money will go to working men and women, who retire without adequate resources and need that money and need to work to make their household expenses fit.

In my view, it is an excellent transfer. It applies even tax philosophy to those who receive over a million dollars in compensation. It provides evenhandedly and uses the money to ameliorate that Social Security earnings penalty that is so burdensome for so many working people.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, we have reviewed the amendment and checked it with the Finance Committee sources. I am prepared to yield back the full 5 minutes in order to move this thing along. Once again, I would like to take the opportunity to thank the chairman of the committee for his diligence and consideration, in allowing a 15-minute discussion period when we worked this out.

Let me say this. We have unnecessarily delayed the process here, though, because both sides have not been as forthcoming as I think we should be—or that we intend to be, for that matter—in supplying copies of the amendments to the other side. I am not saying it is just on your side, it is on our side as well.

Suffice to say, I am ready to yield the remainder of my time. I believe—if the chairman agrees—that would take us to the Harkin amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. EXON. Yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, simply to affirm what the Senator from Nebraska says, I think it is, in fact, part of the agreement between the leaders that we will know what we are voting on, that we will have copies of these amendments. I have a list here of 17 of what are called Republican amendments, and three of them are question marks. There are all kinds of words. There is a word that says kickback, one that says taxes, health care, sugar. There is no way to make any kind of a judgment.

So I just affirm the view of the ranking member of the Budget Committee that we need to have these amendments. It is part of the agreement that we would have these amendments and our amendments in writing before we act on them.

Otherwise we are just singing in the dark.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I yield back the balance of my time and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays are ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2970

(Purpose: To strengthen efforts to combat Medicare waste, fraud and abuse)

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I believe the next amendment in order is the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Iowa, Mr. HARKIN.

Mr. HARKIN. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. How much time do we have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 5 minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. I have an amendment that I am sending to the desk, and I ask for immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], for himself, Mr. GRAHAM and Mr. BIDEN, proposes an amendment numbered 2970.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. HARKIN. I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. President, if you believe that waste, fraud and abuse in Medicare is just a small problem, then you want to just support the bill and the Abraham amendment that was added to it and vote "no" on this amendment.

If you have followed the hearings that I have held over the last 5 years showing that what GAO says amounts up to 10 percent of Medicare spending goes for waste, fraud and abuse, this is up to $17 billion a year.

If you have followed those hearings or read the numerous GAO and Inspector General reports, then you know we just cannot go after the small things in waste, fraud and abuse. We have to go after the big game. We have to take a truly comprehensive approach to combatting this bilking of the taxpayers and our elderly.

Now, the bill has some good provisions in it. I will not deny that. The Abraham amendment which I voted for is also pretty good. But that just takes a nick out of it. What we have to do is go after it with every thing we can. The taxpayers and the elderly deserve no less.

My amendment, cosponsored by Senators GRAHAM and BIDEN, both of whom who have worked hard to tackle this problem, makes a number of important changes. It requires Medicare within 6 months must use state-of-the-art commercial software to find billing abuse. GAO estimated the first full year savings of making this common sense idea at $640 million.

Next, my amendment prohibits Medicare payments for unnecessary and inappropriate items like fines owed by health care providers for violations of Federal, State or local laws, personal auto use, tickets to sporting events, entertainment, and other things like that. Believe it or not, Medicare still has no specific prohibition against paying for those kind of items.

Third, my amendment reforms payments to ambulances as recommended by the inspector general. It also reduces paperwork by requiring a standardized claim form for Medicaid and Medicare.

Most important, and the heart and soul of this, it requires competitive bidding for durable medical equipment, medical supplies, and oxygen paid for by Medicare. The Veterans Administration has been doing this a long time and the difference in payments is dramatic.

How can you say you do not support it in Medicare when you have it in the VA, when the VA spends 4 cents for the same bandage that Medicare spends 86 cents for? Oxygen—Medicare spends $3,600 for rental of oxygen; the Veterans Administration pays less than half that.

That is because the Veterans Administration has competitive bidding and Medicare does not. It is time we have good old competitive bidding in Medicare. That is what this amendment does.

I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I compliment the Senator from Iowa.

Put bluntly, there is no legitimate reason not to be for this amendment. None. Zero. None. I challenge anyone to tell us why this amendment does not make sense.

Going after fraud should be our top priority, our first priority. The bill makes progress but it does not go far enough.

At least it is not what the Gingrich bill in the House does which makes it easier for health care providers to engage in fraud. Literally, not figuratively.

Last, the point made by the Senator, there is $18 billion in Medicare fraud a year and $16 billion in Medicaid fraud a year. I see no legitimate rationale for not tightening this up unless there is some outrageous special interest that thinks it would benefit from it. I see none. Prosecutors want it. Prosecutors ask for it.

I held a hearing in my State where I had the top prosecutors from Philadelphia and the top prosecutors from the State of Delaware. They point out that the House bill, which set them back decades—this bill would not do much. Our bill would make a significant impact on their ability to deal with health care fraud.

I thank my colleague for his leadership and allowing me the minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute and 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. HARKIN. I will reserve my time if the other side wants to speak.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 5 minutes in opposition to Senator COHEN.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, ordinarily I find myself in agreement with the Senator from Iowa, dealing with health care fraud, but I must say in this particular circumstance I have to rise in opposition, not because I am opposed to what he is seeking to do but rather I believe that while his proposal for addressing fraud and abuse in the health care system has merit, they also compromised some of the more important facets of the health care fraud bill we were successful in including in the Finance Committee package as such.

For the past several years, we have been holding hearings. As a matter of fact, it was a report that the minority staff issued on health care fraud which produced the estimates from GAO, as well as our own staff, showing that there is $100 billion being lost annually in our health care system.

As far as the Federal portion of that, it is anywhere from $27 to $40 million, depending on which Federal programs are included. We are losing billions of dollars through our health care system through fraud now.

What we have tried to do in the proposal that was agreed to by the Finance Committee is to structure it in a way that actually produces savings—this $4.2 billion.

The amendment of the Senator from Iowa, as I understand it—unfortunately, because of the time limitations we have, I believe some of my provisions have been deleted that are in the health care fraud bill. I am advised that CBO has concluded that this dilutes some of the $4.2 billion in savings.

One of the justifications for persuading the Finance Committee to include the health care fraud bill that I had authored was to get some savings. CBO now scores it at $4.2 billion. This at least raises a question as to whether or not we have diluted that and it calls into question in terms of how much we will save.

The Senator from Iowa may use a different method of calculating those savings.

What we have tried to do is structure it in a way which we could get the provider groups to agree. This has been no easy task. We have met with provider groups, with consumers, with health care advocates, with the FBI, with the Justice Department, with the White House.

We put together a package which we believe enjoys broad support which has been scored as saving $4.2 billion. Under these circumstances, I find myself compelled to rise in opposition not because I am opposed to what the Senator from Iowa seeks to do, but by virtue of the fact this may undermine to some degree and dilute to some degree, which I do not know what extent, the $4.2 billion which has currently been scored by CBO.

For those reasons I rise in opposition to the amendment of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 1 minute and 50 seconds and the Senator from Iowa has 1 minute and 14 seconds.

Mr. HARKIN. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I am somewhat disappointed. I thought this was perhaps one amendment that we could get Republican agreement on.

This is a good amendment. There may be reasons to oppose it, but I do not know what they are and they have not been explained to me.

Mr. HARKIN. I am befuddled, Mr. President, because I say to my friend from Maine, the CBO—which I want on the record—the CBO has scored our amendment as saving more money than is in the bill. I want that on the record. That is so.

We did not weaken the provisions in the bill, we significantly strengthened them. For example, as I pointed out, we require the commercial software, we reduce the paperwork by having one claim form. We required the competitive bidding and we prohibit the Medicare payments for unnecessary things like personal use of automobiles, tickets to sporting events, things like that.

And CBO has certified that this amendment saves more money than the underlying bill's provisions.

Mr. COHEN. We are basically in accord with what we are seeking to do, but I have been advised that CBO indicates this would reduce the $4.2 billion by—

Mr. HARKIN. Absolutely not. CBO said today it would save $4.7 billion, considerably more than the underlying bill. Let there be no question about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Iowa is expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back the balance of our time.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, the Harkin amendment to remove fraud and abuse from Medicare is a giant step in the right direction—saving taxpayer money, urging us toward a balanced budget, and striving for greater efficiency.

However, the amendment is based on a concept both necessary and controversial. This amendment would require competitive bidding for Medicare part B items and services.

I have heard from owners of numerous medical supply businesses in my State who tell me they will be driven out of business by this amendment provision. They tell me services will be cut to rural areas. They tell me services involved with setting up and instructing about medical equipment is essential for patients, and will be threatened under this amendment.

Senator HARKIN has made changes to his amendment language, to maintain access to services for rural and underserved areas. He has made changes to assure quality assurance standards, so that large companies are not able to undercut their competition simply by providing shoddy supplies and equipment.

He points out the large difference between prices for supplies at Veterans Administration hospitals—which have competitive bidding—and prices from providers under Medicare part B. He makes a good case for solving some of our Medicare cost problems with a clear goal to find efficiency through competitive bidding, rather than just a budget decision.

In light of these changes, I will vote for the amendment, but I want to be sure that we are doing everything we can to make this transition survivable for small business.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 10 seconds in order to have items printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I would like to have printed in the RECORD various documents, including a letter from the inspector general of the Department of HHS and statements by the Secretary of the Department and the Attorney General. They all go to the point that we need to have as strong an antifraud position as possible in the Senate version of the Medicare bill, because the House version is woefully weak. I support the joint efforts of my colleagues from Iowa and Maine in assuring that goal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the documents be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, OFFICE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL,
Washington, DC, September 29, 1995.

Re H.R. 2389: "Safeguarding Medicare Integrity Act of 1995."

Hon. BOB GRAHAM,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR GRAHAM: You requested our views regarding the newly introduced H.R. 2389, which we understand may be considered in the deliberations concerning the "Medicare Preservation Act." We strongly support the expressed objective of H.R. 2389 of reducing the fraud and abuse which plagues the Medicare program. The proposed legislation contains some meritorious provisions. However, if enacted, certain major provisions of H.R. 2389 would cripple the efforts of law enforcement agencies to control health care fraud and abuse in the Medicare program and to bring wrongdoers to justice.

The General Accounting Office estimates the loss to Medicare from fraud and abuse at 10 percent of total Medicare expenditures, or about $18 billion. We recommend two steps to decrease this problem: strengthen the relevant legal authorities, and increase the funding for law enforcement efforts. Some worthy concepts have been included in H.R. 2389, and we support them. For example, we support:

A voluntary disclosure program, which allows corporations to blow the whistle on themselves if upper management finds wrongdoing has occurred, with carefully defined relief for the corporation from qui tam suits under the False Claims Act (but not waiver by the Secretary of sanctions);

Minimum periods of exclusion (mostly parallel with periods of exclusion currently in regulations) with respect to existing exclusion authorities from Medicare and Medicaid; and

Increases in the maximum penalty amounts which may be imposed under the civil monetary penalty laws regarding health care fraud.

As stated above, however, H.R. 2389 contains several provisions which would seriously erode our ability to control Medicare fraud and abuse, including most notably: making the civil monetary penalty and anti-kickback laws considerably more lenient, the unprecedented creation of an advisory opinion mechanism on intent-based statutes, and a trust fund concept which would fund only private contractors (not law enforcement). Our specific comments on these matters follow.

1. MAKING CIVIL MONETARY PENALTIES FOR FRAUDULENT CLAIMS MORE LENIENT BY RELIEVING PROVIDERS OF THE DUTY TO USE REASONABLE DILIGENCE TO ENSURE THEIR CLAIMS ARE TRUE AND ACCURATE

Background: The existing civil monetary penalty (CMP) provisions regarding false claims were enacted by Congress in the 1980's as an administrative remedy, with cases tried by administrative law judges with appeals to Federal court. In choosing the "knows or should know" standard for the mental element of the offense, Congress chose a standard which is well defined in the Restatement of Torts. Second, Section 12. The term "should know" places a duty on health care providers to use "reasonable diligence" to ensure that claims submitted to Medicare are true and accurate. The reason this standard was chosen was that the Medicare system is heavily reliant on the honesty and good faith of providers in submitting their claims. The overwhelming majority of claims are never audited or investigated.

Note that the "should know" standard does not impose liability for honest mistakes. If the provider exercises reasonable diligence and still makes a mistake, the provider is not liable. No administrative complaint or decision issued by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) has found an honest mistake to be the basis for CMP sanction.

H.R. 2389 Proposal: Section 201 would redefine the term "should know" in a manner which does away with the duty on providers to exercise reasonable diligence to submit true and accurate claims. Under this definition, providers would only be liable if they act with "deliberate ignorance" of false claims or if they act with "reckless disregard" of false claims. In an era when there is great concern about fraud and abuse of the Medicare program, it would not be appropriate to relieve providers of the duty to use "reasonable diligence" to ensure that their claims are true and accurate.

In addition, the bill treats the CMP authority currently provided to the Secretary in an inconsistent manner. On one hand, it proposes an increase in the amounts of most CMPs which mnay be imposed under the Social Security Act. Yet, it would significantly curtail enforcement of these sanction authorities by raising the level of culpability which must be proven by the Government in order to impose CMPs. It would be far preferable not to make any changes to the CMP statutes at this time.

2. MAKING THE ANTIKICKBACK STATUTE MORE LENIENT BY REQUIRING THE GOVERNMENT TO PROVE THAT THE SIGNIFICANT INTENT OF THE DEFENDANT WAS UNLAWFUL

Background: The anti-kickback statute makes it a criminal offense knowingly and willfully (intentionally) to offer or receive anything of value in exchange for the referral of Medicare or Medicaid business. The statute is designed to ensure that medical decisions are not influenced by financial rewards from third parties. Kickbacks result in more Medicare services being ordered than otherwise, and law enforcement experts agree that unlawful kickbacks are very common and constitute a serious problem in the Medicare and Medicaid programs.

The two biggest health care fraud cases in history were largely based on unlawful kickbacks. In 1994, National Medical Enterprises, a chain of psychiatric hospitals, paid $379 million for giving kickbacks for patient referrals, and other improprieties. In 1995, Caremark, Inc, paid $161 million for giving kickbacks to physicians who ordered very expensive Caremark home infusion products.

Most kickbacks have sophisticated disguises, like consultation arrangements, returns on investments, etc. These disguises are hard for the Government to penetrate. Proving a kickback case is difficult. There is no record of trivial cases being prosecuted under this statute.

H.R. 2389 Proposal: Section 201 would require the Government to prove that "the significant purpose" of a payment was to induce referrals of business. The phrase "the significant" implies there can only be one "significant" purpose of a payment. If so, at least 51 percent of the motivation of a payment must be shown to be unlawful. Although this proposal may have a superficial appeal, if enacted it would threaten the Government's ability to prosecute all but the most blatant kickback arrangements.

The courts interpreting the anti-kickback statute agree that the statute applies to the payment of remuneration "if one purpose of the payment was to induce referrals." United States v. Greber, 760 F.2d 68, 69 (3d Cir. 1985) (emphasis added). If payments were intended to induce a physician to refer patients, the statute has been violated, even if the payments were also intended (in part) to compensate for legitimate services. Id. at 72. See also: United States v. Kats, 871 F.2d 105, 108 (1989); United States v. Bay State Ambulance, 874 F.2d 20, 29–30 (1st Cir. 1989).

The proposed amendment would overturn these court decisions.

However, the nature of kickbacks and the health care industry requires the interpretation adopted by Greber and its progeny. To prove that a defendant had the improper intent necessary to violate the anti-kickback statute, the prosecution must establish the defendant's state of mind, or intent. As with any intent-based statute, the prosecution cannot get directly inside the defendant's head. The prosecution must rely on circumstantial evidence to prove improper intent. Circumstantial evidence consists of documents relevant to the transaction, testimony about what the defendant said to business associates or potential customers, etc. These types of evidence are rarely clear about the purposes and motivations of the defendant. The difficulties of establishing intent are multiple by the complexity, size, and dynamism of the health care industry, as well as the sophistication of most-kickback scheme participants. Documents are "pre-sanitized" by expert attorneys. Most defendants are careful what they say. In most kickback prosecutions, the Government has a difficult task to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that even one purpose of a payment is to induce referrals.

If the Government had to prove that inducement of referrals was "the significant" reason for the payment, many common kickback schemes would be allowed to proliferate. In today's health care industry, very few kickback arrangements involve the bald payment of money for patients. Most kickbacks have sophisticated disguises. Providers can usually argue that any suspect payment serves one or more "legitimate purposes." For example, payments made to induce referrals often also compensate a physician who is providing health care items or services. Some payments to referral sources may be disguised as returns on investments. Similarly, many lease arrangements that indisputably involve the bona fide use of space incorporate some inducement to refer in the lease rates. In all of these examples, and countless others, it is impossible to quantify what portions of payments are made for nefarious versus legitimate purposes.

Where the defendant could argue that there was some legitimate purpose for the payment, the prosecution would have to prove beyond a reasonable doubt, through circumstantial evidence, that the defendant actually had another motive that was "the significant" reason. For the vast majority of the present-day kickback schemes, the proposed amendment would place in insurmountable burden of proof on the Government.

3. CREATION OF AN EASILY ABUSED EXCEPTION FROM THE ANTI-KICKBACK STATUTE FOR CERTAIN MANAGED CARE ARRANGEMENTS

Background: There is great variety and innovation occurring in the managed care industry. Some managed care organizations, such as most health maintenance organizations (HMOs) doing business with Medicare, consist of providers who assume financial risk for the quantity of medical services needed by the population they serve. In this context, the incentive to offer kickbacks for referrals of patients for additional services is minimized, since the providers are at risk for the additional costs of those services. If anything, the incentives are to reduce services. Many other managed care organizations exist in the fee for service system, where the traditional incentives to order more services and pay kickbacks for referrals remain. In the fee for service system, the payer (like Medicare and private insurance plans) is at financial risk of additional services, not the managed care organization. While broad protection from the anti-kick statute may be appropriate for capitated, at-risk entities like the HMO described above, such protection for managed care organizations in the fee for service system would invite serious abuse.

H.R. 2389 Proposal: Section 202 would establish broad new exceptions under the anti-kickback statute for "any capitation, risk-sharing, or disease management program." The lack of definition of these terms would result in a huge opportunity for abusive arrangements to fit within this proposed exception. What is a "disease management program?" Does not that term include most of health care?

Nefarious organizations could easily escape the kickback statute by simply rearranging their agreements to fit within the exception. For example, if a facility wanted to pay doctors for referrals, the facility could escape liability by establishing some device whereby the doctors share in the business risk of profit and loss of the business (i.e., they would share some risk, at least theoretically). Then, the organization could pay blatant kickbacks for every referral with impunity.

If the concern is that the kickback statute is hurting innovation, as observed above, there is now an explosion of innovation in the health care industry, especially in managed care. No one in Government is suggesting that HMOs or preferred provider arrangements, etc., formed in good faith, violate the kickback statute. There has never been any action against any such arrangement under the statute.

4. INAPPROPRIATE EXPANSION OF THE EXCEPTION TO THE ANTI-KICKBACK STATUTE FOR DISCOUNTS

Background. Medicare/Medicaid discounts are beneficial and to be encouraged with one critical condition: That Medicare and/or Medicaid receive and participate fully in the discount. For example, if the Medicare reasonable charge for a Part B item or service is $100, Medicare would pay $80 of the bill and the copayment would be $20. If a 20 percent discount is applied to this bill, the charge should be $80, and Medicare would pay $64 (80 percent of the $80) and the copayment would be $16. If the discount is not shared with Medicare (which would be improper), the bill to Medicare would falsely show a $100 charge. Medicare would pay $80, but the copayment would be $0. This discount has not been shared with Medicare.

Many discounting programs are designed expressly to transfer the benefit of discounts away from Medicare. The scheme is to give little or no discount on an item or service separately billed to Medicare, and give large discounts on items not separately billed to Medicare. This scheme results in Medicare paying a higher percentage for the separately billed item or service than it should.

For example, a lab offers a deep discount on lab work for which Medicare pays a predetermined fee (such as lab tests paid by Medicare to the facility as part of a bundled payment), if the facility refers to the lab its separately billed Medicare lab work, for which no discount is given. The lab calls this a "combination" discount, yet is a discount on some items and not on others. Another example is where ancillary or noncovered items are furnished free, if a provider pays full price for a separately billed item, such as where the purchase of incontinence supplies is accompanied by a "free" adult diaper. Medicare has not shared in these combination discounts.

H.R. 2389 Proposal. Section 202 would permit discounts on one item in a combination to be treated as discounts on another item in the combination. This sounds innocent, but it is not. Medicare would be a big loser. Discounting should be permissable for a supplier to offer a discount on a combination of items or services, so long as every item or service separately billed to Medicare or Medicaid receives no less of a discount than is applied to other items in the combination. If the items or services separately billed to Medicare or Medicaid receive less of a discount than other items in the combination, Medicare and Medicaid are not receiving their fair share of the discounts.

5. UNPRECEDENTED MECHANISM FOR ADVISORY OPINIONS ON INTENT-BASED STATUTES, INCLUDING THE ANTI-KICKBACK STATUTE

Background: The Government already offers more advice on the anti-kickback statute than is provided regarding any other criminal provision in the United States Code.

Industry groups have been seeking advisory opinions under the anti-kickback statute for many years, with vigorous opposition by the Department of Justice (DOJ), and the HHS Office of Inspector General (OIG) under the last three administrations, as well as the National Association of Attorneys General. In 1987, Congress rejected calls to require advisory opinions under this statute. As a compromise, Congress required HHS, in consultation with the Attorney General, to issue "safe harbor" regulations describing conduct which would not be subject to criminal prosecution or exclusion. See Section 14 of Public Law 100-93.

To date, the OIG has issued 13 final anti-kickback "safe harbor" rules and solicited comment on 8 additional proposed safe harbor rules, for a total of 21 final and proposed safe harbors. Over 50 pages of explanatory material has been published in the Federal Register regarding these proposed and final rules. In addition, the OIG has issued six general "fraud alerts" describing activity which is suspect under the anti-kickback statute. Thus, the Government gives providers guidance on what is clearly permissible (safe harbors) under the anti-kickback statute and what we consider illegal (fraud alerts).

H.R. 2389 Proposal. HHS would be required to issue advisory opinions to the public on the Medicare/Medicaid anti-kickback statute (section 1128B(b) of the Social Security Act), as well as all other criminal authorities, civil monetary penalty and exclusion authorities pertaining to Medicare and Medicaid. HHS would be required to respond to requests for advisory opinions within 30 days.

HHS would be authorized to charge requesters a user fee, but there is no provision for this fee to be credited to HHS. Fees would therefore be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Major problems with anti-kickback advisory opinions include:

Advisory opinions on intent-based statutes (such as the anti-kickback statute) are impractical if not impossible. Because of the inherently subjective, factual nature of intent, it would be impossible for HHS to determine intent based solely upon a written submission from the requestor. Indeed, it does not make sense for a requestor to ask the Government to determine the requestor's own intent. Obviously, the requester already knows what their intent is.

None of the 11 existing advisory opinion processes in the Federal Government provide advisory opinions regarding the issue of the requestor's intent. An advisory opinion process for an intent-based statute is without precedent in U.S. law.

The advisory opinion process in H.R. 2389 would severely hamper the Government's ability to prosecute health care fraud. Even with appropriate written caveats, defense counsel will hold up a stack of advisory opinions before the jury and claim that the defendant read them and honestly believed (however irrationally) that he or she was not violating the law. The prosecution would have to disprove this defense beyond a reasonable doubt. This will seriously affect the likelihood of conviction of those offering kickbacks.

Advisory opinions would likely require enormous resources and many full time equivalents (FTE) at HHS. The user fees in the bill would go to the Treasury, not to HHS. Even if they did go to HHS, appropriations committees tend to view them as offsets to appropriations. There are no estimates of number of likely requests, number of FTE required, etc. Also, HHS is permanently downsizing, even as it faces massive structural and program changes. The possible result of the bill is a diversion of hundreds of anti-fraud workers to handle the advisory opinions.

For the above reasons, DOJ, HHS/OIG and the National Association of Attorneys General strongly oppose advisory opinions under the anti-kickback statute, and all other intent-based statutes.

6. CREATION OF TRUST FUND MECHANISM WHICH DOES NOT BENEFIT LAW ENFORCEMENT

Background: In our view, the most significant step Congress could undertake to reduce fraud and abuse would be to increase the resources devoted to investigating false claims, kickbacks and other serious misconduct. It is important to recognize that the law enforcement effort to control Medicare fraud is surprisingly small and diminishing. There is evidence of increasing Medicare fraud and abuse, and Medicare expenditures continue to grow substantially. Yet, the staff of the HHS/OIG, the agency with primary enforcement authority over Medicare, has declined from 1,411 employees in 1991 to just over 900 today. (Note: 259 of the 1,411 positions were transferred to the Social Security Administration). Approximately half of these FTE are devoted to Medicare investigations, audits and program evaluations. As a result of downsizing, HHS/OIG has had to close 17 OIG investigative offices and we now lack an investigative presence in 24 States. The OIG has only about 140 investigators for all Medicare cases nationwide. By way of contrast, the State of New York gainfully employs about 300 persons to control Medicaid fraud in that State alone.

Ironically, the investigative activity of OIG pays for itself many times over. Over the last 5 years, every dollar devoted to OIG investigations of health care fraud and abuse has yielded an average return of over $7 to the Federal Treasury, Medicare trust funds, and State Medicaid programs. In addition, an increase in enforcement also generates increased deterrence, due to the increased chance of fraud being caught. For these reasons, many fraud control bills contain a proposal to recycle monies recovered from wrongdoers into increased law enforcement. The amount an agency gets should not be related to how much it generates, so that it could not be viewed as a "bounty." The Attorney General and the Secretary of HHS would decide on disbursements from the fund. We believe such proposals would strengthen our ability to protect Medicare from wrongdoers and at no cost to the taxpayers. The parties who actually perpetrate fraud would "foot the bill."

H.R. 2389 Proposal: Section 106 would create a funding mechanism using fines and penalties recovered by law enforcement agencies from serious wrongdoers. But none of the money would be used to help bring others to justice. Instead, all the funds would be used only by private contractors for "soft" claims review, such as, medical and utilization review, audits of costs reports, and provider education.

The above functions are indeed necessary, and they are now being conducted primarily by the Medicare carriers and intermediaries. Since the bill would prohibit carriers and intermediaries from performing these functions in the future, there appears to be no increase in these functions, but only a different funding mechanism.

These "soft" review and education functions are no substitute for investigation and prosecution of those who intend to defraud Medicare. The funding mechanism in H.R. 2389 will not result in any more Medicare convictions and sanctions.

In summary, H.R. 2389 would:

Relieve providers of the legal duty to use reasonable diligence to ensure that the claims they submit are true and accurate; this is the effect of increasing the Government's burden of proof in civil monetary penalty cases;

Substantially increase the Government's burden of proof in anti-kickback cases;

Create new exemptions to the anti-kickback statute which could readily be exploited by those who wish to pay rewards to physicians for referrals of patients;

Create an advisory opinion process on an intent-based criminal statute, a process without precedent in current law; since the fees for advisory opinions would not be available to HHS, our scarce law enforcement resources would be diverted into hiring advisory opinion writers; and

Create a fund to use monies recovered from wrongdoers by law enforcement agencies, but the fund would not be available to assist the law enforcement efforts; all the monies would be used by private contractors only for "soft" payment review and education functions.

In our view, enactment of the bill with these provisions would cripple our ability to reduce fraud and abuse in the Medicare program and to bring wrongdoers to justice.

Thank you for your attention to our concerns.

Sincerely,

JUNE GIBBS BROWN,
Inspector General.

PRESS CONFERENCE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL JANET RENO ON HEALTH CARE FRAUD, OCTOBER 18, 1995

Attorney General RENO. Thank you, Secretary Shalala.

The House Medicare bill would make it more difficult for us to prosecute medical providers for fraudulent conduct against patients and the Medicare system. These provisions are totally inconsistent with the provisions in the Senate bill, which would facilitate our law enforcement efforts against health care fraud that harms us all, and particularly our most vulnerable.

I understand that some members of the House have indicated that law enforcement should not be criminally prosecuting health care providers who engage in fraud. I just don't understand that, for I believe that health care fraud is so detrimental to the health and to the pocketbook of all Americans that I made health care fraud one of my priorities in the Department of Justice. I believe perpetrators of health care fraud should not be immune from criminal prosecution because they commit a crime in an office, in a boardroom, in a laboratory, rather than in the street. White collar crooks who pay or take kickbacks endanger the health of patients and steal money from us all.

Experts estimate it may cost Americans as much as $100 billion a year. That is why we need stronger, not weaker, provisions in the House bill. The Senate bill, under the leadership of Senator Cohen and with bipartisan support, provides those strengthened provisions.

Particularly at this time, we need to preserve every Medicare trust fund dollar; we cannot allow Medicare money to be spent on bribes paid to doctors and others as inducement for the referral of Medicare patients. Even more importantly, we cannot allow financial inducements to corrupt the professional judgment of medical providers—providers who Americans have been taught to trust. Decisions which physicians make day in and day out—whether and where to hospitalize a patient, what laboratory tests to order, what surgical procedure to perform, what drug to prescribe, and how long to keep a patient in a psychiatric facility—affect the health and well-being of our elderly patients and our children. Allowing these decisions to be made under the influence of kickbacks is just plain wrong.

The House bill would place a very high, additional burden on the Government in its attempts to prosecute those who pay or receive kickbacks for the purpose of inducing the referral of Medicare business. Existing law requires the Government to prove that one purpose of the kickback was to induce the referral of health care business. The language of the House bill would require that the Government prove that the payment was made for the significant purpose of inducing the referral. That's language that would immunize arrangements that are dressed up to disguise the payor's motive. This would seriously undermine our efforts and it would place beyond the reach of prosecution many kickbacks which are calculated to induce referrals and which adversely affect the judgment of medical providers. From the perspective of Federal law enforcement and, I believe, from the perspective of patients who seek their doctors' advice, this result is simply not acceptable.

Ultimately, this isn't a choice between prosecuting violent crime and prosecuting health care fraud. Both of them do real harm to real people and both deserve vigorous enforcement action. I hope that the House legislation will support, not undermine, our efforts.

QUESTION. Why are the Republicans gutting the statutes?

Attorney General RENO. You would have to ask them, but I have heard it said that they said we shouldn't prosecute these cases while we have robbers and murderers on our streets. And my response is we need to do both with vigor.

QUESTION. Secretary Shalala, what's your theory about why this is happening up in the House?

Secretary SHALALA. Well, I have long ago learned not to anticipate the motivations, but they clearly are weakening our ability to get fraud out of the system, particularly—it's particularly damaging during an era, as the Attorney General pointed out, where we need to squeeze every dollar we can out of Medicare to invest in the trust fund. And the last things we should be doing is wasting money or letting people rip off the program.

QUESTION. [inaudible] uniform deadly health policy that you approved yesterday. Tell us, do you think it will clear up some of the confusion left over from the Ruby Ridge damage?

Attorney General RENO. Again, I think this is an important step forward because for the first time, all of the major law enforcement agencies in the Federal Government have joined together in a uniform policy. And I think it will help people to understand when deadly force can be used. It will apply to each agency and I am very delighted about that.

QUESTION. What is the real change that this policy makes?

Attorney General RENO. This policy will—the real change.

QUESTION. What's the difference from the way it would be.

Attorney General RENO. DIFFERENT DEPARTMENTS HAD DIFFERENT PROVISIONS AND THIS CONSOLIDATED IN ONE, I THINK, A VERY FIRM STATEMENT ON THE POLICY OF BOTH THE TREASURY AGENCY AND THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

QUESTION. What tangible impact do you expect the changes to have on the deadly force policy.

Attorney General RENO. I think it will enable those enforcement officers involved to understand when they can and can't use deadly force and I think the message will be clear.

QUESTION. Secretary Shalala, will you ask the President to veto this bill unless this is modified?

Secretary SHALALA. THERE ARE SO MANY PROVISIONS IN THE REPUBLICANS BILL THAT I HAVE ALREADY SENT A LETTER TO THE HILL, INDICATING THAT IF THEY ADOPT THE BILL AS IT'S NOW WRITTEN THAT I WILL RECOMMEND THAT THE PRESIDENT VETO IT. I WILL JOIN WITH THE ATTORNEY GENERAL AFTER WE REVIEW THESE PROVISIONS IN AN ADDITIONAL COMMENT FOR THE PRESIDENT, ADVISING HIM ON THE BILL. BUT THESE ARE SIMPLY UNACCEPTABLE AND I THINK THAT'S OUR POINT TODAY.

QUESTION. Are all these are provisions for Medicare and Medicaid violations only or do some of them include kickback statutes that cover general medical operations, not Government programs?

Attorney General RENO. No, it covers some Government programs. We would like to see it expanded to others: to the Federal Health employees benefits program, to the CHAMPUS program on behalf of the Department of Justice.

QUESTION. But it doesn't cover kickbacks——

Attorney General RENO. In the private sector.

QUESTION [continuing]. Not involving Medicare or Medicaid?

Attorney General RENO. That's correct.

QUESTION. Do you know, as a practical matter, how the change in the standard of proof would affect the prosecution?

Secretary SHALALA. I think the cases that we gave you as an example we would probably not be able to prosecute.

Attorney General RENO. If I can prove one purpose is to induce the referral of Medicare business, that's one thing. But to have to prove that the significant purpose is to induce the referral of Medicare business significantly heightens the standard. I think it produces confusion as to what is meant by significant. And I think it undermines what the kickback statute is trying to prevent.

Any time you bribe someone to get business you are impairing or presenting a chance for the impairment of judgment. That should never—the fact that you get money for referring business, particularly medical business, should never be a factor in the physicians' or the providers' judgment. It should be what is in the best interest of that patient, what is the most cost-effective medical treatment. And a significant purpose or one purpose, it is critically important that there not be bribery to secure Medicare business.

QUESTION. How does that, in turn, make it harder to prosecute?

Attorney General RENO. I might be able to prove that it is one purpose, but having to prove that it is the significant purpose heightens the standards of proof.

Secretary SHALALA. In fact, the Inspector Generals—all of them have signed on to a letter to the Hill that basically said it would bring those kinds of cases to a standstill because it raises the bar pretty high.

QUESTION. It sounds like it would make it pretty easy for those involved in the kickbacks to get around it, doing something illegal by masking and not making——

Attorney General RENO. All they would have to do is disguise it and say it's for this reason or for that reason or it has something to do with the patient's care and I might not be able to prove that it is a significant purpose. It has that chance of disguising what is really a bribe.

QUESTION. Attorney General Reno, on another subject, what is the Justice Department's position on the U.S. Sentencing Commission's guidelines on crack cocaine versus powder cocaine and the pending legislation that deals with that?

Attorney General RENO. We have said and made clear that prosecutors, police officers, and most of all, the residents of communities across this nation that have been impacted by crack cocaine, understand that the marketing and distribution systems and nature of the drug have had a terrible, terrible impact on many neighborhoods and that its impact reflects the need to have some distinction in the manner in which crack is treated. But the Justice Department has made clear that it favors a review of the 101 ratio, to adjust it, to make it fairer.

It is our hope that legislation that is pending now which rejects the one-to-one ratio because of the impact on communities across this nation also would provide—ask the Sentencing Commission to study it again in this coming year to come up with a recommendation that reflects the impact of crack on the community but also achieves fairness.

QUESTION. What would you suggest would be a good ratio?

Attorney General RENO. We are going to be reviewing with all concerned—as part of—I serve as part of the ex officio members of the Sentencing Commission—that balance.

QUESTION. Secretary Shalala, given that the [inaudible] is taking a completely different approach, isn't there every reason to believe it will be worked out in Congress?

Secretary SHALALA. We long ago have learned not to depend on one House versus another House. I think we are pointing the contrast out between this House bill, which is going to the floor tomorrow, and our ability to work in a bipartisan manner with the Senate. Obviously, we hope in conference we will be able to work it through, but we want to make it very clear that what the House is doing is unacceptable. And most members of Congress probably don't know what's in the bill, since it was moved so quickly.

QUESTION. Have you considered asking the American Medical Association to join you in urging the Republicans to change this?

Secretary SHALALA. There are numerous organizations that have now spoken out on this issue. Most of them have been the State Attorney General, for example, and the Inspector Generals. The American Medical Association, with a handful of important exceptions, have joined us on all issues that are related to fraud and abuse because they are absolutely opposed to, number one, having to police themselves; and number two, I think they very much favor anything we can do to help them to clean up the profession.

QUESTION. So where exactly are they on this?

Secretary SHALALA. You will have to go ask them.

QUESTION. Are you talking about the American Medical Association or American medical associations of various types?

Secretary SHALALA. Well, of various types.

QUESTION. Not the American Medical Association?

Secretary SHALALA. I don't know the position of the AMA at this moment.

QUESTION. [inaudible.]

Secretary SHALALA. Well, the self-referral changes that are being referenced is whether a doctor can own a laboratory and then refer his own patients to a laboratory in which he has a financial interest. That law was changed a number of years ago because of the abuse that was found in the system. There were 45 percent more referrals if the doctors owned the lab. And that was barred by the law. And the American Medical Association has favored repealing the law which we are, of course, opposed to.

QUESTION. Are there any examples of fraud cases that stand out that would be good to pinpoint, related to this?

Attorney General RENO. One of the cases—where is Jerry Stern—is NME case of last year. Our recovery in that case was $379 million and that was based in significant part on this provision that we are trying to defend today in terms of kickbacks.

QUESTION. Do you have any idea what would have happened had the law been [inaudible]?

Attorney General RENO. I think, again, you can't quantify it. But any time you have to prove that some—rather than just one purpose, that it was the significant purpose, you raise the bar real high. Thank you.

(Whereupon, at 1:55 p.m., the press conference adjourned.)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, could I ask if it will be in order to ask for the yeas and nays or to table the Harkin amendment even if we now proceed to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order to do that when the amendment recurs for a vote.

The Senator from Arizona.

AMENDMENT NO. 2971

(Purpose: To eliminate corporate welfare in Federal programs)

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], for himself, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. FAIRCLOTH, proposes an amendment numbered 2971.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President I yield myself 4 minutes of the 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, this is a bipartisan amendment, which has been endorsed by the Citizens Against Government Waste and Citizens for a Sound Economy, which would terminate or substantially reform a dozen Federal programs identified by the Progressive Policy Institute and the Cato Institute as amongst the most egregious forms of corporate welfare in the Federal budget. These amount to savings of about $60 billion over the next 7 years. They are the Marketing Promotion Program, the advanced light water reactor, Forest Road Construction Program, highway demonstrations, military export sales, broadcast spectrum auction, Export/Import Bank, the B-2 bomber, Travel and Tourism Administration, sub- and supersonic research——

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a friendly inquiry?

Mr. McCAIN. I only have 4 minutes, I say to my colleague.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. May I have 5 seconds?

Mr. McCAIN. If you ask unanimous consent, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Can the Senate get a copy of your amendment now? We have nothing.

Mr. McCAIN. Absolutely.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I do not want to embarrass the U.S. Senate.

Mr. McCAIN. I will make sure the Senator gets a copy of the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. We delivered a copy of the amendment.

Mr. McCAIN. A copy of the amendment, I understand, has been delivered to the Senator from West Virginia. I certainly understand his frustration if he did not have a chance to see the amendment.

Mr. President, continuing—sub- and supersonic research; terminates the NASA program which conducts aircraft design activities, which can be undertaken by the private sector; oil and gas research and development; rural electric utilities service.

Mr. President, there is nothing new about these programs. They are items we have been discussing on the floor of the Senate for many years. They each have one thing in common; in a time of fiscal necessity, we can no longer afford them.

We are considering historic legislation to place the Federal budget on a 7-year path toward balance and to reform unsustainable entitlement programs which threaten to bankrupt our Nation. If we are going to restore fiscal sanity and if we are going to ask poor people to take cuts in their programs, if we are going to reduce the rate of growth of many, many programs that have been designed as a safety net for those less well off in our society, if we are going to have credibility with the American people, we had better go after this corporate pork and we better do it soon. Otherwise, we will open ourselves to justifiable criticism that we take care of corporate America while we do not take care of citizens who are less fortunate than we in our society.

I think it is an important amendment. I think it is going to put the Senate on record as to exactly where we stand on some of these programs that have clearly, clearly not required Federal funding in order to continue.

We owe a debt of gratitude to the Cato Institute and Progressive Policy Institute. Although they represent different ideological perspectives, they joined together to identify corporate welfare programs and to articulate the destructive role that they play in the Federal budget and the economy.

As time is limited on debate, I offer these insights as offered by these groups. The Cato Institute says:

> Corporate welfare is an enormous drain on the Federal Treasury for little economic benefit.

The Progressive Policy Institute says:

> The President and Congress can break the [budget] impasse and substantially reduce most spending and projected deficits * * * if they are willing to eliminate or reform scores of special spending programs and tax provisions narrowly targeted to subsidize influential industries.

I reserve my 1 minute.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, at a time when deep cuts are being proposed in Medicare, Medicaid, education, the earned income tax credit, welfare benefits, and other important programs for senior citizens, children, and working families, it is essential to see that corporate welfare—government subsidies to wealthy corporations—bears its fair share of the sacrifices needed to put the Nation's fiscal house in order.

I welcome the opportunity to work with Senator MCCAIN and other Senators in this bipartisan effort. We have identified a dirty dozen examples of corporate welfare that ought to be ended or drastically reduced.

My hope is that the current efforts will become the foundation for a longer-term initiative to deal more effectively with the wider range of corporate welfare provisions on both the spending side and the tax side of the Federal budget.

At a time when we are cutting billions of dollars from health benefits for the elderly, it makes no sense to continue to give away billions to wealthy telecommunications corporations by failing to obtain fair market value by auctioning electronic spectrum.

At a time when we are imposing billions of dollars in taxes on our working families, it makes no sense to spend billions of dollars on additional B-2 bombers that the Pentagon doesn't want and the Nation doesn't need.

At a time when we are imposing new burdens on education, it makes no sense to confer excessive subsidies on oil and gas companies.

At a time when we are cutting benefits for the disabled, it makes no sense to continue to provide subsidies for major companies to market their goods overseas.

Our current amendment will end these and several other forms of corporate welfare. It also calls for a base-closing type Federal Commission to deal with this equally flagrant type of corporate welfare—the lavish Federal subsidies dispensed to wealthy individuals and corporations through the Tax Code.

Over the next 7 years, these tax subsidies will cost the Treasury a total of $4.5 trillion. Yet they undergo no annual review during the appropriations process or during reconciliation. Once enacted, they can go on forever, with no effective oversight by Congress.

The Commission we are proposing will examine all existing tax subsidies and make recommendations to Congress that will be subject to a "yes" or "no" vote by the Senate and the House.

I commend Senator McCAIN and our other colleagues for their work on this important issue, and I am hopeful that the Senate will approve our amendment. Our action on this legislation is part of a longer-term initiative to insist on congressional scrutiny of all Federal subsidies.

At a time when so many individuals and families are being asked to bear a heavy burden of budget cuts, there should be no free rides for special interest groups and their cozy subsidies.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise in reluctant support of the amendment from the Senator from Arizona to cut spending from 12 programs.

I am supporting the amendment because, at a time when we are debating a budget bill to cut programs and assistance for the most needy in our society, I find it hard to pass up an opportunity to cut billions of dollars from programs like the B-2 bomber, and oil and gas subsidies.

However, while I will support this amendment, I am extremely unhappy with the decision by the proponents of this amendment to cut loan programs for rural electric cooperatives, who depend on those funds to keep utility rates reasonable for rural residents.

I am equally unhappy with the choice of the proponents of this amendment to eliminate the Market Promotion Program, on the heels of the successful effort to eliminate the corporate subsidies from that program, and target it toward small businesses and cooperatives.

So while I must reluctantly vote in support of this amendment to cut billions of dollars, if it does prevail, I will work to have the Rural Utility Service loans and the Market Promotion Program restored in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, this amendment has very broad jurisdictional problems with a whole series of committees. It is the opinion of this Senator that probably the primary committee of jurisdiction would again be the Finance Committee. Therefore, I will yield to a member of the Finance Committee, the Senator from West Virginia, for remarks to be included in our 5 minutes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I appreciate the action of the ranking member of the Budget Committee.

This amendment which we have not yet—let me say first of all, it will be my hope that our side will not take a position on this, because we are simply unaware of what it is. In fact, it appears to be many, many things.

It starts out with the elimination of the Market Promotion Program for agriculture, I think. It appears to be part Agriculture, part Finance, part Commerce Committee. It gets into the termination of the Advanced Light Water Reactor Program. I am thoroughly unqualified to review that. It talks about timber access roads. That is an Energy Committee matter. It talks about United States Travel and Tourism, USTTA. That is something I strongly support. Other Members may not. I suspect the Senator from Arizona does not.

There is a private sector funding for certain research and development by NASA relating to aircraft performance. That is the formal title. What that means I have absolutely no idea, and I have no way of finding out in the next 2 or 3 minutes.

There are many other things—the recoupment of certain Department of Defense costs for equipment sold directly by contractors to foreign countries and international organizations.

So, my plea would be for all my colleagues to take this 21-page amendment, between the time now—having no position on it, as would be my recommendation to my ranking member on the Budget Committee—and the time that we vote, and Senators make up their minds as best they can.

I am absolutely unable, having had this for a period of 2½ minutes, to make heads or tails of it, since it is many things and, I suspect, many things to many people. This is not, it strikes me, in terms of process, one of the Senate's finer moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, following up the inquiry that was made just a few moments ago by the chairman of the committee, I would also presume we have not made up our minds on this side of the aisle on this amendment. I also assume that, without taking action now, it would not preclude us from making a point of order which might lie against this amendment at some future date before the vote is taken; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order can be made when the amendment comes up again.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does Senator McCAIN have any additional time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 51 seconds.

Mr. McCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, for the benefit of the Senator from West Virginia, we did distribute this amendment much earlier today. I am sorry he did not get it.

Also, I would like to point out that Senators FEINGOLD, KERRY, and KENNEDY are also cosponsors of this amendment. So some Members on his side of the aisle obviously are aware of it.

I am also aware that a budget point of order can be lodged against this amendment, and I do not expect it to pass, Mr. President. I am being very frank. But I will tell you what. We are going to be on record as to what we support and what we do not support in the way of corporate pork and whether we are really willing to make the sacrifices necessary to reduce this unconscionable debt of $187,000 per child in America while we support corporations all over America with taxpayers' dollars.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona's time has expired.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Is there any time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a minute and 40 seconds available to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. We have 40 seconds left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A minute and 40 seconds.

Mr. EXON. I am prepared to yield that back in a moment.

Mr. McCAIN. The Senator from West Virginia—

Mr. EXON. I see the majority leader in the Chamber. Is he seeking recognition?

Mr. DOLE. No.

Mr. EXON. I yield back the remainder of our time.

I thought Senator ROCKEFELLER was finished.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. In responding to the Senator from Arizona and what I am sure is a very good-faith—I know is a very good-faith effort, if Senators FEINGOLD, KENNEDY and others are in fact cosponsors of it, one would never know by looking at the amendment because only the name of the Senator from Arizona is listed. And this is part of what I am talking about. If we are going to make serious decisions about the enormous variety of programs, we have to do this in some kind of more intelligent way. Now, the rules may preclude us from doing that because the agreement has already been made, but this is many things to many people.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Has all time expired?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has 30 seconds.

Mr. EXON. Reserving the right to object, the yeas and nays are being requested. Again, I want to make it clear that would not preclude us from making a point of order before the vote is taken. That is correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator from Arizona. We imposed on him this afternoon, having called down and you were not ready, and I apologize for that.

Mr. McCAIN. Is it appropriate for the Senator from Nebraska to make a point of order at this point and we move to waive the point of order, or does that take place at the time of the vote?

Mr. EXON. I simply say we are looking at this. I do not know whether we are going make a point of order against this or not.

Mr. McCAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. EXON. We are simply reserving the right to do that at a certain time, and I will not give that up at this juncture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry. Is it not Senator BYRD's amendment that is next pursuant to the previous agreement?

Mr. FORD. That would be the Senator's prerogative.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am just asking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no specified list and therefore presumes it is to up to the managers of the bill.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, Senator BYRD will be next in line, and I am pleased to yield to him whatever time we have on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for up to 5 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 2972

(Purpose: To strike the reductions in highway demonstration projects and to provide an offsetting revenue increase)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for himself and Mr. FORD, proposes an amendment numbered 2972.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike section 6002.

On page 1746, line 11, strike "2001" and insert "2000".

On page 1747, strike the matter between lines 7 and 8, and insert:

For calendar year:	The percentage is:
1995	100
1996	80
1997	60
1998	40
1999	20

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, less than 4 years ago, Congress passed the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act, ISTEA. That legislation modernized our Federal Aid Highway Program by targeting available resources on the most critical needs. The bill before us would rescind $712 million for certain highway projects funded in ISTEA and previous appropriation acts. This represents a substantial retreat from the commitments made in ISTEA and in those appropriations acts.

Mr. President, my amendment will restore full funding for these important highway projects in 48 States. By rescinding these Federal funds, the bill before us would require States to cough up an additional $712 million for these projects. In effect, this would cause States to have to increase their matching share from 20 percent to as much as 32 percent in order to complete these projects.

Currently, the Department of Defense shows a total unobligated balance in excess of $10 billion for ongoing military construction projects, yet no one—no one—suggests that we should rescind 15 percent of these unobligated balances in defense and thereby ensure that these projects cannot be completed.

If we seek to reduce our Federal budget deficit by worsening our investment deficit in our Nation's infrastructure, we will have done absolutely nothing to improve our national prosperity. We will only dig our Nation into a deeper hole characterized by excessively congested and deteriorating roads and bridges.

According to the Department of Transportation, there are currently more than 234,000 miles of nonlocal roads across the Nation which require improvements immediately or within the next 5 years. Additionally, 118,000 of the Nation's 575,000 bridges, more than one in five, are structurally deficient. Our current highway capacity is being stretched beyond its limits, and what is our response at the Federal level? Just as is the case with our Federal budget deficit, we are leaving the mess to our grandchildren.

To fully offset the effects of the restoration of these critical highway projects, my amendment includes a modification to section 12803 of the reconciliation bill which phases out the tax deductions presently allowed for the interest paid on company-owned life insurance policies over the period 1996 to 2001. Companies have used this loophole to earn profits at the expense of the taxpayer by insuring employees, then borrowing on the policy and deducting the interest on company tax returns. Both the Senate and House bills proposed to phase out this loophole.

My amendment would simply require the phaseout in the Senate bill to be completed in 4 years rather than 5 years. My proposal would retain the key employee exception as contained in the Senate bill. My amendment would restore highway moneys to 48 States, and I urge its adoption.

Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. BUMPERS and Mr. PRYOR be added as cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Now, Mr. President, 48 States will lose money unless my amendment is adopted. They will lose money for highways. I do not blame the committee that had to meet its instructions and did so by rescinding $712 million in highway funds. But I have provided an offset, and therefore I hope that this amendment will be adopted.

I have received letters of support of my amendment from the American Road and Transportation Builders Association, the American Trucking Association, and the Associated General Contractors of America.

Mr. President, let me just read a few of those States that lose money. Alabama will lose $12.8 million; Arizona, $2.8 million; Arizona, $31.5 million; California, $43.8 million; Connecticut, $5 million; Florida, $27.9 million; Georgia, $10.8 million; Hawaii, $3 million; Idaho, $8 million; Illinois, $29 million; Indiana, $8 million; Iowa, $9 million; Kansas, $9 million; Kentucky, $4.6 million; Louisiana, $13.8 million; Maine, $10.9 million; Maryland, $12.6 million; Michigan, $23 million; Minnesota, $23.5 million; Mississippi, $2.9 million; Missouri, $9.3 million; Montana, $3 million; Nebraska, $2.8 million; Nevada, $5.8 million; New Hampshire, $4.3 million; New Jersey, $29.3 million; New York, $40 million——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have on each desk the table of the amount that the various States would lose. I ask unanimous consent that this table, along with three letters in support of my amendment, be printed in the RECORD. I urge adoption of the amendment.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN ROAD & TRANSPORTATION
BUILDERS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, October 26, 1995.

DEAR SENATOR: The documented backlog of highway and bridge needs in the United States was estimated at more than $290 billion by the Department of Transportation in its 1993 report to the Congress. Despite this huge deficiency in infrastructure investment, the reconciliation bill (S. 1357) now before the Senate would reduce funding for highways by $522 million in fiscal year 1996 and an additional $165 million in fiscal year 1997.

The 4,000 members of the American Road & Transportation Buildings Association (ARTBA) strongly urge that you support an amendment to S. 1357 to be offered by Sen. Robert C. Byrd that would preserve existing funding levels.

Cutting highway funding at this time would be in conflict with the conference report on the fiscal 1996 transportation appropriations bill (H.R. 2002). That measure reflects the importance of highways to the country by increasing funding for their improvement. The federal highway program was, in fact, the only mode to receive a higher funding level than in fiscal 1995.

According to the Federal Highway Administration, America's highways provide 88 percent of the nation's personal transportation in addition to a large proportion of its commercial movement. Congress is expected shortly to approve designation of the National Highway System, a 159,000-mile network of roads intended to be the nation's backbone transportation system and the focus of federal highway investment in the years ahead. Clearly, this is no time to cutting already-inadequate funding for highway improvements. Furthermore, most of the proposed reduction is for activities supported by the Highway Trust Fund, a pay-as-you-go financing system supported by user fees. The sought budget savings can be found in other areas less crucial to this country's future.

ARTBA's nationwide membership is involved in the planning, design, construction, financing and operation of all forms of transportation facilities. It includes contractors, engineers and planners, equipment manufacturers, materials suppliers, public officials, financial institutions and educators. Again, we urge you to support Senator Byrd's amendment to S. 1357.

Sincerely,

T. PETER RUANE,
President & CEO.

AMERICAN TRUCKING ASSOCIATIONS,
Washington, DC, October 26, 1995.

Hon. ROBERT C. BYRD,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BYRD: I am writing to indicate the support of the American Trucking Associations for your efforts to restore $712 million in badly needed highway funding.

A Department of Transportation report estimated that the backlong of highway and bridge needs in the United States was in excess of $290 million. The conference report on the FY '96 Department of Transportation Appropriations bill (H.R. 2002) recognized this problem by increasing highway funding. Your efforts to restore that funding is in line with the priorities set out in H.R. 2002.

We support your amendment to S. 1357, the Budget Reconciliation Act, and urge your Senate colleagues to approve this amendment.

Sincerely yours,

TIMOTHY P. LYNCH.

THE ASSOCIATED GENERAL
CONTRACTORS OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, October 26, 1995.

Hon. ROBERT C. BYRD,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BYRD: The 33,000 members of the Associated General Contractors of America strongly support your amendment to S. 1357 that will restore much needed funding for highway projects.

Your recognition of the problems that the existing provision (section 6002) will cause the highway program are greatly appreciated. As you are so keenly aware, your amendment restores $715 million in highway funding for 48 states (only Alaska and Delaware escape the cuts included in Section 6002). Elimination of this funding mid stream will simply delay needed construction and could cost as many as 36,000 jobs.

In addition to eliminating current funding for projects (many of which are under construction) that have been previously approved by both the House and Senate, Section 6002 also sets a bad precedent by using highway trust fund money to offset the general fund deficit and will adversely impact the baseline for highway funding which could lower the amount of resources made available for critical highway construction in the future.

Thank you for your continued vigilance in ensuring adequate investment in the Nation's Surface Transportation Programs.

Sincerely,

STEPHEN E. SANDHERR,
Executive Director,
Congressional Relations.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I was not privy to drafting the provisions in the Finance Committee, and from the Environment and Public Works Committee, I wonder if Senator CHAFEE might take half my time and explain this as he sees it.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, this provision that is referred to as a loophole was entirely legal over the years that it was enforced, and in the Finance Committee, after considerable negotiation in what we are doing in retroactively repealing something, if you would, the belief was that doing it over 5 years was a fair method of proceeding.

And the belief was that to do it in 4 years—a very abbreviated time—was just not fair. So, Mr. President, this is an intricate, complicated system, and a complicated piece of legislation. But we felt in the Finance Committee that indeed there was considerable pressure to give a longer time to phase it out. But we arrived at 5 years thinking that was a fair way of doing it, and the 4 years just does pose a severe problem and difficulty upon those who chose to use this type of company-owned life insurance policies. So, Mr. President, that was the rationale for going to the 5 years.

Mr. BYRD. Would the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAFEE. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the House phases it out in 4 years. The Senate phases it out in 5 years. So either way it gets phased out. I suggest we phase it out in 4 years, and apply that money to these infrastructure projects in 48 States of the country. Let us cast a vote for America and the future of America.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I do not want to look at this in terms of whether we are voting for America or not. People would not want to stand up here and suggest they were not voting for America. I suspect they believe the amendments are for America.

What I am saying, Mr. President, is that we are doing something retroactively. And it was our belief that 5 years was the fair way. Now, I suppose you could do it in 1 year. But that does not make it any fairer. So, Mr. President, that was the basis on which we did the 5 years in the Finance Committee.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes and 20 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would just make a couple of quick points. Senator BYRD knows that I have great respect for him and I am fully aware of his constant and persistent desire that we spend money on infrastructure. But I think the only possible way, assuming it is not subject to a point of order, that this amendment should be adopted is if the U.S. Senate thinks that the demonstration highway projects were a good thing.

The demonstration highway projects did not treat all States equally. As a matter of fact, by being demonstration projects, some States got a lot more than others. So the distinguished Senator is now looking at that and saying some States would lose and some States would gain, but this is not a formula where everyone was allowed demonstration projects. This is a nonformula.

The demonstrations were established by committee or by appropriation or in that way. And anybody interested in whether this is a fair distribution among our States can just look at the list which I do not chose to read here tonight, but there are some very disproportionate returns of money to certain States and very little to other States that should have the same amount on population and highways. But the demonstrations were not set out in any fair way in the beginning.

So if you think the highway demonstration programs were great, then obviously you ought to put them back in here whereas the committee decided that they did not think they ought to be in and we ought to save money. So that is going to be the issue. That is if it is not subject to a point of order. And the reason I say "if," my instinct tells me it is, but then I think of who offered it, and I am quite sure he made sure it was not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. If we do not adopt this amendment, then we are retroactively wiping out those infrastructure projects in 48 States of this country. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment. I did not mention Pennsylvania, $111 million; Ohio, $22 million; Texas, $29 million; Virginia, $14 million; West Virginia, $66 million. I have only read some of them.

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator mentioned West Virginia?

Mr. BYRD. I mentioned West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am not going to ask for the yeas and nays or move to table. I will wait for the vote, the time that it comes up.

Senator CHAFEE, I believe, is the next one.

Does the Senator have a copy of Senator CHAFEE's amendment?

Mr. EXON. We do. I might say at this time, following Senator CHAFEE's presentation, I will yield our 5 minutes, which is the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee, to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair would be good enough to tell when I have used 3 minutes.

As I understand it, we have 5 minutes on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. CHAFEE. If the Chair could tell me at the end of 3 minutes, I would appreciate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator is offering an amendment, he needs to send it to the desk.

AMENDMENT NO. 2973

(Purpose: To guarantee coverage under the medicaid program for low-income aged, blind, and disabled individuals eligible for supplemental security income benefits under title XVI of the Social Security Act)

Mr. CHAFEE. I am sending the amendment to the desk, an unprinted amendment, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], for himself and Mr. CONRAD, proposes amendment numbered 2973.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would ask that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 767, strike lines 12 through 15 and insert the following:

"(3) provide for making medical assistance available to any individual receiving cash benefits under title XVI by reason of disability (including blindness) or receiving medical assistance under section 1902(f) (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act); and".

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am offering this amendment on behalf of Senator CONRAD and myself. What it does, it guarantees Medicaid eligibility for low-income individuals with disabilities. Under the language reported by the Senate Finance Committee, States are required to provide coverage to persons with disabilities.

However, and here is the hitch—the States are given complete latitude in establishing the definition of who is disabled. It could be only those who are quadriplegics who are blind are considered disabled. I mean, they can have any definition the States wish. What our amendment does is it sets a minimum standard by requiring States to provide coverage to children and adults with disabilities who receive benefits under the Supplemental Security Income Program [SSI].

But here are the important words, the SSI Program, as amended by the welfare reform bill which we passed here a month or so ago, we passed here by a vote of 87 to 12. So this is a very restricted group. This is not the SSI group that we worry about that included substance abusers, for example. That is not in this category. Only the neediest individuals qualify for SSI. They all have incomes below the poverty level and indeed currently they have to—they cannot be above 75 percent of the poverty level and qualify. Now, this is a pretty low-income group.

Why is this amendment important? Without this requirement, States will have the ability to exclude from coverage a group of individuals who depend on this Medicaid coverage as their only source of health insurance coverage. There is no place else they can go. You say get private insurance. Well, they first cannot afford it. And second, they all have preexisting conditions, and so therefore would not be qualified.

Mr. President, there is no mandated benefit package in this proposal. These are the facts. We do not mandate a benefit package. We leave that up to the States. All we are saying is, you have to cover this group. And how do you describe this group? You describe them by the SSI description as we had it in the welfare program. So, indeed, with no mandated benefit package, the States could say, "For this group there will be one aspirin a year." That could be done. But at least you have to cover everybody in the group with whatever the benefit package is.

Mr. President, I think it is very important to remember that we are giving the States, over the next 7 years, $800 billion—$800 billion, Mr. President. And they are going to receive their allocations based on the fact of those whom they covered in 1995, and in the group that they covered in which they got their money are these disabled. So, Mr. President, these are a very, very low-income group in our society. They are being cared for very frequently by their parents and others, kept in the community. And without this safety net they would have to in many cases be institutionalized at a far higher cost. I hope my colleagues will join me in preserving this critical safety net.

I yield time to Senator CONRAD.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I am proud to join Senator CHAFEE in offering this amendment. Mr. President, simply put, this provides health care support to the most severely disabled individuals in our society. Senator CHAFEE and I received a letter of support from the Consortium for Citizens With Disabilities, 30 national organizations that work to support the disabled. They said, and I quote:

> We believe that your amendment to establish a minimum floor of eligibility for children and adults with disabilities is a fundamental component of ensuring a basic safety net for low-income people with severe disabilities.

Mr. President, health care is not an option for these people, it is a necessity. They have it today. They should not be at risk for losing it tomorrow.

During Finance Committee deliberation, we received this communication. It said:

> Mr. Senator, if you are a person with mental retardation, these services are not optional. Remember, this is a lifelong condition which cannot be cured like substance abuse or unemployment. Also remember, it is not a self-inflicted condition, but rather one that a person is born with.

Mr. President, States should not cut severely disabled people from Medicaid. That is the premise of this amendment. I hope our colleagues will support it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, first, I want to compliment the Senator from Rhode Island, because actually it was the Senator from Rhode Island and myself in the Finance Committee who put up this amendment, which won 17 to 3, and then it sort of disappeared. It particularly disappeared with respect to the disabled. It should be understood the Senator is entirely correct in his amendment, and I urge my colleagues to support his amendment.

On the other hand, it is also important to understand that by voting for this amendment that we are not going to be making a prince out of a frog; that the underlying Medicaid bill which encompasses this amendment is, in the judgment of this Senator, a disaster.

This amendment will help. I do not want to in any way diminish that. This is pregnant women, children, and the disabled, and it is a guarantee. The guarantee was not there before.

The Senator is right when he says the States now have to make a determination under the current law what "disabled" means. Good heavens, 50 different definitions coming in on "disabled."

The point is, it is a good amendment in a bad bill. The States will still lose 30 percent of their Medicaid funding. In the case of my State, it is a little more than that. On nursing home protection, Federal standards are wiped out. That really does bring up the specter, and some say, "Well, you are just making a fuss over this." What a fuss. The standards we passed in 1987 by which you could no longer tether, that is tie down, an elderly person in a nursing home or drug into passivity an elderly person, is wiped out. So that is now possible under the underlying bill.

These are terrible things. Children with primary care needs, early detection, early protection, no immunization—it is not a good bill. But the amendment is good and the Senator from Rhode Island has suggested an amendment that ought to be adopted.

So I just simply make that point and compliment the Senator significantly for now getting the word "guaranteed" coverage into the legislation. I compliment him on that and urge my colleagues to support the Senator's amendment.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Has all time been used on the amendment before us?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska controls 1 minute, 50 seconds.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, if I could have just a portion of that.

Mr. EXON. I will be glad to yield half of it to my colleague.

Mr. DOMENICI. Wait a minute; wait a minute. How do we get all 10 minutes in favor of the amendment? I do not want to argue against it. You cannot allocate the time to the other side if they are in favor of the amendment. Is that not the rule? If it is not, I am mistaken.

Mr. EXON. I do not think the rule specifies that. But in a matter of fairness, I agree to the chairman's—who wishes to speak in opposition?

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, it is such an outstanding amendment. I do not think there is any opposition.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am not so sure but you are right. But I want to make sure we do not have all 10 minutes. I thought we were going to save 5.

Mr. CHAFEE. Why do we not save time and just adopt it?

Mr. DOMENICI. We cannot do that right now. It may come to pass.

Mr. EXON. I yield half my time to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Will the Senator from Rhode Island yield? Will the Senator from Rhode Island correct the misstatement of the Senator from West Virginia about pregnant women, children and disabled as opposed to the elderly?

Mr. CHAFEE. I am going to stick what we have here, which is we are solely dealing with low-income individuals with disabilities. Mr. President, I tell you, when you are talking 75 percent of poverty, you are really talking about poor people.

But the key thing I want to stress here is these folks are being cared for in the community very frequently by their parents. And do not think these are 6-year-olds and their parents are 35. Their parents are frequently 65 and these individuals are 40 years old. But they are being cared for in the community, because they have this safety net of Medicaid coverage that is there in case they get ill. Otherwise, I am certain that they would end up in institutions at a far greater cost to the public and all of us.

So, Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. COHEN. Will the Senator yield? I indicate my support for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time has expired. If the manager wishes to speak in opposition, he is entitled to have 5 minutes restored in opposition.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not choose to speak in opposition. Does any Senator want to speak in opposition? What I would like to do is take my 5 minutes and I would like to yield 2 minutes of that to Senator COHEN. He can speak in favor of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten minutes has expired in support.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator have 2 minutes to speak in favor of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager is entitled to 5 minutes in opposition. The Senator from Maine is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I thank my friend. I rise in support of the CHAFEE amendment. Senator CHAFEE has tried valiantly to include the poorest of the poor in our system, and for anyone to object to having the disabled included—I might say, it does not go far enough perhaps, because as I understand the Senator's amendment, it includes pregnant women and children and does not include elderly; it includes disabled but it leaves it up to the States to define what "disabled" is.

I know the Senator was eager to use the SSI determination for "disabled." Is that the Senator's amendment?

Mr. CHAFEE. That is right. It has already been adopted. Pregnant women and children up to the age of 12 and 100 percent of poverty, that is covered. And also the disabled are to be covered, but the definition of "disabled" was not made.

Mr. COHEN. My understanding is now you have included the definition that has been acknowledged under the SSI determination.

Mr. CHAFEE. As changed by the welfare bill.

Mr. COHEN. Then please let me lend my strong support for that, and I want to thank my friend from New Mexico for allowing me a moment or two to express my support.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, is this the proper time to ask for the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be appropriate.

Mr. CHAFEE. I do so. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I want to thank everyone.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thought he was next. I was mistaken. I believe Senator BREAUX is next.

I yield our 5 minutes to the Senator from Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

AMENDMENT NO. 2963

(Purpose: To provide for a partially refundable child tax credit)

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk and ask it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX] proposes an amendment numbered 2963.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1469, beginning on line 2, strike all through page 1471, line 20, and insert the following:

SEC. 12001. CHILD TAX CREDIT.

"(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for such subpart C is amended by striking the item relating to section 35 and inserting the following new items:

"Sec. 35. Child tax credit.
"Sec. 36. Overpayments of tax."

"(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, my colleagues, the largest item in the Finance Committee bill, by far, is the $500 per child tax credit. It cost $141 billion over 7 years. That is a lot of money. Some people think we should not have a tax cut at all. But this bill is going to have a tax cut in it. The largest one is going to be a per child tax cut at $500 per child. I would think that all of us, if we know it is going to pass, should at least agree on one thing—the largest number of families that need it should get it.

Here is what my amendment does. It addresses a problem that is very real. Simply stated, the Republican proposal only is a credit against income tax. It is not a credit against the largest tax that people pay in this country, that is, the payroll tax. For 75 percent of American families, they pay more in payroll tax than in income tax. This child tax credit is not an offset against the payroll tax. This chart shows that. The blue line is the payroll taxes that people pay on average. The orange line is an estimate of their income tax.

So you see, families making $16,000, all the way up to families on this chart making almost $27,000, are paying far more in payroll taxes than they are paying in income taxes.

The figures show that under the Republican proposal, something like 44 percent of all the children in America would only get a partial or no credit at all, because the credit is only against the income tax. Many families do not even pay that much in income tax.

If you have a family that has two children, that is a $1,000 credit. But if they are only paying $700 or $500 in income tax, they do not get to use the credit. Therefore, simply stated, my amendment makes the $500 per child tax credit a credit against both the income tax or the payroll tax. We spend the same amount of money—not a dime more, not a dime less. But we cover 44 percent more children. We cover about 31 million more children living in families, and if we are going to spend this money for a credit, let us make sure they get it.

The second chart tells you what we are talking about when we look at family earnings and how much they pay in income taxes—the actual numbers. A family making $20,000 a year is at about $458 in income tax. That would not even pay for the credit for one child. But that same family is spending over $1,500—$1,530—in payroll tax. My amendment says that the $500 per child tax credit can be used as a credit against the payroll tax, as well as an income tax, so that the family making $20,000 will get some of the benefits of this massive program that we are passing. What is wrong with saying let us make sure that the most number of children get the benefit?

I have seen some of the Republican charts that say, well, under this credit, this proposal, we get a huge credit against income tax. Sure, the problem that is most families pay more in payroll tax, and it is no offset whatsoever against the payroll tax. So for families making under $30,000 a year, for most of them it is no benefit at all.

Look at this chart. This is every State in the country. This is the median household income. In Louisiana, it is $25,000. Under the Republican proposal, if you are in a family making less than $30,000 a year, you are not going to get the benefit of a per child tax credit. So my proposition is very simple. If you want to add about 31 million more people to the rolls and give them the benefit, for the same amount of money—exactly the same amount of money—my credit goes out to families making up to $75,000 a year. It starts to phase out at $60,000 and eliminates it at $75,000 per family, but it makes it refundable against a payroll tax. By spending the same amount of money, we cover 31 million more children. I think that is what we are trying to do.

I got this wonderful note from the Christian Coalition saying they are going to target this amendment. They say, "We are going to portray this amendment as a vote to gut the $500 per child tax credit." It does not gut it; it is the same amount of money. We are just covering 31 million more children in this country by making it a credit against the payroll tax. They say they want to make sure they get the most number of people covered. That is exactly what my amendment does. They say, well, his starts to phase out at $60,000 per year. That is true, but it goes up to the same amount, $75,000, that the original Republican proposal did. Just by making it refundable against the payroll tax——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BREAUX. Forty-four percent more children are covered.

I urge adoption of this amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield 2½ minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, first let me say that I agree with the Senator from Louisiana in wanting to make this tax cut refundable against the FICA or payroll tax, because I argued many months and many times that we should do this and expand the tax credit, because FICA is one of the most regressive.

But this is not the way to do it. This is not the way to pit one group of hard-working, tax-paying families against another group of families that struggle every day to try and make ends meet, to provide for his or her family.

Nearly 75 percent of the tax credits in the Republican plan go to families making under $75,000 a year, those hard-working families who have been asked to pay.

This is the real crux of the argument: They have been asked to pay more of their income to Federal taxes every year, year after year. Our plan does target low-income families with increases in the EITC credit, already giving $24 billion this year, growing to like $30 billion, and in the next year, $40 billion plus. So those families are seeing an increase in their earned-income tax credit. They are getting tax relief or more money in their pockets.

But who is forgotten? The families forgotten are those making between $30,000 and $75,000 a year. They are forgotten for the EITC program. They do not get the benefits here. Yet, they are remembered one day of the year—tax day—when they are asked to spend more and more of their money. I would like to work with the Senator from Louisiana to try and define ways to shrink the size of the Federal Government, to save additional moneys, to be able to expand even farther the tax credits, to give more persons tax relief. But let us not pit one group who are asked to pay and pay, and pay more of their income, as well as their FICA. Their FICA taxes are also being deducted.

Let us give them credits and not pit one against the other. Let us not take money from the taxpayers. Let us work to shrink the size of the Government and give more Americans more of their money back in the form of tax credits. I would like to work with the Senator from Louisiana in doing that. But I do not support this, and I urge my colleagues to vote no on the amendment.

Mr. BREAUX. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield me 60 seconds? I do not think I have any time left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has used his time. The Senator from New Mexico has 2 minutes 30 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment. First of all, everybody should know this amendment starts phasing out the child tax care credit at $60,000. The credit that we have in the Senate bill, when coupled with the earned-income tax credit, achieves the same goal as the Breaux amendment. It relieves the lower-income folks of the payroll burden. His would be to the contrary. The child credit and EIC is already in excess of the family's Federal payroll taxes. The employee and the employer share for families living at or near the poverty line. A family earning under $12,500, with two children, and families with earnings under $15,500 will have the same effect under our bill. Yet, we will be able to cover more Americans because we do not stop it at $60,000.

So I do not believe we ought to do this. Frankly, I am not a great fan of refundable anything because I believe they are rampant with fraud. We just got through a situation with EITC, and it is about 25 percent fraudulent because we are giving people a check back as a refundable tax credit. Some may be for that. I do not think it is a very good policy. The same thing will happen to this one if we do it this way.

Mr. GRAMS. If the Senator will yield, the Senator from Louisiana said more children would be covered. Actually, under his bill, because he would limit the age at 15 and not 17, as in our proposal, 5 million children between the ages of 16 and 17, whose families' income fall below $75,000 a year, would not be denied this child tax credit. It would cover fewer children and not more. So I think the whole crux of this plan is to give tax relief for families.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, in closing, I do not believe we ought to stop a child tax credit at 16 years of age. I have been through this, and that is about the time they start to get really expensive. There we are stopping it just about at that time, while in our bill we add two more years, which is much better in terms of really helping middle income families when they need it the most.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I will vote against the Breaux amendment. Although I have expressed support for making the $500-per-child tax credit refundable against the FICA tax, this amendment is the wrong way to achieve this objective. First, it dramatically limits the $55 credit for many middle-class families. Second, it limits the number of children who would qualify for the credit.

For families earning between $60,000 and $75,000, this amendment would unfairly prevent them from receiving the $500 child tax credit.

It is my hope that FICA refundability will be raised during conference and that a solution will be adopted which will provide much needed tax relief to all American families.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to table that amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think it comes to our side. Senator BOND is next.

Mr. EXON. When Senator BOND finishes, I wish to yield the 5 minutes on our side to the discretion of the Senator from Arkansas.

AMENDMENT NO. 2975

(Purpose: To increase the health insurance deduction for self-employed individuals and to strike the long-term care insurance provisions)

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I thank my good friend and eminent leader of the Budget Committee for this time. I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator PRYOR and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND], for himself and Mr. PRYOR, proposes an amendment numbered 2975.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1553, beginning with line 13, strike all through page 1588, line 24, and insert:

SUBCHAPTER A—HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS

SEC. 12201. INCREASE IN DEDUCTION FOR HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.

(a) INCREASE IN DEDUCTION.—Section 162(l) is amended—

(1) by striking "30 percent" in paragraph (1) and inserting "the applicable percentage", and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(6) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the applicable percentage shall be determined as follows:

"For taxable years beginning in	The applicable in percentage is:
1996 and 1997	60
1998 and thereafter	100."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Mr. BOND. There is a great injustice in our tax law, an injustice that I suspect everyone in this body has addressed at some time or another. That is the inequity in the deductibility of health insurance costs.

I do not think I need to tell my colleagues that corporations historically can deduct 100 percent of the health care insurance premium that they pay for employees, and the employees do not have to declare any of the employer-paid health insurance premiums as income. At the same time, the self-employed farmers, the small business men and women of this country cannot deduct more than 30 percent.

This body took a great step forward earlier this year when we reinstated for last year the 25-percent deduction and increased that to 30 percent. Frankly, that is not enough.

In my role as chairman of the Small Business Committee, I have heard from small businesses in my State and across the country who are concerned, and greatly concerned, rightfully so, about health care.

The occupant of the chair and I know, because we have worked on health care issues over recent years, one of the biggest problems we face are those who are uninsured, because they are limited to a 30-percent deduction as self-employed people for health care insurance premiums.

Under the amendment that I am offering today with Senator PRYOR, we will increase the deduction for self-employed to 60 percent next year, 60 percent the following year, and then in the year 1998, increase that to 100 percent. Mr. President, I believe that is the way to achieve equity and ensure that more of the self-employed are insured.

The offset to this provision—we seek to offset by taking out the new program for long-term care insurance included in the Finance Committee markup. I think it is a good idea down the road, or perhaps even before we complete work on this bill, to start providing some incentives for long-term insurance. I think it makes a great deal of sense. I think first we have to address the basic inequity.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Missouri for yielding to me, and I thank the distinguished manager, Senator EXON of Nebraska, for giving me the opportunity to address this issue.

We all know last spring the Congress passed and the President signed into law H.R. 831. This was a bill to restore the 25-percent health care deduction for the self-employed and for the farmers of America. As my colleagues may remember, Mr. President, this deduction had expired and the self-employed were receiving absolutely no health care deduction at all for a period of time. It was an absurd position in which to place small businesses and the family farm.

H.R. 831 also increased the deduction to 30 percent for 1995 and for all years in the future. It was a very good step, a positive step for small business and for the family farm.

I was proud, by the way, to join Senator ROTH and Senator BOND and others in a letter with 73 of our colleagues who promised not to offer or support any amendment on the floor. It was a strong statement, but we underscored our recognition of the importance of the health care deduction for the self-employed.

Last week when the tax bill came before the Senate Finance Committee, I was disappointed that the chairman's markup did not include any progress on the deduction front. I offered an amendment to increase this deduction to 50 percent—from 30 percent to 50 percent. I was further disappointed when this amendment failed on a party-line vote.

I am very proud to join with Senator BOND this evening on the floor of the Senate in an amendment to increase the self-employed deduction not to 50 percent, Mr. President, but to 100 percent. There is where it should be, and that is what our amendment does.

It is an issue of parity. It is an issue of increasing coverage for small business and for farmers, for making insurance more affordable. It would move the 30-percent rate to 60 percent in 1996 for deduction. In 1997, it would continue at 60 percent. By 1998, Mr. President, we would have a 100-percent deduction for small businesses, for the self-employed, and for the farm families of America. I think it would do more to, basically, make insurance more affordable and to provide insurance for many, many more millions of Americans that have labored under a very inequitable situation.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from Arkansas, who has been a champion of this deduction for a long time. It is a pleasure to work with him on this amendment.

I want to advise my colleagues that we have received strong letters of support from a whole host of organizations—agriculture and small business, including the Farm Bureau Federation, ABC, Chamber of Commerce, H.E.A.L., Association for Self-Employed, Association of Home Builders, Cattlemen's Association, National Restaurant Association, NFIB, National Retail Federation, Small Business Legislative Council, Society of American Florists.

I ask unanimous consent this be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPPORT THE BOND/PRYOR AMENDMENT

OCTOBER 25, 1995.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Small Business,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BOND: We, the undersigned organizations, support your and Senator Pryor's amendment to Reconciliation to increase health insurance deductibility for the self-employed.

For years, large corporations have been deducting 100 percent of the cost of their health insurance while self-employed business owners like sole proprietors, Subchapter S corporations and partnerships have been limited to 30 percent—which was just increased five percent this year. This is simply unfair and must be changed.

We believe that before the Congress authorizes a costly, new deduction for any other kind of health care benefit self-employed small business owners and farmers should get 100 percent health insurance deductibility.

Thank you for your leadership on behalf of the self-employed. We look forward to working with you to pass this important amendment. We urge all of your colleagues to support your amendment.

Sincerely,

American Farm Bureau Federation, Associated Builders and Contractors, Chamber of Commerce of the United States, H.E.A.L. (Healthcare Equity Action League),[1] National Association for the Self-Employed, National Association of Home Builders, National Cattlemen's Association, National Federation of Independent Business, National Restaurant Association, National Retail Federation, Small Business Legislative Council, Society of American Florists.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Committee on Small Business, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We strongly support your amendment to the budget reconciliation bill to increase the deduction the self-employed may take for their own health care expenses.

As you know, sole-proprietors, partners and S Corporation shareholders can now deduct 30 percent of such costs. For many years, these individuals were not allowed to deduct health care costs at all. For a time, the deduction was 25 percent, but it was a temporary deduction and we found ourselves fighting each year to justify a provision that should not require a constant defense.

The prohibition on such deductions is an anachronism from the 1950s, based on an outdated concept of how business entities should be taxed under our system. In the modern day business environment, this policy is simply unfair. Frankly, we believe, if not for the issue of revenue, Congress would have already changed this law. It is time to address this inequity once and for all time.

The Small Business Legislative Council [SBLC] is a permanent, independent coalition of nearly one hundred trade and professional associations that share a common commitment to the future of small business. Our members represent the interests of small businesses in such diverse economic sectors as manufacturing, retailing, distribution, professional and technical services, construction, transportation, and agriculture. Our policies are developed through a consensus among our membership. Individual associations may express their own views. For your information, a list of our members is enclosed.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE SELF-EMPLOYED,
Washington, DC, October 25, 1995.

Hon. KIT BOND,
Chairman, Senate Small Business Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN BOND: It is my understanding that you intend to offer an amendment during the budget debate that would raise the health insurance deduction for the self-employed from the current 30 percent level to 100 percent. On behalf of the National Association for the Self-Employed, I completely support your efforts.

Raising this deduction level would create tax equity between corporate America and small business. Currently, large businesses can deduct 100 percent of the premiums they pay on behalf of their employees for health insurance coverage. The self-employed can only deduct 30 percent of their costs. And the self-employed who pay for their own insurance are primarily paying with after-tax dollars, effectively making the policies more expensive. A 100-percent deduction would give the self-employed the equity they deserve.

Also a 100-percent deduction would enable many self-employed to purchase a health insurance policy, a luxury many cannot currently afford. I believe passing a 100-percent deduction would significantly decrease the number of uninsured individuals in this country.

We have polled our 320,000 self-employed members and 100-percent deductibility of health insurance premiums is the No. 1 issue of concern to them. Please do not hesitate to call on me. I stand ready to assist your efforts in any way I can.

Sincerely,

BENNIE L. THAYER,
President/CEO.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, October 26, 1995.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Small Business Committee,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR KIT: The U.S. chamber of Commerce Federation of 215,000 businesses (96% of whom are small businesses), 3,000 state and local chambers of commerce, 1,200 trade and professional organizations, and 75 American chambers of commerce abroad strongly supports your small business amendment to the Balanced Budget Reconciliation bill. Your business community coalition supporting healthcare reform. It is comprised of over 600 companies, associations, and local Chambers of Commerce, representing over 1 million employers and 35 million employees.

---

amendment would allow the self-employed and small businesses to deduct 100% of their health insurance costs, a benefit currently available only to large corporations.

As you know, the Chamber has long maintained that the self-employed and unincorporated small businesses should receive the same tax treatment currently available to corporations. Sound tax policy dictates full deductibility of premium of self-insurance cost as ordinary and necessary business expenses. There is no valid tax policy reason for treating the smallest businesses any differently. It is vitally important to the nation's economic security that the smallest businesses, frequently new and often struggling, should be granted a measure of security equal to that of larger corporations.

Once again, the Chamber commends your work on behalf of our nation's small businesses and looks forward to working with you towards resolving this issue. The inability of the nation's smallest businesses to deduct the full cost of their health insurance, and the inequity in being denied an advantage granted to their incorporated fellows, has been a thorn in the side of small business and the self-employed for years. It is time that thorn is removed and equality is restored.

Sincerely,

R. BRUCE JOSTEN.

PROMOTIONAL PRODUCTS
ASSOCIATION INTERNATIONAL,
Irving, TX, October 26, 1995.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Committee on Small Business, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On behalf of the Promotional Products Association International (PPA), I wish to express our support for your amendment to increase the deduction the self-employed may take for their own health care costs.

Under current law, they may deduct only 30 percent of their health care costs, and the current deduction was only recently made permanent. For the millions of sole proprietors, partners, and S Corporation shareholders, including PPA members, this is an unfair penalty with no sound basis in tax policy.

The current policy dates back to another era in tax policy, when business entities such as sole proprietorships were viewed upon with great suspicion. Now, decades later, economic and social policy has evolved to the point where we find more and more individuals opting to structure their small business in such a fashion. These small businesses are an increasingly important source of strength in our economy.

It is time to give them the same opportunity to deduct their health care costs as any other business.

The promotional products industry is the advertising, sales promotion, and motivational medium employing useful articles of merchandise imprinted with an advertiser's name, logo, or message. Our industry sales are over $6 billion and PPA members are manufacturers and distributors of such goods and services.

Sincerely,

H. TED OLSON, MAS,
President.

NATIONAL HOME
FURNISHINGS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, October 26, 1995.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Committee on Small Business, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On behalf of the National Home Furnishings Association [NHFA], I wish to express our strong support for your amendment to the budget reconciliation bill to increase the deduction the self-employed may take for their own health care costs. It is long overdue.

It is unfair to penalize small business owners solely because they elect to do business as a sole proprietorship, partnership, or S Corporation, yet that is what the current tax code does with respect to their own health care costs.

As you know, for the first time this year, the self-employed can deduct 30 percent of their health care costs. For many years, they were not allowed to deduct even that much. We all know what health care costs these days, and it is simply unfair to impose such a harsh penalty which does not have any sound tax policy justification to support it.

The NHFA represents approximately 2,800 retailers of home furnishings throughout the United States. Thank you for your efforts on our behalf.

Sincerely,

PATRICIA N. BOWLING,
Executive Vice President.

WORLD FLOOR
COVERING ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, October 26, 1995.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Committee on Small Business, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On behalf of the World Floor Covering Association [WFCA], representing floorcovering retailers throughout the United States, I wish to express our strong support for our amendment to the budget reconciliation bill to increase the deduction the self-employed may take for their own health care costs. It is about time this inequity in our tax policy was resolved once and for all.

Mr. BOND. Now, Mr. President, I know there are a number of my colleagues who feel very strongly about the long-term care insurance program. We have had discussions about finding other offsets to this amendment so that we may be able to start on that long-term care prospect. I will be most anxious to work with my colleagues because I think everybody here at one time or another has expressed his or her strong support for the full deductibility of health care.

With that, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to modify the amendment prior to a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, I do not understand what that means.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, if I could respond.

Mr. DOMENICI. You mean, if you find another source of revenue?

Mr. BOND. There are minds far brighter than mine and people with far greater access to the intricacies of this measure who are embarking on a good-faith effort to find offsets to get them scored by the Joint Tax Committee.

I sincerely hope we can find a way to accommodate both the long-term insurance and the health care. I believe very strongly that the health care deductibility for self-employed must be done. I would like to be able to work with my colleagues who support the long-term insurance program so that can be accomplished.

At this point we do not have an offset. I want to make sure this measure is before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Senator DOLE wants to be recognized in opposition.

Mr. DOLE. Only in opposition to the long-term care.

I think in this matter, a lot of the debate in the last 2 or 3 days has been long-term care—Medicare, Medicaid. We are trying to get the younger people involved in long-term care so that when they arrive at their senior years, they will have long-term care through the private sector.

It is something we have worked on in a bipartisan way in the Finance Committee for years. We finally have it in the bill. We believe it is a very good provision.

I do not object to the amendment that is pending. I hope they can find another revenue source. I support what Senator BOND and Senator PRYOR are trying to do. The self-employed should have the same rights as everyone else, the same deduction. I hope that if we can find another revenue source—because I really believe the long-term care amendment, although this is very important, is just as important, or we will be back here in 10, 15, 20 years, somebody will be back here wondering why we did not do something to get people interested in buying insurance and getting a deduction.

I hope we can resolve it before we have the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, we said we had no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is agreed to.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I think we were entitled to 5 minutes in opposition, because the other side was in favor. But I am just going to take a minute and say I compliment Senator BOND for what he is trying to do. But I, too, hope he will find another offset, because I truly believe, in the midst of a national debate on Medicare and Medicaid, much of which is long-term care, we have come to the conclusion that the missing link out there is that not many people have long-term care protection.

That is getting to be a bigger and bigger burden of our Government. We are going to be less and less able to do it. That we start, in this bill, moving in the direction of letting that happen for people who want to save for themselves and buy insurance and get an appropriate credit, seems to me to be very positive. I hope the Senator from Missouri, for whom I have great respect, would agree with that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I cannot disagree with a thing my distinguished colleague from New Mexico has said. I had the pleasure of meeting with business men and women in his State. Both of these are important in his State, my State, and the rest of the country.

I do want to make sure this bill has the deductibility phased in, full deductibility for the self-employed and small businesses. We are most anxious to work cooperatively with colleagues on both sides to accomplish this.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back any time I had in opposition.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas has 2 minutes and 9 seconds.

Mr. PRYOR. Will Senator EXON like some time?

Mr. EXON. I will wait until the Senator finishes.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, just for 1 minute. On many occasions we, all of us, I assume, have gone to town meetings or wherever and said we believe the self-employed, small business, farmers of our country need to have the same rights and same deductibility, especially in purchasing their health care coverage for themselves and their employees. This is exactly what Senator BOND and I are trying to craft tonight, that opportunity. I hope we can give that to these individuals who truly create the jobs in America and who really are deserving of this opportunity to participate in the health care system of America.

I hope we can work out something and I pledge my best efforts to do so.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, do I have any time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has 1 minute and 15 seconds.

Mr. EXON. I would like to use that 1 minute, if I might, for a brief colloquy between myself and the chairman of the committee. I think we can jointly announce some good news. I think we are moving quite well here. The amendments I have next, that I think are agreed to on the other side—next will be Senator BIDEN, then Senator SNOWE, then Senator DORGAN, then Senator PHIL GRAMM of Texas, and then Senator KERRY of Massachusetts.

I am pleased with the way we are cooperating on both sides and the fact the Senators are here, prepared to offer their amendments in a timely fashion.

Is that the schedule for the next amendments, in that order?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes. I would make sure and confirm on our side that, when we have done Senator GRAMM of Texas, it is my calculation that we will have had 8 of our 10, still leaving us with 2. If that is everybody's understanding, then I am perfectly in accord.

Mr. EXON. It appears to me that is accurate.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Will the Senator yield for just a moment? I did not hear the Senator from Nebraska. What was the order of the next 50 minutes, did he say?

Mr. EXON. The next amendments, 10 minutes each, equally divided. The next will be Senator BIDEN followed by Senator SNOWE followed by Senator DORGAN followed by Senator PHIL Gramm of Texas followed by Senator KERRY of Massachusetts.

With that, I yield 5 minutes to Senator BIDEN, from the State of Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I send a motion to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] proposes a motion to commit with instructions.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the motion be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The motion is as follows:

MOTION TO COMMIT WITH INSTRUCTIONS

Mr. President, I move to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance with instructions that the Committee on Finance report the bill back to the Senate within 3 days (not to include any day the Senate is not in session) with identical language, except that the Committee on Finance shall include a provision in the bill which would provide tax relief to middle-class American families and which would help middle-class families meet the rapidly rising costs of a higher education by providing a tax deduction of up to $10,000 per year for the costs of a college education for individual taxpayers with adjusted gross income of not more than $90,000 and for married couples with adjusted gross incomes of not more than $120,000. The Committee on Finance should also include a provision which offsets the costs of this proposed tax deduction by restricting the growth of tax expenditures, except for the deductions for mortgage interest, health insurance, state and local taxes, and charitable contributions.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, this goal is straightforward. It is simple and I think consistent with what I heard everyone over the last 2 years talk about. We all stand before this body, in both parties—I do not question the motivation of anyone in either party—and we always talk about the need to give immediate relief to middle-class taxpayers. Admittedly, in this bill there is some relief for middle-class taxpayers in the tax portion, and that is the $500 child care tax credit. I would argue—I will not take the time now—the additional cost to middle-class families as a consequence of the cuts in Medicare and Medicaid will offset that, but that is a different question.

One of the things we also talk about is the goal and dream of every American family, whether it is the richest businessman or poorest welfare mother, and every middle-class family, and that is providing for the education for their children.

Frankly, as the Presiding Officer knows, it is getting harder and harder for middle-class families—and I mean that in a broad range, people making from $30,000 to $90,000 individually or up to $120,000 as a family—to be able to afford a college education. I would like to take a look at what is happening here, very quickly, in the limited amount of time that I have. This is what has happened since 1980.

The orange represents the cost of public college tuition. I want to make sure we understand now I am talking about State universities. I am not talking about private universities, whether the Syracuses or the Harvards or the Yales or the Georgetowns of the world, which are a great deal more expensive than the cost of public tuition and fees. And I am not even talking about room and board. I am not even talking about that—just college tuition and fees. Since the 1980's the college tuition and fees for public universities have increased 236 percent. The median household income in America has gone up 82 percent.

If you go back to 1980 you can see how every single, solitary year the gap is widening, in what I do not know anyone would disagree with is the ultimate middle-class dream most American families have, like the one my father had, he never went to college: give my son and my daughter a college education.

When I went to school, this gap was not so wide. If you take a look at what has happened in terms of, again, income for median families, middle-income families, in 1980, 4.5 percent of median household income was what it cost to send someone to college. Now that is almost doubled, it is 8.4 percent. That is for one child.

The bottomline is it is getting incredibly difficult for middle-class families, or any family to send their child to college. So the result is, in 1980, as I said, it took 4.5 percent of the median household income to pay for tuition and fees. I am not talking, now, about room and board. Today it takes 8.4 percent, almost double, just for tuition and fees for a public university.

Education is one of the best investments we can make in American society. I have voted for investment tax credit for businesses. I voted for tax credits for them buying machinery and all of those things which make sense in my view.

I can think of nothing that makes more sense than encouraging American families to invest in a post-high school education for their children. It seems to me it is about time they should get a break.

Mr. President, to reiterate, this motion to recommit is simple. It instructs the Finance Committee to include in the budget reconciliation bill a tax deduction of up to $10,000 for the costs of a college education.

Let me tell you why this is important. In my years of public service, I have found that no matter what differences may divide us, there is always one constant thing that unites us. We all have the same dream.

Think about it. No matter who you talk to—black or white, rich or poor—every American family dreams that their children will go to college. It was my dad's dream for his children, and it was, and is, my dream for my children. It remains the dream of every middle-class American family.

But, that dream is now at risk. This last summer, a poll was conducted of undergraduate students and parents with children in college. Of those surveyed, 87 percent—nearly 9 out of every 10 Americans—believe that the cost of college is rising so fast that it will soon be out of reach for most Americans.

It should be no surprise why the overwhelming majority of Americans believe that. At the rate we are going, it is true. It is getting harder and harder for middle-class Americans to afford a college education.

It makes you begin to wonder what exactly the word public means when you say "public higher education."

A college education is slipping out of reach of middle-class Americans. And, if they still want to fulfill the dream, it means that more and more young people must borrow more and more money to go to college.

One more statistic—and perhaps the one that boggles my mind the most. Of all the money ever borrowed under the Federal Government's guaranteed student loan program, 22 percent of it has been borrowed in the last 2 years.

Let me say that again. The guaranteed student loan program has been with us for 30 years. And, of all the money borrowed during that time, almost one-fourth of it has been borrowed in just the last 2 years.

We are saddling the next generation with enormous debt before their adult lives even begin. And, I am not talking about the abstract terms of the Federal debt. No, this is saddling the next generation with individual, personal debt.

When today's college students walk down the aisle at graduation, they are handed not only a diploma, but a big i-o-u. And, for too many, it is either that, or no college at all.

So, I have a very simple proposition. We should give a tax deduction of up to $10,000 per year for the costs of a college education. Under my motion to recommit, this tax deduction would be limited to single taxpayers with incomes under $90,000 and to married couples with incomes under $120,000. And, it would be paid for by limiting the growth—not cutting, just limiting the growth—in tax expenditures.

Mr. President, education is one of the best investments we, as a society, can make. It is one of the best measurements of future economic well-being. And, it is more important now than ever before. Previous generations could make a solid middle-class living with only a high school education. No more.

In fact, there was an interesting point made in a Wall Street Journal article last week. Working families save primarily by investing in human capital—that is, education.

Yet, when businesses invest in machine capital, they are not taxed. Middle-class families, when they invest in education, are taxed to the hilt. Education is treated as consumption, not investment.

And, as a Nobel Prize economist once put it, the tax code treats machines better than it does people.

It is time for that to change.

From the establishment of the land-grant university system in the late 1800's to the GI bill at the end of World War II to the creation of the PELL Grant and Guaranteed Student Loan programs in the 1960s, the Federal Government has been committed to seeing that young people desiring to go to college would not be turned away because of the cost. It was a national goal to see a college education within reach of every American.

Now, as that goal begins to slip out of reach for many middle-class families, it is time to renew our commitment to ensuring access to a college education for all Americans. I urge my colleagues to support this proposal.

I reserve the remainder of my time if I have any.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I regrettably disagree with my friend from Delaware. Actually, to pick out two of the many tax expenditures, that is, two mortgage deductions—that is a very large one—and health insurance and freeze all the rest seems to me totally unreasonable. Let me just go through a couple.

We are freezing pension contributions. That is one of the largest tax expenditures we have, and we think it is fair. Education that employees get from their corporations, you would freeze that deduction. The R&D tax credits for American corporations. The one thing they have asked for is that they get to deduct in a special way the research and development costs of their business, something needed to keep them competitive. Arbitrarily we decide those are all frozen so that we can provide this special tax treatment for those people with children going to college.

Now, we would like to do that. We would like to do a lot of things, but, frankly, to take the tax code and say all these other provisions that are good for our country, we just decide to freeze them so we can do that, in light of the fact that we have provided significant assistance to middle-income Americans—in this bill, there is a credit for student loan interest, a credit for 20 percent of the interest paid on the student loan during the taxable year if the taxpayer has an adjusted gross income of $40,000 to $50,000 as a single taxpayer, $60,000 to $75,000 as a couple—it is capped at $500 per year per borrower, $1,000 per return—that is pretty fair. With all the other things we are trying to do, it seems to me we ought to in a more orderly way look at such things as the pension deductions and the expenditures for education that employers give to employees, and many other good tax expenditures that are out there right now working for Americans.

So at the right time, I will move to table the amendment, but for now I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized for 53 seconds.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I know my friend has put a whole flock of kids through college, and so I know his commitment to college.

Let me just say very briefly my amendment restricts the growth of tax expenditures in those areas. It does not in fact freeze them.

No. 2, tell middle-class taxpayers that R&D is more important for corporations, which I support, than freezing—even if you were to freeze—than it is to be able to send their kid to college. Ask the average middle-class American taxpayer what is a better investment. Who is going to do the R&D if we do not get these kids to college?

Lastly, I say to my friend, the $500 cap on student loan interest is worthwhile and is necessary but it does not compare to $10,000 that a middle-class family would be able to deduct. They need help now. They need help now, Mr. President, and this is the most direct and immediate way to do it.

I thank the Chair. I thank my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I think it returns to our side and Senator SNOWE has an amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. EXON. Before Senator SNOWE is recognized, to expedite things, when Senator SNOWE finishes, I yield half of our 5 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia, who I understand also supports it.

I reserve the other half of the time in case any opposition surfaces.

Ms. SNOWE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

AMENDMENT NO. 2976

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate regarding the coverage of treatment for breast and prostate cancer under Medicare)

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine [Ms. SNOWE], for herself, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. MACK, Mrs. HUTCHISON, and Mr. GRAMM, proposes an amendment numbered 2976.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 606, between lines 13 and 14, insert the following:

SEC. 7058. SENSE OF SENATE REGARDING COVERAGE FOR TREATMENT OF BREAST AND PROSTATE CANCER UNDER MEDICARE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) breast and prostate cancer each strike about 200,000 persons annually, and each claims the lives of over 40,000 annually;

(2) medicare covers treatments of breast and prostate cancer including surgery, chemotherapy, and radiation therapy;

(3) the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 (OBRA) expanded medicare to cover self-administered chemotherapeutic oral-cancer drugs which have the same active ingredients as drugs previously available in injectable or intravenous form;

(4) half of all women with breast cancer, and thousands of men with prostate cancer which has spread beyond the prostate, need hormonal therapy administered through oral cancer drugs which have never been available in injectable or intravenous form; and

(5) medicare's failure to cover oral cancer drugs for hormonal therapy makes the covered treatments less effective.

(b) SENSE OF SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that medicare should not discriminate among breast and prostate cancer victims by providing drug treatment coverage for some but not all such cancers, and that the budget reconciliation conferees should amend medicare to provide coverage for these important cancer drug treatments.

Ms. SNOWE. I thank the Chair.

I am offering this amendment in conjunction with Senators D'AMATO, SHELBY, BIDEN, MACK, HUTCHISON, and GRAMM that expresses the sense-of-the-Senate that the budget reconciliation conferees should amend Medicare to provide coverage for certain oral cancer drugs that are of enormous benefit to breast and prostate cancer victims. Currently, Medicare discriminates among breast and prostate cancer victims by providing certain drug treatment coverage for some but not all such cancers.

Back in 1993, when Congress expanded Medicare to help pay for the diagnosis and treatment of breast cancer, gaps in coverage were inadvertently created which denied coverage for certain oral cancer drugs. This is because in 1993, the Medicare OBRA provisions allowed the coverage of oral cancer drugs that were previously available in injectable or intravenous form.

However, half of all women with breast cancer, that is, 50 percent, and thousands of men with prostate cancer which has spread beyond the prostate, need hormonal therapy that is administered through oral cancer drugs that have never been available in injectable or intravenous form.

Let us consider the potential benefit of covering these oral estrogen-based cancer drugs for elderly populations.

Breast cancer and prostate cancers are very similar. First, both diseases strike approximately 200,000 Americans per year.

Second, both diseases take over 40,000 lives each year. While breast cancer affects 1 in 9 women, prostate cancer affects 1 in 11 men every year, and for both diseases the number of reported cases is rising rapidly. In fact, the number of reported cases of prostate cancer is increasing to an alarming degree, an expected 90 percent increase between 1983 and the year 2000.

Finally, these diseases are prevalent among women and men whose age makes them eligible for Medicare.

The Congressional Budget Office's preliminary analysis revealed the coverage of the breast cancer portion of this amendment at a savings of $156 million over 7 years.

So I am asking, Mr. President, that we support this resolution because I think it is the next logical step in fighting both breast cancer and prostate cancer. It does not make sense that we do not provide coverage for the next generation of drug treatment for both prostate and breast cancer treatment. It will save money in the long run under Medicare, and it certainly will make it easier to be administered to those patients, especially those who live in rural areas because it is an oral type of drug rather than having to be administered in outpatient or in inpatient facilities.

In 1991, Congress made a significant investment under the Medicare provisions for breast cancer screening. It only makes sense then to provide this kind of extensive coverage with the new kinds of drugs that are coming on the market that will be reimbursed under the Medicare system. By denying coverage for treatment to half the population of breast cancer patients, we are not taking full advantage of the investment that Congress has already made.

In 1994 alone, Medicare will have spent an estimated $640 million on breast cancer treatment. Yet, here we find that Medicare will not cover some of the treatments that could be provided for women because they do not reimburse an oral form of drug. In this case, for example, it is tamoxifen. Tamoxifen is a new drug on the market for the treatment of breast cancers at certain stages and yet because it was not available in intravenous or injectable form it cannot be reimbursed under the Medicare system because it is an oral drug. I do not think it makes sense. It certainly does not make sense for the future. It does not make sense for the lives and the health of the individuals who are victims of breast or prostate cancer.

So I would urge that the Senate go on record in preventing the recurrence of breast and prostate cancer by advocating that Medicare reimburse for such coverage.

Mr. President, I would ask for the yeas and nays, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include Senator COHEN, of Maine, as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has 2½ minutes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I yield 10 seconds to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I wish to thank my colleague from Maine. As an original cosponsor of her amendment, I would like to point out two things very quickly.

One, this was an oversight in the first place. It was never intended that this drug should not be covered. And No. 2, it is vitally important to the health and safety of millions of Americans. I think it is a good amendment, and I am glad she is introducing it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, let me put this in two forms. One is, I think this amendment has a virtuous purpose, and I will support it. It is a wish. It is just simply a wish. That is why it is put in the form of a sense of the Senate. We are hoping that the reconciliation conferees will approve Medicare. I support it. In fact, I worked on matters of this oral use of cancer pills and other things in the past.

But I would be very surprised, quite frankly, if we can in Medicare buy a single new aspirin, much less prostate cancer and breast cancer remedies, under the $270 billion cut which the underlying bill of the majority contemplates, let alone any more coverage whatsoever for cancer. And I think that Senator SNOWE understands that, making this, therefore, a sense of the Senate.

Keep in mind, please, my colleagues, that we are cutting $270 billion. We were devastating everything from graduate medical education to rural hospitals, to premiums, to original research in any area. You are going to find a lot of people—in fact, I notice our colleague from Massachusetts coming in—you will find a lot of people not going into research medicine to come up with new cures for prostate cancer or breast cancer because of what is happening to graduate medical institutions.

But all we had to do to get this amendment and to be able to pass this amendment was, in fact, to do what the Democrats wanted to do, which was simply cut $89 billion from Medicare. But, no, they wanted to cut $270 billion in order to be able to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYL). The Senator has used his 2½ minutes.

The Senator from Nebraska controls the time.

Mr. EXON. I will be glad to yield—has the Senator finished? Does the Senator need more time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. One minute.

Mr. EXON. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Medicare, let us face it, has been put on the chopping block. These are huge, huge cuts that are going to be made in the next 7 years that our people have absolutely no concept of. And here we are talking about adding on services. I am for that. I am for Senator SNOWE. She is an excellent Senator, and her sense-of-the-Senate resolution is excellent and it should be supported.

But the division on the one hand of the virtue of that purpose and the utter devastation of Medicare is a very awkward coupling, to say the very least. I hope and pray Medicare can do more for breast cancer, for prostate cancer, but I will guarantee you it cannot so long as we are cutting $270 billion out of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, since no others are seeking time, I will be glad to yield back our time.

Is there any time on this side?

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include Senator JEFFORDS as a cosponsor of this amendment, and I will yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. Has all time been yielded back on both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not all time has been yielded back yet.

Mr. EXON. May I request all time be yielded back? I yield back our time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does the Senator yield back all his?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine yields back. All time is yielded back.

Mr. EXON. I believe the next order of business would be an amendment offered by Senator DORGAN of North Dakota.

I yield 5 minutes to him at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 2977

(Purpose: To end deferral for United States shareholders on income of controlled foreign corporations attributable to property imported into the United States)

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. REID, Mr. FEINGOLD and Mr. BUMPERS, proposes an amendment numbered 2977.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(2) SUBSECTION (c).—The amendments made by subsection (c) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Mr. DORGAN. This is a very important amendment. It is one that actually has previously been passed by the House of Representatives a few years ago. My amendment simply ends something called "deferral" for someone who closes their plant in the United States, moves it to a tax haven country, makes the same product and ships it back to the United States. This is about moving jobs overseas.

We have had a circumstance in this country for some while where we say to somebody, "If you close your manufacturing plant in America, move the jobs overseas, make the same product, ship it back to the United States, we will give you a tax break. Stay here and you pay income taxes. Move your jobs overseas and do your manufacturing overseas, we will give you a tax break."

We have lost 3 million manufacturing jobs during the same time that Singapore has experienced a 46-percent increase in manufacturing jobs. That is not a coincidence. We give a tax break for people to ship their jobs overseas.

Let me give you an example of that. Here is a company that I will not identify. I will just tell you it makes pants, a pants company. This company had 280 of its employees apply for trade adjustment assistance a few months ago. What does that mean? It means they lost their jobs because of overseas competition. The same company, whose employees now have lost their jobs here in this country, same company, describes with its filings what it does, performs most of its sewing and finishing now offshore in order to keep production costs low. It means they have moved their jobs out of this country.

Then it says in its financial reports, this same company has undistributed retained earnings of $21 million, November 1994. No tax has been paid on them because the management intends to indefinitely reinvest them in foreign countries.

What does this mean? It means they get a tax break. They would have paid $7 million in taxes had they stayed in this country and manufactured. But, no, we say to them, "If you move your operation outside of this country, move your American jobs elsewhere, give the jobs to foreigners, shut your plant down here and move your jobs overseas, we'll give you a tax break."

My legislation is very simple. It says, end the tax break for people who want to move their jobs overseas. End the tax break. It does not make any sense. No one, in my judgment, can honestly defend this kind of practice.

Use the money that we develop as a result of this amendment to reduce the Federal debt. That is what this amendment is about.

This amendment I offer on behalf of myself and Senators KENNEDY, REID, FEINGOLD, and BUMPERS.

I have heard a lot of debate about a lot of financial issues, but I never heard anyone in this country who can defend a part of the Tax Code that says, "We will be willing to provide a tax break if you will only close your doors to your manufacturing plant in the U.S.A. and ship the jobs to some foreign land."

If we cannot end this sort of thing, how can we talk to the American people about good jobs? Sixty percent of the families in this country now have less income than they did 20 years ago. Why? Because good jobs are moving overseas. There are a lot of reasons for that, but at least one of those reasons is we have an insidious, perverse incentive in our Tax Code to reward those with a tax break who would move their jobs overseas.

This amendment very simply says, "Let's at least stop that. Let's decide jobs in this country are important. We want to retain good jobs, good-paying jobs, manufacturing jobs. Let's stop the flight of American jobs out of America." And one way to do that, among many others, is to decide to straighten out the Tax Code.

The fact is, President Clinton during the last campaign talked about this issue. We have had people on all sides of the political aisle talk about it. I was helpful in getting this passed through the House of Representatives in 1987, I believe it was. It subsequently was dropped. It was subsequently dropped in conference. This bill had extensive hearings. I held a hearing on this bill in the U.S. Senate. So this bill meets the criteria. We understand what this is about. This amendment makes sense. I hope that this amendment will have the support of Members of the Senate. This makes good sense for our country.

Mr. President, with that I yield the floor.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I yield such time as he may need to the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment proposed by Senator DORGAN. In doing so, let me say at the beginning, I am not happy with companies that move abroad to a tax haven or cheap labor for the purpose of manufacturing products that are sold back to the United States. None of us can be happy with the export of American jobs.

At the same time it is important to understand that we are in the global economy and that if we are to provide well-paying, good jobs for our people, it is important that we become a vital force in the global economy that is now emerging. The United States must become competitive in this global economy.

My concern with the Dorgan amendment is that in hearings held before the Finance Committee in the past, Treasury has testified that this kind of legislation is very difficult to administer.

It has been pointed out, for example, what do you do in the case of a plant that sells both to the United States and to other companies abroad? Obviously, we want to encourage American business to compete in foreign markets, but would that company be entitled to the deferral, or how would you administer it?

Let me say that it is my intent, upon the completion of reconciliation, to look at a number of these important and complex international trade questions. We have purposely avoided in this reconciliation containing any amendments or provisions dealing with foreign trade or international matters. And as I have indicated, one of our reasons for taking this approach is that this is a matter of extreme complexity, of greatest importance to our economy and the creation of jobs in America. For that reason, we have not, as I said, included any provisions involving international trade matters in this legislation. For that reason, the Dorgan amendment is not appropriate as part of this legislation.

Again, let me say that it is my intent as chairman of the Finance Committee, which has jurisdiction over trade, that we will be holding a series of hearings dealing with the kind of problems that are raised by this amendment. But until we have a better idea of how to address this problem so that we do not, in the process of trying to correct one problem of people fleeing abroad to tax havens that sell back here, that we do not hurt those who are going abroad for a legitimate purpose, to become competitive in international markets.

So, for these reasons, I must respectfully disagree with this amendment. I yield back any remaining time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, we do not need to study this; we need to stop it. Anybody who thinks that a tax break for moving American jobs overseas is good for this country probably thinks Elvis is living in a trailer park in St. Louis.

Nobody I know believes it is good tax policy to spend $2.2 billion in the next 7 years encouraging companies to shut their doors here and move their jobs overseas. What kind of nonsense is this? If we cannot support an amendment like this, we ought to turn off the lights and lock the door in this place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The Senator from Michigan has 20 seconds remaining.

Mr. ABRAHAM. We yield back the remaining time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time is yielded back.

Mr. DORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. At this time, I believe the next item in order will be the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 2978

(Purpose: To provide States additional flexibility in providing for Medicaid beneficiaries)

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] proposes an amendment numbered 2978.

On page 767, strike all after "(2)" on line 6 through "(4)" on line 16.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield for one moment? After the Senator has made his presentation, I yield 5 minutes to Senator ROCKEFELLER in opposition to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, the whole logic of block granting Medicaid so that States could run the Medicaid Program with less money than if we had kept it as an entitlement is a belief that States can run the program better. In fact, both Democratic and Republican Governors have come to the national capital and said to us: "If you will let us run Medicaid, we will provide better health care and we will do it cheaper and we will share the savings with you."

On a bipartisan basis, they have supported our efforts to block grant Medicaid to the States, the logic being that States are capable of making decisions about running Medicaid, the logic being that the Governor and the legislature of the various States love people who receive benefits from Medicaid in their State at least as much as we do. They know those people more intimately than we do, and, obviously, those people are capable of putting them out of office directly, whereas they may not be able to vote against a Senator from another State.

In the markup in the Finance Committee before I became a member, an amendment was added that created a new entitlement. This is an entitlement imposed upon the States. The entitlement basically says that while we are giving States the ability to run Medicaid, that we are going to intervene at the Federal level and mandate that no matter how they structure their programs they have to provide three entitlements. Specifically they are told by us that there are three groups of people that they must cover.

There are groups that we would not want to cover; there are groups that the States would cover. But every Governor I know is outraged about this provision that mandates a State-mandated program for pregnant women, for children under the age of 12, and for disabled individuals.

The point is this: Not that anyone wants to deny service to pregnant women or children under 12 or disabled people, but who are we in Washington to decide how the States are going to run this program? Is it not the ultimate arrogance for Washington to believe that only we care about pregnant women, that only we care about children under 12, that only we care about the disabled, and if we let the uncaring Governors, if we let the uncaring legislators run their program in their State, they are not going to take care of their own people?

I totally and absolutely reject this. This amendment flies in the face of everything we are trying to do in Medicare, everything that my party stands for, and I think this Big Brother Washington approach has to end.

I do not believe we are going to strip this rotten amendment out of this bill, but I want to have a vote on it. The whole logic of the Medicaid reform is we are going to let the local leaders who know their people best and who care the most make the decisions. The idea that we are creating a new entitlement and we are imposing it on the States, and now in a new provision we are going to, in essence, let people go into Federal court and sue the States on these issues, I think that clearly is a retreat from what we promised the States when we gave them less money to let them run the program, and I reserve whatever seconds may remain on my time.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, this amendment should absolutely be defeated on both sides. It has this wonderful kind of a kind-hearted title to it. It talks about "flexibility." The purpose is, of course, to get rid of all of this. If the Senator wants to have a vote on getting rid of Medicaid or getting rid of care for pregnant women, for children under the age of 12, or the disabled, why does he not suggest that?

We have been through this so many times before. "Let the States decide what being disabled means." So then you have 50 different ideas of what a disabled person is, and it is complete chaos. I really do believe this is a country which has not given up on the idea that if a child is sick, no matter what its family's income is, that the child should get care. If a poor person is ill, or needs a test because something is desperately wrong and nobody knows what it is, America is the kind of country where you should be able to get that test without worrying about something called "flexibility."

I believe that health care is about giving people the opportunity to grow up to be what they really want to be. Health care is an enormous part of that. This Senator, in what appears to be a "kind" amendment, but what is really, in the judgment of this Senator, a very mean-spirited amendment, would just get as far away from doing anything for pregnant women and children and the disabled as the Senator possibly could. It is an amendment which should be absolutely crushed.

I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas says this is a new entitlement. Let us look at what the present law is. The present law mandates that, in every State of the Nation, the State must provide Medicaid coverage for every child 5 and under up to 133 percent of poverty, and for those over the age of 5, it is up to age 12 and lower, to 100 percent of poverty; and that increases it by a year each year so that by 2002, every child up to the age of 18 will be mandated coverage. So this is no new entitlement.

Second, the Senator from Texas says, "What arrogance for us to say to these States they must cover children up through the age of 12, 100 percent of poverty and below. What right have we to levy such a mandate on the States?" What he fails to mention is that we are sending the States $800 billion over the next 7 years—not million, but billion, with a "b."

When you send out money like that to the States, it seems to me you are entitled to ask for something. What do we ask for? We say they must cover poor children, 100 percent of poverty, up through the age of 12. Do we say what kinds of coverage, what the health care package is? No. It could be the most modest package. Indeed, one aspirin a year could be the health care package.

So to say this is arrogance, when we demand that the States cover this little group, come on now. I thought this was being offered with a sense of humor, but I see the Senator is serious about this.

So, Mr. President, I hope this amendment is resoundingly defeated because we have to stand for something around this place. When we send out $800 billion, we are entitled to ask for something on behalf of the States' poor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, what is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has 23 seconds. The Senator from Texas has 48 seconds.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I yield back my time.

Mr. GRAMM. I want to conclude the debate.

Mr. President, we are reducing funding for the existing Medicaid Program by $187 billion. The Governors agreed to this reduction. But on one basic part of the agreement, they asked that if we were going to reduce funding that we let them run their program, which they are funding in conjunction with us.

Now what is happening is the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Rhode Island are saying, OK, we are giving you less money, but we are going to tell you how you have to run this program. As for this talk of "getting rid of Medicaid"—nobody is talking about getting rid of Medicaid. And "mean spirited"—I flatly reject the notion that the Senator from West Virginia loves the children in Texas or Rhode Island more than the Governor of Texas and the Governor of Rhode Island loves the children in their own States.

The tide of history is moving against the "Washington knows best" policies advanced by the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Rhode Island, and this provision may stick today, but its days are numbered. We have to stop telling the States how to run programs in their own jurisdiction, based on our own arrogance that only we know best and only we care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. EXON. I believe, under the agreement, the Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KERRY is next. I yield to him 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 2979

(Purpose: To increase the Federal minimum wage)

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] for himself and Mr. KENNEDY, proposes an amendment numbered 2979.

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following new section:

"SEC. . MINIMUM WAGE.

(a) FINDINGS.—

"(1) The federal minimum wage has not been raised since 1991; and

"(2) The value of the minimum wage, after being adjusted for the bite of inflation, is at its second lowest annual level since 1955, with purchasing power 26 percent below its average level during the 1970s and 35 percent below its peak value in 1968, and unless it is increased it will in 1996 have its lowest value in over 40 years; and

"(3) The value of the minimum wage as a percentage of the average nonsupervisory wage averaged 52.2 percent during the decade of the 1960s, 45.8 percent during the decade of the 1970s, 40.4 percent during the decade of the 1980s, and currently is 37.7 percent; and

"(4) The minimum wage earned by a full-time worker over a year fails to provide sufficient income for a family of three to provide that family a standard of living even reaching the national poverty level, and, in fact, provides an income that equals only 70 percent of the federal poverty level for a family of three; and

"(5) There are 4.7 million Americans who usually work full-time but who are, nevertheless, in poverty, and 4.2 million families live in poverty despite having one or more members in the labor force for at least half the year: and

"(6) Nearly two-thirds of minimum wage workers are adults, and 60 percent are women; and

"(7) The decline in the value of the minimum wage since 1979 has contributed to Americans' growing income disparity and to the fact that 97 percent of the growth in household income has accrued to the wealthiest 20 percent of Americans during this period; and

"(8) The effects of the minimum wage are not felt only among the lowest income workers and families but also are felt in many middle-income families; and

"(9) The preponderance of evidence from economic studies of the effects of increases in federal and state minimum wages (including studies of state minimum wage increases in California and New Jersey) at the end of the 1980s and in the early 1990s suggests that the negative employment effects of such increases were slight to nonexistent; and

"(10) Legislation to raise the minimum wage to $5.15 an hour was introduced on February 14, 1995, but has not been debated by the Senate—

"Now, therefore, it is the sense of the Senate that the Senate should debate and vote on whether to raise the minimum wage before the end of the first session of the 104th Congress."

Mr. KERRY. I yield myself 3 minutes, Mr. President. I emphasize that this is a sense of the Senate, No. 1; and, No. 2, it does not set a specific figure at this time, though many of us would like to.

It simply says that the Senate will go on record as being prepared to debate and vote on the raising of the minimum wage, which was introduced last February, that we will vote on it before the end of this first session.

Why is that important, Mr. President? Well, from 1979 until 1995, 79 percent of the increase in household income in America has gone to the top 20 percent—the 20 percent wealthiest Americans. The minimum wage which, during the 1960's, was at about 52 percent of the nonsupervisory wage, and during the 1970's was at about 45 percent, and during the 1980's was at about 40 percent, is today at 37 percent of the nonsupervisory wage.

That means, Mr. President, that for those two-thirds of the people on the minimum wage who are adults—60 percent women—they are working at 70 percent of poverty level in this country today—70 percent of poverty level. Now, the whole theory of this country for years was based on the notion that we would value work, and if people went to work they would be able to break out of poverty. During the 1960's and 1970's, we respected that by keeping the minimum wage commensurate with the poverty level.

But ever since 1991, where we only caught up to a small percentage of the decrease of the prior 9 years, when there was no increase, we have had another 13 percent decline in the value of the purchasing power of the wage. So the wage, today, has a 26-percent purchasing power of what it had previously, and it is about to be at a 40-year low. In over 40 years, by 1996, if we do not change the minimum wage, it will never have been so low.

Mr. President, if you are going to be pro-family, if you are going to be pro-work, if you are going to be pro-community, you have to respect the notion that somebody ought to be able to take home a decent wage for an hour's work and for a week's work. The fact is, Mr. President, that under the current constraints, it is impossible for people to be able to do that, and we must go on record as really being pro-family, in an effort to try help them. I yield 1½ minutes to the senior Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I join with my colleague in urging the Senate to accept the sense-of-the-Senate resolution. Members can wonder why this is appropriate. Included in the legislation is the earned income tax credit, which is a program to try to provide some relief for the working poor. That program helps to provide assistance, particularly with heads of households who have children.

The minimum wage is for those families that do not have many children. The minimum wage provides the greatest advantage for the single heads of household.

This amendment is prochildren because 70 percent of those that work full-time have children in their families. This amendment is for women, working women, because 60 percent of all minimum wage earners are working women.

This is for full-time workers, Mr. President. Sixty-six percent of all minimum wage recipients are full-time workers.

Once again, if we care about children, if we care about working women, if we care about making work pay in America, we will support this amendment.

Mr. KERRY. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 5 minutes remaining and the Senator from Massachusetts has ½ minute.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back my time.

Mr. KERRY. The minimum wage worker today will earn $8,500 for full-time work. The poverty line is $12,500. Every economist, conservatives and liberals alike—at Harvard, and Friedman, say you have to have a combination of the earned income tax credit and the minimum wage to truly permit people to break out of poverty.

We can do this, as every study shows, without losing jobs—in fact, as New Jersey showed, creating further employment.

I hope my colleagues will go on record as being willing simply to debate and vote on this issue.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator from New Mexico in his typical gracious and wonderful way be willing to give me 15 seconds?

Mr. DOMENICI. As the evening passes, I am getting less and less gracious.

I ask Senator KERRY of Massachusetts, did he mention a great economist from the University of Chicago in his wrap-up?

Mr. KERRY. I did not mean to. I meant to mention the one from Harvard.

Mr. DOMENICI. It was not Friedman from Chicago?

Mr. KERRY. No.

Mr. DOMENICI. Because he does not think this works at all. He thinks this makes for more people—I do not have any time left and we will get on with a vote.

Mr. KERRY. There are 101 economists and 3 Nobel laureates, and 7 past presidents of the Economic Association who endorse this increase.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2980

(Purpose: To make technical amendments to title V)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President I have an amendment on behalf of the Energy Committee, for Senator MURKOWSKI, the chairman, and Senator JOHNSTON, the ranking member. It is a technical amendment that will correct the reconciliation statute that the Energy Committee passed. I believe it is acceptable.

I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] for Mr. MURKOWSKI, for himself, and Mr. JOHNSTON proposes an amendment numbered 2980.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(1) On page 304, line 20, delete "follows:" and insert in lieu thereof "follows (except that all amounts in excess of $20,000,000 in fiscal year 2003 and all amounts in fiscal year 2004 shall not be available for obligation until fiscal year 2006):".

(2) On page 361, line 7, delete "thereafter," and insert in lieu thereof "thereafter, except for fiscal years 2003 and 2004,".

Mr. DOMENICI. Am I correct, I say to the whip, is this acceptable?

Mr. FORD. I do not know. I have not seen it. Apparently, the Budget Committee ranking member is willing to accept it.

Mr. EXON. We have no objection. I agree to accept the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back my time.

Mr. EXON. I yield back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. DOMENICI. Is it appropriate under the unanimous consent that we adopt this amendment, or must we hold it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is a unanimous consent agreement to adopt the amendment, that may be done.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, we should keep it going. It is the ninth amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. We will put it in the sequence in this particular position.

Mr. EXON. According to my list we have Senator KENNEDY next.

Mr. DOMENICI. We have one amendment remaining.

I want to state to the distinguished ranking member, Senator EXON, the majority leader requests that we do some of your amendments, giving us additional time. They are not yet finished in terms of drafting. It must be one with at least 5 minutes on a side.

Could you proceed to the Kennedy-Wellstone-Pryor and reserve our one remaining?

Mr. EXON. That sounds reasonable.

Mr. DOMENICI. If we come in perhaps after 30 minutes and are ready, we could intervene.

Mr. EXON. I see nothing wrong with that. We can move on to the Kennedy amendment, the next amendment on my list. I yield 5 minutes to Senator KENNEDY.

AMENDMENT NO. 2981

(Purpose: To strike the provision allowing the transfer of excess pension assets)

Mr. KENNEDY. I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of myself and the Senator from Kansas, Senator KASSEBAUM, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], for himself and Mrs. KASSEBAUM, proposes an amendment numbered 2981.

Strike section 12807.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 2½ minutes.

Mr. President, this proposal allows corporations to remove money from pension plans and use it for nonretirement purposes. That particular proposal is included in the Republican measure that is now before the U.S. Senate.

The Republican budget, therefore, hits older Americans not once but twice. The Medicare cuts are an outrage and so is the raid on workers' pensions. No one can claim they are saving the pension system. The pension system is not broken. We have no right to give away $20 billion of pension funds that do not belong to us and do not belong to the Federal Government.

The $20 billion that the Republican budget gives away belongs to workers and retirees who have given up wages to have that money contributed to their pensions. The bill is an invitation to corporate raiders and greedy executives to loot the pension plans of their workers and retirees.

What looks like overfunding today can be underfunding tomorrow. The Senator from Kansas, Senator KASSEBAUM, put it well several years ago when she said, "If stocks and bonds drop in value, as they will at some point, these surpluses could evaporate like the morning mist."

The history of the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation over the past 20 years makes it clear that today's well-funded company can become tomorrow's massive pension bankruptcy.

Congress should be worried about plan underfunding, not how to give away surplus assets that have been built up for retirees. The danger of underfunded plans is what Congress ought to be addressing.

We passed the Pension Protection Act last year to strengthen pension funding. It makes no sense to turn around a year later and weaken pension funds in a way that puts both retirees and taxpayers at risk.

This issue presents a stark choice about who we represent here in the Senate. Which side are we on? Are we on the side of the workers and retirees who struggle to find some economic security in their old age? Or on the side of the wheeler dealers, corporate raiders, and the super rich? I want the Senators to say no to this raid on retirees and defeat this unconscionable attack on the pension funds.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I want to take a few moments this afternoon to discuss a provision in the reconciliation package that has attracted relatively little attention to this point.

As many of my colleagues know, the House reconciliation bill includes a measure designed to generate approximately $10 billion in tax revenue by doing away with penalties Congress imposed in 1990 on pension fund withdrawals. The House proposal generally allows companies to take money from pension plans that are more than 125 percent funded and use those funds for any purpose, without informing their workers.

In response to a wave of corporate takeovers and pension raids in the 1980's, Congress in 1990 imposed an 50-percent excise tax on pension fund reversions, except in limited circumstances. The idea was to make it costly for companies to take assets from their pension plans. And, in fact, the raids on assets ceased almost entirely. Before this change, however, about $20 billion was siphoned from pension funds in just a few years, many pension plans were terminated, and thousands of workers saw their pensions replaced by risky annuities that provided lower benefits.

The reconciliation package before us includes a pension reversion measure that is similar to the House proposal. Under the Senate bill, excess pension assets could be wihdrawn—with little or no penalty—to fund active and retiree health benefits, underfunded pension plans, disability benefits, child care, and educational assistance plans.

Mr. President, this represents a significant change in pension policy.

I understand that there are approximately 22,000 pension plans covering 11 million workers and 2 million retirees that have assets in excess of 125 percent of current liability, and that the Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that the pension reversion provisions contained in both the House and Senate bills could result in the removal of tens of billions of dollars in assets from these plans.

Therefore, while the Senate proposal clearly is more limited than the House proposal, I nevertheless must oppose it. I understand there will be an amendment to strike this provision that will be offered by the ranking member of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator KENNEDY. I want to make clear to my colleagues that I intend to support that amendment.

The Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, which I chair, shares jurisdiction over the Employee Retirement Income Security Act [ERISA] with the Committee on Finance. In the past, the Labor Committee has taken an active role in pension security and pension reversion issues. In fact, the provision reported by the Finance Committee contains modification to title I of ERISA, which clearly fall within the Labor Committee's jurisdiction.

Yet the Labor Committee did not consider the pension provisions contained in the legislation before us. And neither the Finance Committee nor the Labor Committee has held hearings to consider modifications of this nature in the pension reversion area.

Mr. President, as I said, the Senate proposal clearly is more limited than the House proposal. I also believe that there may be valid reasons to revisit the pension reversion penalties that were imposed in 1990.

However, given the actions that led to the imposition of the excise tax, I strongly believe that any modifications in this area should be given full consideration by the committees of jurisdiction and that we should weigh heavily the genuine possibility of adverse consequences to plan participants, the Federal pension insurance program, and the national savings rate that may result from a change in pension policy of this magnitude.

Therefore, I intend to support the KENNEDY amendment and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be listed as an original cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. In an earlier debate I mentioned this is legislation filled with risk. We have now identified another one of those areas of risk. Have we forgotten so soon? It was just a matter of a few years ago when we were having pension plans across America fail because they were underfunded.

In many cases, they failed because they had been used by corporate raiders as a means of financing mergers and acquisitions which then destroyed the jobs of the very people for whom the pension fund was intended to protect.

I cannot believe in 1995 we are about to not only make it easier but, I am going to suggest, positively encourage this type of behavior. Why would we encourage this behavior? If a chief financial officer of a corporation failed to take advantage of this program, he or she ought to be fired for corporate malfeasance.

Here is what we are about to do. We allow a corporation in profitable years to overfund their pension, to put in more than is required in order to meet that year's annual pension amount. Then, when the corporation in a business cycle has a not-so-good year, we are allowing them to reach in and withdraw those funds.

What is the significance to the U.S. Treasury? They take a full deduction when they put the money in the pension. They pay no taxes when they take it out, because they had planned to take it out in a year in which they owe no taxes.

This is an outrage, Mr. President. It is a disgrace that it is part of this legislation. It has no part in a bill which is intended to balance the budget, to balance the budget of the Federal Government off the security and hard work of working men and women who depend on these funds for their well-being, and to turn it over to corporate raiders.

I urge adoption of this amendment.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the Republicans' revenue recommendations contain a slew of tax breaks for businesses that do not belong in a deficit reduction bill. One of the most egregious of these special tax breaks is a provision on corporate pension transfers that would allow employers to take billions of dollars in excess assets from pension plans to the extent of their costs for other employee benefits—such as health care for active employees—without paying the current-law excise tax. The proposal opens the door for up to $47 billion to be removed from the pension system, thereby endangering workers' retirement security and increasing the risk to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation [PBGC] and U.S. taxpayers.

The Republicans have included this provision among a small group of so-called corporate welfare reforms that raise revenue through restrictions on tax rules under which the affected companies currently operate. The pension transfer proposal, however, is hardly a reform; rather, it is a conspicuous corporate welfare program of its own. The proposal merely frees workers' pension funds to be used for general corporate purposes, such as executive bonuses or extra shareholder dividends.

Earlier this year, the Finance Committee devoted several weeks to hearings on how to increase our Nation's savings rate. We found that the savings rate is terribly low, and that the high rate of consumption was hurting the economy. Yet, the Finance Committee has now recommended to the Senate a provision that both weakens the retirement security of employees and removes assets from a key source of savings—employees' pension funds.

Despite Republican assertions to the contrary, the proposal poses a serious threat to the security of the affected pension plans. First, the pension transfer proposal generally would measure excess assets using a standard that is easily manipulated and thus, I believe, inappropriate for this purpose. Under the provision, a pension plan would be considered to have excess assets, eligible to be withdrawn, to the extent its assets exceed 125 percent of the plan's current liability. Under this standard, the employer is free to use a range of interest rate and mortality assumptions, and need not account for the effect of early retirement or contingent events such as plant shutdowns. Thus, an employer can choose favorable actuarial assumptions to minimize the plan's liabilities and maximize the excess assets it is entitled to withdraw from the retirement plan under the proposal. Consequently, the cushion provided by the proposal cannot ensure that adequate funds remain to fulfill the amount of the employees' accrued benefits.

The laxity of this standard is demonstrated in PBGC's analysis of several large plans. PBGC's analysis of 10 large plans revealed that a transfer in accordance with the provision in the bill could leave those plans with less than 90 percent of the funds needed to pay benefits on termination. PBGC would be expected to pay the difference, up to the guaranteed level.

Moreover, the current liability standard is highly susceptible to shifts in the stock or bond market. The stock market is currently at an all-time high; any subsequent drop in the market could have a significant adverse effect on a plan's asset values, thereby causing a plan that currently has excess assets under the proposal to become underfunded. Thus, a more substantial cushion is necessary than that provided by the proposal to protect against future market shifts.

The Republicans note that the standard used in this proposal is the same standard enacted for pension transfers for retiree health benefits in the 1994 Uruguay Round Agreements Act [GATT]. However, the two provisions are vastly different in scope. The potential transfers allowable under this proposal would dwarf the amount of transfers allowable for use in meeting retiree health costs under GATT. Care was also taken in GATT—unlike in the Republican proposal—to create a protective firewall that is, a maintenance of effort requirement. Thus, the proposal will increase considerably the risk of loss to the PBGC.

Finally, by exempting employers from the current law excise tax, the proposal encourages employers to use pension plans as tax-sheltered corporate piggy banks. Under current law, if an employer terminates its plan and takes a reversion, an excise tax of 50 percent of the reversion applies. One purpose of the excise tax is to recapture the tax benefit the employer enjoys from earnings that have grown tax-free on the contributions to the pension plan. In 1990, GAO found that an excise tax of between 17 percent and 59 percent was necessary—depending on the plan population and the underlying investments—for the Federal Government to recapture the tax benefit to employers when assets in a pension plan are withdrawn by the employer. In addition, the proposal removes the deterrent effect of the excise tax on plan terminations: An employer can first take the excess assets and subsequently terminate the plan, thus avoiding the excise tax because there would be no additional assets left to revert to the employer as a result of the termination.

Yet, employers under the committee's proposal are exempted from the excise tax, and are merely required to include the amount taken into income. Any company with a net operating loss carryover can offset the income from the pension transfer with its accumulated net operating losses. Thus, the tax paid by employers on a reversion under this proposal could be zero. Moreover, under this proposal, an employer can easily terminate its plan after draining it of excess assets, thus avoiding the termination excise tax altogether.

Senate Republicans argue that the use of the pension transfers under the proposal is restricted to meeting the costs of other qualified employee benefits—primarily health benefits for active employees. Make no mistake: This requirement is merely cosmetic. The proposal allows employees' pensions to be siphoned off for general corporate use. Nearly all employers who would take advantage of this proposal already provide health benefits to their employees. Thus, using these excess assets for existing health benefits merely frees up funds they would have spent anyway, to be used in turn for executive bonuses, extra shareholder dividends, or the like.

In light of all these defects, I believe the proposal is fundamentally flawed as a matter of retirement and tax policy, and strongly urge my colleagues to support my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Massachusetts has ½ minute remaining.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield our 5 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. ROTH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, excess pension assets do not belong to employees. The reason for this is that under a defined benefit pension plan, the employer promises to pay an employee a fixed monthly retirement benefit. Under current law, after these benefits are fully funded the employer can take out excess assets upon plan termination.

Excess pension asset transfers will not reduce or jeopardize workers' pensions. Only the most overfunded pension plans will be allowed to transfer excess pension assets. According to a former chief actuary of the PBGC, only 1 percent of plans covered by the PBGC terminate in a given year without sufficient assets. And after the passage of the stringent funding rules in last year's GATT legislation, it is reasonable to expect the incidence of plan failures will decrease in the future.

The proposal also contained several provisions designed to guard against plan underfunding. First, employers are required to keep a substantial cushion of excess pension assets in the plan. And I point out this is the same measure that President Clinton proposed for retiree health transfers in the Retirement Protection Act of 1994.

The other side has attacked this proposal. But is it not interesting that their own President proposed the same measure that is contained in the legislation before us tonight.

The minimum cushion is 125 percent of plan liabilities, and in many cases the cushion is as high as 150 percent of plan liability. In fact, a national actuary firm prepared a study that concluded that more than 70 percent of the overfunded plans will be subject to a cushion greater than 125 percent of plan liability. At these funding levels, the pension plan will always be at the full funding limit.

In fact, plans at the full funding limit are not permitted to make new contributions to the pension plan. Plan trustees are required to use a plan asset valuation method that results in the largest asset cushion. And, to guard against fluctuations in interest rates and stock market values, the proposal requires plan trustees to use January 1, 1995, or the most recent valuation date before the transfer, whichever results in the largest asset cushion.

Employers must use the excess assets to fund ERISA-protected employee benefit plans that cover a broad group of employees. That is a most important point that must and should be understood. Employers can only take out the excess assets to fund other ERISA-protected employee benefits that cover a broad group of employees. That is just common sense. And the plans that can be funded with excess assets are limited to—and let me spell them out—other retirement plans of the employer, including underfunded retirement plans; active and retiree health plans; child care; disability; and educational assistance.

This is a good plan, and, for that reason, I must oppose amendment of Senator KENNEDY.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator KENNEDY.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield the final 30 seconds to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators JEFFORDS, MOYNIHAN, BINGAMAN, EXON, WELLSTONE, SIMON, and GRAHAM be added as cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise in vigorous support of removing these provisions in this bill because we are dealing here with a very serious problem of pension plans. This will result in tens of billions of dollars being withdrawn from employee pension plans at a time when we are in absolute need of improving our pension capacity. It is done without any hearings. It is a matter that is within the jurisdiction of our committee. We would want desperately to make sure that what things are done are done correctly and appropriately.

I vigorously oppose the provisions that are in the bill and support the strike amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the next Senator on the list is the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, Senator WELLSTONE. I yield him 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 5 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 2982

(Purpose: To scale back corporate welfare in the tax code by eliminating the deduction for intangible drilling and development costs for oil, gas, and geo-thermal wells, by eliminating the corporate minimum tax provisions, by eliminating the foreign earned income exclusion, and by eliminating the section 936 possession tax credit, and use the savings for deficit reduction)

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WELLSTONE] proposes an amendment numbered 2982.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of chapter 1 of subtitle I of title XII, insert:

SEC. . REPEAL OF EXPENSING OF INTANGIBLE DRILLING COSTS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) this legislation, as reported by the Senate Committee on the Budget on October 23, 1995, significantly reduces funding for medicare and medicaid, student loans, food stamps, and other federal efforts critical to working families across the country, in order to pay for tax breaks to benefit primarily wealthy corporations and others;

(2) this legislation will significantly increase the tax burden on an estimated 17 million working families, by modifying the earned income tax credit, which has enjoyed longstanding bipartisan support;

(3) the Congressional Joint Tax Committee has estimated that tax expenditures cost the United States Treasury over $420 billion annually, and they estimate that amount will grow by $60 billion to over $480 billion annually by 1999;

(4) Congress should reduce the federal budget deficit in a way that is responsible, and that requires shared sacrifice by eliminating many of the special interest tax breaks and loopholes that have been embedded in the tax code for decades, making the tax system fairer, flatter and simpler;

(5) eliminating special interest tax breaks would enable Congress to do real tax reform, making the system fairer and more simple by flattening the current tax rate structure and eventually providing real tax relief for working families;

(6) the savings generated by eliminating these special tax breaks immediately can be used to reduce the deficit.

(b) ELIMINATION OF DEDUCTION FOR CERTAIN INTANGIBLE DRILLING AND DEVELOPMENT COSTS.—Section 263 (relating to capital expenditures) is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of subsection (c) the following new sentence: "This subsection shall not apply to costs paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.", and

(2) by striking subsection (i).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to costs paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

(d) REVENUE LOCK BOX.—

(1) AMOUNT OF DEFICIT REDUCTION.—Effective in 1996 and not later than November 15 of each year, the Director of OMB shall estimate the amount of revenues resulting from the enactment of this section in the fiscal year beginning in the year of the estimate and notify the President and Congress of the amount.

(2) REDUCTION OF DEFICIT.—On November 20 of each year, the President shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay an amount equal to the amount determined pursuant to paragraph (1) to retire debt obligations of the United States.

On page 1550, beginning with line 13, strike chapter 3 of subtitle B of title XII, and insert:

SEC. 12161. REVENUE LOCK BOX.

(1) AMOUNT OF DEFICIT REDUCTION.—Effective in 1996 and not later than November 15 of each year, the Director of OMB shall estimate the amount of revenues resulting from striking section 12161 and section 12162 as contained in the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995 as reported by the Senate Committee on the Budget on October 23, 1995, in the fiscal year beginning in the year of the estimate and notify the President and Congress of the amount.

(2) REDUCTION OF DEFICIT.—On November 20 of each year, the President shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay an amount equal to the amount determined pursuant to paragraph (1) to retire debt obligations of the United States.

At the end of chapter 8 of subtitle I of title XII, insert the following:

SEC. . ELIMINATION OF EXCLUSION FOR FOREIGN EARNED INCOME.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 911 (relating to citizens or residents of the United States living abroad) is amended by striking "subtitle," and all that follows and inserting "subtitle—

"(1) for any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1996, the foreign earned income of such individual, and

"(2) for any taxable year, the housing cost amount of such individual."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1996.

(c) REVENUE LOCK BOX.—

(1) AMOUNT OF DEFICIT REDUCTION.—Effective in 1997 and not later than November 15 of each year, the Director of OMB shall estimate the amount of revenues resulting from the enactment of this section in the fiscal year beginning in the year of the estimate and notify the President and Congress of the amount.

(2) REDUCTION OF DEFICIT.—On November 20 of each year, the President shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay an amount equal to the amount determined pursuant to paragraph (1) to retire debt obligations of the United States.

Strike section 12805 and insert:

SEC. 12805. TERMINATION OF PUERTO RICO AND POSSESSION TAX CREDIT.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 936 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(j) TERMINATION.—This section shall not apply to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1995."

(c) REVENUE LOCK BOX.—

(1) AMOUNT OF DEFICIT REDUCTION.—Effective in 1996 and not later than November 15 of each year, the Director of OMB shall estimate the amount of revenues resulting from the enactment of this section in the fiscal year beginning in the year of the estimate and notify the President and Congress of the amount.

(2) REDUCTION OF DEFICIT.—On November 20 of each year, the President shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay an amount equal to the amount determined pursuant to paragraph (1) to retire debt obligations of the United States.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, this amendment scales back corporate welfare in the Tax Code by eliminating several loopholes, including the deduction for intangible drilling and development costs for oil, gas, and geothermal wells, the corporate minimum tax provisions, the foreign earned income exclusion, and section 936, the possession tax credit. It locks all of the savings away to be used for deficit reduction—and only for this purpose.

The savings from these amendments, all to go for deficit reduction, range between $60 and $70 billion, depending on whose estimates you use. I do not have time to go through each of these corporate welfare provisions, but let me simply say that over and over and over again this week we have been talking about basic fairness, and that closing these loopholes is an attempt to make the Tax Code fairer.

I will tell you right now, as people in the country look at this deficit reduction bill, they know that it is based upon the path of least political resistance. They know that it is disproportionately working families and middle-income people and low- and moderate-income people who have been targeted.

Mr. President, I do not know one citizen in Minnesota, or in any of our States, if the truth be told, who would not agree with the proposition that we ought to close some of these loopholes. And by closing some of these loopholes, with these benefits going primarily to large companies that do not need the benefits, that have not been asked to tighten their belts, instead of allowing these to continue we would have more money to slash the deficit further, to invest in law enforcement, in education, in children, in health care, in transportation, in child care, in child nutrition programs.

It is a matter of priorities. Donald Barlett and James Steele won a Pulitzer for their book here, "America: What Went Wrong?" They are two really fine investigative reporters for the Philadelphia Inquirer. And in the section of the book "America: Who really Pays the Taxes?" they have an interesting paragraph:

> For over 30 years, Members of Congress and Presidents, Democrats and Republicans alike, have enacted one tax after another to create two separate and distinct systems, one for the rich and powerful called the privileged person's tax law, and another for everyone else called the common person's tax law.

Mr. President, this amendment will move us back toward a Tax Code that treats people fairly. It is time for some basic fairness, and that is the meaning of this amendment.

I reserve the rest of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2½ minutes remaining.

Who yields time? The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, it sounds good to talk about getting rid of depreciation and intangible drilling costs for the oil and gas industry in the United States until you understand that most of these go to independent producers, those who really find the diminishing supply of both oil and gas in America. These are not exceptional depreciation allowances. They are not some gift. They are absolutely necessary unless we want to make a decision that America's own oil and gas production should disappear and we should not have any.

We are importing oil now, about half of our needs, and that is growing. And speak of losing jobs and losing growth. This industry that we would now try to take away the last, the last thing they have that might give them a chance to survive, succeed, employ people and produce oil, has already lost 250,000 jobs since the oil slump began.

We fought Desert Storm, and make no bones about it, because oil is precious to the United States, because it is a commodity without which our American economy for now and the foreseeable future cannot work.

Now, why would we come to the floor in a balanced budget activity and decide that we are going to take away what will keep the little industry we have left for producing oil and gas and the men and women who work in it, produce it and make a living? To me, it seems absolutely absurd. It seems kind of like backward economics to go out there and pluck this industry, perhaps because there is none in some States, or perhaps people think when oil and gas is mentioned it is Exxon or that it is Mobil—nothing wrong with them, but obviously in the United States, the principal people working and producing oil and gas are independent producers. They are finding most of the new oil. They are operating most of the rigs out there now. And I might just say, at this particular time we have the lowest rig count since we started keeping records. That means that even with these allowances we are hardly keeping pace with producing any new oil in America's oil patch.

Now, Mr. President, Senator NICKLES wants to speak about a minute or so on this, and if the Senator would permit me, I will reserve the remainder of my time and let the Senator complete his with the hope that Senator NICKLES will arrive.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I will just take a minute and then wait to respond later, if I could.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has 2½ minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. First of all, Mr. President, we have on the part of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle a proposal for exporting more oil now from the North Alaska slopes, at the very time we are saying we are worried about our own supply. That is already contained in this bill.

Second, this is typical of what happens when we try to scale back corporate welfare and close tax loopholes. Every time you take on a powerful interest like this as opposed to regular people, opponents claim that the sky is going to fall in. It is not true that this change would spell the demise of the oil and gas industry. Just like other industries and other businesses, they should be made to capitalize their costs, to write off their costs over a longer period of time—the life of the asset. This is a special exemption, just for one industry. That is what is going on here. And this is why people do not trust this process. Every time it is a powerful interest whose benefits are under fire, we hear all sorts of reasons why they cannot be asked to tighten their belts. But, boy, when it comes to Medicare, when it comes to education, when it comes to children, belt-tightening is all the rage. This amendment basically says, let us have a standard when it comes to some deficit reduction. Let us have standard of fairness.

I will reserve the rest of my time.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I regret to tell my friend, Senator WELLSTONE, that average people use oil. Without oil for America, average people suffer. Medicare suffers. Hospitals close.

Does anyone recall when we were in the small embargo situation with Iran and the cars were piled up at our gasoline stations? They were even shooting each other in the excitement of trying to get up there and see if they could get some gasoline in their cars.

All the gasoline comes from oil. Why should we stop producing oil in the United States, take away the tax deductions that are legitimate that they have? They are just as legitimate as everybody else's deduction. They are not a gratuity or a gift. So it might be nice to say, let us take out after this industry, but it is amazing when this industry does not produce the very people who Senator WELLSTONE is so worried about are the ones who suffer because everybody suffers. Our standard of living suffers. Inflation goes rampant. And I do not want to take that chance.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEVENS). The Senator has 1 minute, 40 seconds.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I will take 30 seconds on this.

I remind my colleague that altogether this particular exemption is only about $2.5 billion over the next 5 years. This is a whole package, worth tens of billions, that says, let us close these tax loopholes. People in the country want us to.

Second, Mr. President, in all due respect to my good friend from New Mexico, this is exactly the line we so often hear: the sky is falling in. No one is talking about eliminating the oil industry. Nobody is talking about not having oil business. We are just saying, how about closing these tax loopholes so that when companies do not pay and—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 30 seconds have expired.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thought the Chair said I had 1 minute, 45 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I am sorry. The Chair thought the Senator meant to notify him when 30 seconds expired.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I am sorry. Let me finish very briefly and reserve the remainder of my time.

Other people pay more.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WELLSTONE. How much time is on the other side, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One minute.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 1 minute to Senator NICKLES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator NICKLES has 1 minute and 5 seconds.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment. I just heard about it. I understand he says, well, we want to take away this advantage, IDC. Really, what my colleague is saying is, you should not be able to deduct ordinary out-of-pocket, nonrecoverable business expenses. That is ludicrous. It should not happen. He happens to be wrong on that issue.

I think I heard my colleague say that he wanted to eliminate the 936 benefit that goes toward Puerto Rico. We do that in this bill. We do it in the bill over 7 years and over 6 years. There are two different ways you count that benefit. We phase it out over 6 or 7 years. I think it is a responsible provision. I guess he wants to do it immediately, but you have a lot of firms that have made investments. I think that would be very inappropriate.

My colleague may call it corporate welfare, but again I think this committee has taken some very responsible action in allowing people to deduct their out-of-pocket, nonrecoverable business expenses as should be allowed and phasing out the tax benefit that was directed toward Puerto Rico.

So I would urge the Senate to oppose my colleague's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator has 1 minute.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, facts are stubborn things. It is a fact that IDC's are a special exemption. With my amendment, you could still in this industry capitalize your costs, depreciate them over a longer period of time, just like with most other industries.

This is just a special exemption that most other businesses do not get. We have been talking about the tax rate in Puerto Rico. In 1993, I wanted to phase it out, even though I was sympathetic to concerns that doing so suddenly would be unfair. That didn't happen. And now, we have 7 to 10 more years provided for in this bill. My amendment says that by 1997 we have to eliminate it.

My amendment says, colleagues, that we have to make tough choices. Barlett and Steele have it right. What do you have? One person's tax code is called the "privileged person's tax law," and for everyone else, call it the "common person's tax law." It is time we understand: regular people pay more because these loopholes allow often very profitable companies—some of the largest and most powerful companies in the country—are paying less.

This is revenue that the Government does not collect. We ought to have deficit reduction here. This is between $60 billion to $70 billion of deficit reduction based on a standard of fairness. We would have more for education, more for children, more for health care, more for law enforcement.

This is a perfect example of whether or not we will be willing to vote for people we represent or whether or not we are too beholden to powerful special interests. That is what this amendment speaks to.

I ask unanimous consent that copies of my prepared statements on each of the four loopholes, elaborating on my policy rationale for closing them, be included in the RECORD before the vote.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, is all time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is expired.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the good news is that according to my record—and I believe my colleague will agree—we have three amendments left in this tier 2 category: Pryor, Conrad and Roth, in that order.

Is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. DOMENICI. Finance Committee—Roth. We have been calling it "Finance Committee." Yes.

Mr. EXON. Pryor, Conrad, Roth—Finance Committee.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Would the Senator from Nebraska yield for a moment, a split second?

Mr. EXON. Yes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I ask unanimous consent that Senator FEINGOLD be included as an original cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. I now recognize Senator PRYOR from Arkansas for his amendment and yield him the 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Could I yield myself 5 minutes and have an exchange with the Senator, a conversation that our leader asked me to have, if the Senator would?

Mr. EXON. Certainly.

Mr. DOMENICI. We have 17 amendments that are completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has no time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Please?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I am informed the Senator from New Mexico has no time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Where is the time, all on the Democrat side?

Could the Senator yield me 4 minutes to engage in this conversation?

Mr. EXON. I will.

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to the Senator, Senator DOLE has suggested, since we have 17 amendments to vote on now, we would like to vote on them tonight—that will put us well beyond 12 o'clock, and we will vote on them all—that we put over two amendments until morning, and that be the Pryor amendment and what the Senator has heretofore called the Roth amendment. And we would not change anything about those amendments in terms of votes—5 minutes of debate, and everything else—but they would be two that we would not lay down tonight.

We would go ahead and put CONRAD's in, if you would like, and that would leave two amendments for tomorrow. And then we could use this evening to see what the remaining lists of amendments are. We have 2 hours or 3 hours that we are going to be down here. The Senator's side and ours could put together the list which would follow after the end of our second tier, which is the goal. The Roth——

Mr. EXON. I would have to check on it. Could we put in a brief quorum call and see if—this surprises me. I do not know whether there is objection to it or not.

I know Senator PRYOR is ready to go. Could we put in a quorum call for a few minutes?

Mr. FORD. Would the Senator yield for one moment? We have another amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. FORD. You talked about the Pryor amendment. We have the Simon-Conrad amendment that is also mentioned. The Senator says take that one tonight and have Pryor tomorrow?

Mr. DOMENICI. I called it Conrad. I am sorry.

Mr. FORD. I do not believe Senator PRYOR is going to be willing to move his away from tonight.

Mr. EXON. Wait a minute. How many amendments? We have Pryor, Conrad, Roth. Is it Conrad-Simon? All right. We have three amendments; right.

Mr. DOMENICI. We call it Conrad; he calls it Simon.

Mr. EXON. All right.

Mr. NICKLES. One wears a bow tie.

Mr. EXON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand they have two amendments on their side. We will hold our Roth amendment until morning. So we will proceed with theirs at this point.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the committee.

I now recognize Senator PRYOR, as I did previously, and have awarded him the 5 minutes on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PRYOR. Thank you, Mr. President. I thank the Chair for recognizing me.

AMENDMENT NO. 2983

(Purpose: To provide for the continuation of requirements for nursing facilities in the Medicaid Program)

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, in this 2,000-page piece of legislation, the budget reconciliation bill of 1995, we would think that just about everything under the sun would have been thought of and included in this to consume some 2,000 pages.

But what we did not include in this reconciliation bill is something very, very vital, Mr. President, because those are the nursing home standards that we have had enacted since 1987, and if we fail to reenact those same nursing home standards on the Federal level, we will be failing to protect a very, very fragile and vulnerable asset, which is the elderly population of this country, some 2 million now residing in these American nursing homes.

Mr. President, I send the amendment to the desk. I send it to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator COHEN of Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

Mr. PRYOR. I have several cosponsors. I will not read all of those at this time. It will consume too much time.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR], for himself, Mr. COHEN, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. DODD, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mrs.

MURRAY, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. SIMON, Mr. WELLSTONE, and Mr. KOHL proposes an amendment numbered 2983.

Mr. PRYOR. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Beginning on page 889, line 21, strike all through page 897, line 19, and insert the following:

"SEC. 2137. QUALITY ASSURANCE STANDARDS FOR NURSING FACILITIES.

"The provisions of section 1919, as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this title, shall apply to nursing facilities which furnish services under the State plan.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, since we enacted OBRA 1987, we have seen a dramatic change in the care of the nursing home patients in our country. For example, we have seen a 38 percent decline in the number of physical restraints. Since the enactment of the OBRA 1987 nursing home regulations, which was, I might say, a bipartisan effort—the late John Heinz, former Senator Durenberger, former Senator George Mitchell, former Senator Jack Danforth from Missouri—we have seen a dramatic advance in all of the things that make the quality of care in nursing homes better; for example, in resident outcomes, a 50 percent increase in the number of dehydration cases that we have solved, and no longer do we find many of these patients dehydrated.

We see also just a characteristic of the nursing home population, Mr. President. And how are we going to afford to look them in the eye and say that we failed to adopt any Federal standards in the budget reconciliation bill and we are going to say to the 77 percent of those who need help dressing, to the 63 percent who need help in toileting, the 91 percent who need help bathing, "We are sorry, you can just make it on your own. We are doing away with all Federal standards. We are going to leave it to the States"?

But, Mr. President, the reason we have Federal standards today as a result of OBRA 87 is because the States were not meeting their obligation and their challenge.

Mr. President, I know that there are two or three of my colleagues who want to speak. I know that Senator ROCKEFELLER wants 30 seconds. I yield 30 seconds to Senator ROCKEFELLER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the Presiding Officer and the Senator from Arkansas. If there was a sense upon my colleagues of nervousness just before Senator PRYOR offered his amendment—there was a lot of huddling—in the sense of what was going to happen, my colleagues noticed correctly. I think that there was an effort to try and not have a vote on this tonight, because this is one of the most important amendments that we will vote on in this entire, somewhat bizarre process.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. PRYOR. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be listed as an original cosponsor of the amendment. I point out that the arguments against this amendment are going to be that we ought to let the States have unbridled responsibility, discretion as to how to set these standards.

I should point out that in the year 2002 in my State, which has the highest percentage of persons over 80 in the country, that we are going to have 35 percent less funds than is currently projected to meet the needs of our elderly, our frail elderly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. If there is any prescription for abuse, it is a 35-percent cut in funds and no Federal standards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. Without objection, the Senator's request is granted.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I yield 20 seconds to the Senator from Maryland, Senator MIKULSKI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, my father was in a nursing home for 3 years. He had Alzheimer's. We could go and visit him and make sure he was OK. But one of the things we need to know is when people are in a nursing home, they are often too sick to care for themselves or they are too sick to say how they are being cared for. If we do not have Federal standards around safety and staffing to be sure that our—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am looking for Senator COHEN, our cosponsor on the other side. I do not see him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 30 seconds.

Mr. PRYOR. If Senator MIKULSKI needs an additional 20 seconds, I will be glad to yield to her.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, the idea of safety is absolutely crucial, that we need adequate staff, but we need to have those standards so that if anyone is too sick to say how they are being cared for, we know that we are preventing their abuse, we know that they are receiving the right medication, we know that they are being adequately cared for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The Senator has 10 seconds left.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I want to conclude by thanking the distinguished Senator from Maine, Senator COHEN, for not only being a cosponsor, but also having labored for many years in this particular field. He supports strongly this amendment. I also would like—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thank you. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I also would like to acknowledge Senator BOXER of California who has truly spoken on many occasions and feels compassionate about this amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, Senator CHAFEE is going to explain where we are. Let me just suggest, at Senator COHEN's suggestion, Senator CHAFEE, and others, the so-called Finance Committee amendment, which you are going to have an evening to look at, will have everything in it Senator COHEN wants and even further improvements than the one before us. So I do not want anyone to think we have done that after we defeat your amendment tonight, because it is in there and you all will see it when we get it circulated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Arkansas for his efforts in connection with the nursing home standards and, indeed, he and I have worked together in the Finance Committee. I voted with him in connection with his amendment, which was defeated 10 to 10.

Since then, in conjunction with Senator COHEN and others on this side, we have prevailed upon what you might call the managers of the bill to put in a very good Federal nursing home standard provision. As regards nursing homes, there are two provisions in here that I think are superior to the provision that Senator PRYOR has, although I am not intimately familiar with everything that he has.

One, in the provision that we have, we remove the costly and duplicative requirement that standards perform so-called preadmission screening and annual resident review, which is known by the acronym of PASARR, and that would not be included and it is my understanding that this is a rather good provision.

Second, we have a proposal that if the States have tighter inspection requirements than the Federal, then the States can apply to the Secretary of HHS for a waiver and have those tighter provisions included as the inspection requirements or the standard requirements for the nursing homes within that State.

You might say, "Well, how do they go about enforcing it?" We have a provision that it can be enforced by HCFA. So we think that this has a lot of provisions in it that have merit.

I urge those on the other side to take a look at this provision that is in the so-called managers amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is still not quiet in the Chamber. The Senator is entitled to be heard.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. CHAFEE. Quickly, because it is on my time.

Mr. GRAHAM. I agree with what you just said. I would like to be able to compare the specifics of what is going to be offered with what Senator PRYOR and others have offered. When will we have that opportunity?

Mr. DOLE. I can respond. I think that language is ready now. I think we are working on some other language, but that language is ready. That is why we wanted to wait until the morning so we can compare that.

Mr. GRAHAM. The difficulty is we are going to get this sometime in the morning and then be expected to vote on it. We are going to vote on this amendment tonight; correct?

Mr. CHAFEE. I think the suggestion was to put the vote off until the morning and to give you a chance to look at this particular provision.

Mr. GRAHAM. The vote on Senator PRYOR's amendment is off until tomorrow?

Mr. DOLE. Both.

Mr. DOMENICI. Both; we ask for both.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises Senators to please go through the Chair so we keep some control.

Who seeks time? There is 1 minute 28 seconds left.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate that we have addressed this concern, and I think as Senator CHAFEE pointed out, if we really want to find the best provision, we ought to compare the two. We may not vote on the Pryor amendment tonight. I will decide how many amendments we vote on this evening. So we will have an opportunity to look at the language in both.

If you are looking for a political vote, we can have the political vote, but if you are looking for the best provision—it was worked out with Senator COHEN, Senator SNOWE, Senator CHAFEE, and others on this side of the aisle. We think it is a pretty good provision. So I hope if we are interested in getting the best provision in the bill, we will do as Senator DOMENICI suggested: Wait until morning, have a vote, find out which is the superior provision, and then vote accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair apologizes. The Chair did not ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he would yield to the majority leader.

Mr. CHAFEE. Do I still have control of the time?

I would have been delighted to have yielded that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I again apologize and give back 20 seconds.

Mr. CHAFEE. Was there another question, or does that satisfy everyone?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 18 seconds left to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask Senator COHEN if he wants to say anything?

Mr. COHEN. I believe I will get 2 minutes to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no time left on the Democratic side.

Mr. EXON. I yield 2 minutes off the bill to the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, let me specifically address the issue whether or not this is a political effort on the part of my colleague and friend from Arkansas, Senator PRYOR.

We had a hearing this morning dealing with nursing home standards. I want to say, for the benefit of all who are here, I have been working with Senator DOLE, Senator CHAFEE, Senator SNOWE, and others, to try to make sure that the standards that were set in place by OBRA 1987 go back into place, that we have Federal standards and Federal enforcement of the nursing home rights, as such. Senator DOLE has been most amenable to that.

I think Senator CHAFEE is correct that we have actually made some improvements in cutting back on some of the things that do not need to be there, that are costing money and are duplicative. One issue remaining in my mind is, in fact, the extension of the waiver, so-called, to the States that have higher standards than required by Federal law. The concern I have is that if such standards are so high that they therefore would apply for a waiver, what in fact would be the role of the Federal Government as far as oversight and enforcement? If there will be strict oversight and enforcement, I would recommend we support the bill that we offered as part of the managers' bill. If, however, that is a major loophole that would be seen as such by those in the business itself—the nursing home industry, providers and consumers—I would have problems supporting the substitute contained in the managers' bill. I have not seen the language.

I think Senator DOLE is correct. We ought to put this off until tomorrow so we can compare the language. If we are satisfied there will be adequate oversight and enforcement authority retained by the Federal Government, I would recommend to my colleague from Arkansas that we accept the managers' bill.

Mr. PRYOR. If my friend from Maine will yield, Mr. President, let me remind my colleagues that in the managers' amendment to be offered by Senator ROTH tomorrow, the nursing home provision is only a very, very small part of it. There is going to be, as I understand it, a change in the Medicaid formula, also encompassed in the managers' amendment. This is only a small section of it.

I think we should go ahead according to schedule. We have all been here all day, playing by the rules. Let us vote for the Pryor amendment and the Pryor-Cohen amendment tonight, and if we need to change it tomorrow, we can, and we can look at it tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. All time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, we are down to the final amendment, as I understand it, we will be debating tonight. Therefore, I yield the 5 minutes on our side to Senator SIMON for his distribution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 2984

(Purpose: In the nature of a substitute)

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON], for himself and Mr. CONRAD, proposes an amendment numbered 2984.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, this is the amendment you have read about in the Washington Post when it says a "Good Budget Compromise." This is the amendment the New York Times has editorialized about. This says balance the budget, number one. And we have a comprehensive program to do that. Number two, we eliminate the tax cut. Senator SPECTER said, "If you would have a secret vote, 20 Republican Senators would not vote for the tax cut."

To say we are going to balance the budget, and then start with a tax cut, is like having a New Year's resolution to diet and start with a great big dessert.

Third, we take the CPI and reduce it by one-half of 1 percent. At the Finance Committee meeting, Senator DOLE said, in talking about looking at the CPI, "This is something we should have addressed years ago." This is still below what the special economist said should be a drop of between 0.7 to 2 points.

Third, we help the less fortunate in our society. Instead of a savings of $270 billion in Medicare, it is $168 billion. Instead of $187 billion in Medicaid, it is $83 billion. Welfare reform—there is $36 billion more for poor people. Discretionary spending, $79 billion more. Veterans programs are assisted. Agriculture programs are assisted. Student loan programs are helped.

This is a balanced program that makes sense and it balances the budget in a prudent way. I hope we can move in this direction.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SIMON. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. President.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the Senator from Illinois. This is an amendment for those who disagree with cutting taxes by $245 billion at the very time we are adding $1.8 trillion to the national debt. This is the amendment for those who are concerned that the Medicare and Medicaid cuts are too severe. This is the amendment for those who oppose cuts in education. This is the amendment for those who want welfare to be work-oriented but protect the children. This is the amendment for those who are concerned about the raid on rural America contained in the underlying bill. This is the amendment for those who recognize that CPI overstates the cost of living. The advisory commission to the Finance Committee said it is overstated by .7 to 2.0. That means adding $600 billion to the national debt over the next 7 years.

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will support this amendment to fairly balance the budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. How much time do I have on the amendment, and how much time do they have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 5 minutes; the minority has 1 minute 50 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me remind Senators of a couple of things. First of all, the Consumer Price Index provides $115 billion of the money needed to balance their budget. In addition, Medicare is getting cut, or hit, or reformed $168 billion. So we are doing both Medicare and CPI. And then, third, and equally as important, the fiscal dividend that is not supposed to be there until you are in balance—that is how we thought it worked, that you get to balance and you get a fiscal dividend—they take the $170 billion fiscal dividend, before in balance, and put it in their balanced budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot hear the Senator.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased that the Chair is concerned, and I thank him. I want to close by saying that I really do not believe this is the kind of budget we want to adopt here tonight. I think if anybody had a real chance to look through it and go into detail, they would agree with the Senator from New Mexico.

I want to go through the three. You get $115 billion by changing the CPI by .5. I was wondering a little while ago—my friends on the Democrat side were concerned because we had not given them our amendments. Most are one page. We just got this one now, in case anybody wonders, which is all right. I am not complaining. It is just that we do not know very much about it. These few little facts are about the best I can do.

Mr. FORD. Now you know how we feel when we have 2,000 pages.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think you got those pursuant to the rules. They were before you all. This was presented right here, tonight, to us. I do not want to take any more time. I will yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I yield 50 seconds to my colleague from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I thank my colleague and friend from Illinois. I will not make a full statement at this time. I will put one in the RECORD. Suffice it to say—I say this to my good friends on the other side of the aisle—this is where we ought to be going. This is a tough, fair, principled budget that reflects the kind of distribution that we ought to be looking toward if we are going to come up with a reasonable solution to the fiscal challenges that are facing the country today, and it does it without a $245 billion tax cut that we simply cannot afford and should not be giving under the circumstances.

I am pleased to join my fiscally responsible colleagues in offering an alternative that I think meets the test that this country is looking for us to meet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. SIMON. I yield myself the remainder of the time.

In terms of the fiscal dividends that Senator DOMENICI is talking about, we balance the budget also, so we have the same savings on interest.

In terms of the size of this—and I recognize this is not going to pass tonight—but I think this may be the basis for a compromise that we may move toward. I think there is a lot of common sense in this.

In terms of the CPI, it is less than was recommended to the Finance Committee by the economic experts, and what it means for a person who is in the median on Social Security getting $770, it would be a reduction of $3.85 for which that person gets more help on Medicare and Medicaid.

I think seniors would welcome this proposal.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yielded back my time, but I ask unanimous consent to retrieve 1 minute of it to yield to Senator NICKLES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from New Mexico. I join him in opposition to this amendment.

Although I compliment the sponsors of the amendment for saying we should use an accurate CPI, they do not go as far as that that was proposed by a group of economists that said we should use from 0.7 percent even and maybe above 1 percent. Whatever the percent is, it should be accurate, and most estimates are that 0.5 percent, which would save something like $115 billion, is on the low side. So I compliment them for doing that.

I rise in opposition to their proposal because they want to spend $245 billion more so we do not tax more. I would like to give taxpayers a break for $245 billion and reduce spending to pay for it. That is the difference between the two.

I compliment them for a very significant element of this package and hope that ultimately we will use accurate CPI reflection in all of our cost-of-living adjustments.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as I understand, all the amendments have been offered that will be offered this evening in tier 2. The committee amendment will be offered tomorrow morning.

I now ask unanimous consent that the votes scheduled to begin now be limited to 8 minutes after the first rollcall vote, with 1 minute for explanation between each vote to be equally divided in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Let me persuade my colleagues we will have about 18 votes here. If we all stay in the Chamber we will probably save 20 or 30 minutes. There are not many places to go at 9:30 at night around here. They can watch the ball game right off the floor. Hopefully, we will accommodate one another by being here.

The first vote will be the normal 15 minutes plus 5 to give people time to come back from wherever they want to come back from.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the request include 1 minute before the first vote?

Mr. DOLE. One minute before each vote equally divided in the usual form.

We will start tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock, and we hope to have 7½-minute votes after the first vote, so we ask all Senators to remain in the Chamber—not overnight but be back here.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I wonder if Senator EXON would join in requesting from his side what I request for our side.

We still have a third tier, which are all the amendments that will not get debated. We would like to use the evening now while we are here voting to have you get as many together so we know, maybe tonight or early morning, how many you have. And we have some. Perhaps we can give the Senators an idea, then, by midmorning on how many there are.

Mr. EXON. I advise my colleague we have been working on that. We were talking about it a few minutes ago in the Cloakroom. We do not have a definitive number. We have made major reductions generally in the area that we have been indicating to you in our series of negotiations about where we think we will end up. I do not know that I can give a specific number tonight. I will explore that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment is numbered 2964 by Senator McCain and others; 1 minute, equally divided. Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE. I yield back the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back on this amendment? Does the Senator from Nebraska yield back the 30 seconds?

Mr. EXON. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. NICKLES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Did we order the yeas and nays on all the amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection for all the yeas and nays to be ordered at one time?

Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered on all amendments that have been debated so far.

AMENDMENT NO. 2965

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ladies and gentlemen, the next amendment is amendment 2965 by Mr. Helms, 1 minute equally divided.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. May we have order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will be 1 minute equally divided on this amendment prior to the vote.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Carolina.

This is going to be a long night unless we can get quiet after these votes.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I think this is one of few times when both sides are in favor of an amendment. It is to protect the right of senior citizens to choose their own doctors if they wish.

I think the distinguished manager of the bill, Mr. Domenici, has a clarification.

Mr. DOMENICI. I would like to say for the Republicans, there is a technical error on the explanation. This amendment has been modified so that the language in our Whip Notice—it says, "if you don't comply, they are not eligible for Medicare reimbursement"—is out of this. It is not in this amendment. I think the amendment deserves to be adopted.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, this amendment pretends that the Republican budget's destructive plan for Medicare will preserve the senior citizen's ability to get their care through fee for service and continue to see his or her own doctor.

Now, it is fine to pretend, so vote for the amendment. It is all right. It is not going to do any harm. Make no mistake. There is no guarantee of anything in the Helms amendment for seniors and their future ability to see their own doctor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on every amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this will be an 8-minute vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is an 8-minute vote.

Mr. DOLE. This is the test. If we all stay here, we may finish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Santorum). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

AMENDMENT NO. 2969

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on agreeing to amendment No. 2969 offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Brown]. The yeas and nays are ordered.

There will be 1 minute equally divided on the question.

Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE. The time is running.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time is running. Who wants to claim the 30 seconds on each side?

Mr. BROWN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Brown] is recognized for 26 seconds.

Mr. BROWN. The measure that is before the Senate takes a 1993 limitation on business' ability to deduct salaries in excess of $1 million and applies it, not to just publicly traded corporations to which it applies to now, it applies it to nonpublicly traded organizations and other business. It is a fairness question. It is grandfathered for any existing contracts, but I might say the money that is raised goes to reduce the Social Security earnings penalty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EXON. I yield back our 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 2969.

So, the amendment (No. 2969) was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. EXON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me observe that, out of the three votes, we have had two unanimous votes. Maybe some could be done by voice vote. It would save some time. Otherwise, we are going to stay on the 8-minute schedule, and I urge my colleagues to stay on the premises.

AMENDMENT NO. 2970

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is amendment No. 2970.

Mr. EXON. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, this amendment is the fraud, waste, and abuse amendment. It saves $600 million, by CBO's estimate, more than the underlying amendment. This is a culmination of 5 years of hearings.

All of the things in this amendment were recommended by the Inspector General's office and by GAO. It saves more than $600 million. In sum, all I can tell you is what this does. It says that when the Veterans Administration pays 4 cents for a bandage and Medicare pays 86 cents, something is wrong. Let us pay the same thing as the Veterans Administration. That is what this amendment does.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield to Senator COHEN.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, the antifraud provision in the Finance Committee measure has been the product of over 3 years of effort on my part. I have had to work with Justice, FBI, the White House, providers, consumers, and they support the provision as written.

In addition to that, there is a deletion under my bill which would allow the criminal fines imposed under the violation to go back into the Medicare trust fund. That is deleted under the Senator's amendment.

I urge that we reject this amendment for a variety of reasons but, most of all, because it would make a last-minute change over something that is accepted by virtually everybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the pending amendment is not germane to the provisions of the reconciliation bill pursuant to section 305(b)(2). I raise a point of order against the pending amendment.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the applicable sections of that act for the consideration of the pending amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to waive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

AMENDMENT NO. 2971

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment is amendment No. 2971. There are 30 seconds on each side for debate.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, this amendment removes about $60 billion worth of corporate pork over a period of 7 years. It has bipartisan support.

For the information of my colleagues, it does not include the auction of public safety spectrum. Obviously, that would be exempt from the auction of spectrum.

Mr. President, I understand the point of order may be lodged against this amendment. It makes no sense to lodge a point of order against an amendment that would reduce spending, which is what this legislation is supposed to be all about.

Mr. EXON. The pending amendment would add two new matters to the bill and violate the prohibition of nongermane amendments. I raise a point of order that the pending amendment is therefore not germane and thus violates section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

I yield back the remainder of my time. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCAIN. I move to waive the point of order and ask for the yeas and nays.

AMENDMENT NO. 2972

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on amendment 2972, offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. EXON. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for 30 seconds.

The Senate will please come to order.

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, my amendment restores $712 million rescinded by the bill in 48 States in highway funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. Senators will please come to order.

Mr. BYRD. Senators will find on their desks a detailed table which shows the reductions that were made in each of the 48 States.

I restore this money by closing a corporate loophole. The corporate loophole is closed by the House by a phaseout in 4 years; closed by the bill by a phaseout in 5 years. I say, let us go with the House, phase out the loophole in 4 years and restore $712 million in highway funds to the 48 States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, for those who thought the highway demonstration programs were good programs and all the projects were good projects, obviously you ought to vote for this.

They were never spread equally across the land. They had very significant preferential treatment, depending upon a lot of things. So I think the committee that decided to do this acted appropriately, especially since they applied the savings to a very good cause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

So, the amendment (No. 2972) was rejected.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to reconsider the vote.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2973

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on amendment No. 2973 offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, Senator CHAFEE.

The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined in this amendment by Senators CONRAD and FRIST. The reconciliation bill says States must cover the disabled but does not define who is disabled. This amendment adopts the same definition of "disabled" as we used in the welfare bill which we passed——

Mr. HARKIN. Point of order. The Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

The Senate will please come to order. Those Senators in front of the Chair, please take your conversations to the cloakroom.

Mr. CHAFEE. Do I start my 30 seconds over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 16 seconds remaining.

Mr. CHAFEE. Well, I will start. This amendment adopts the same definition of "disabled" as we used in the welfare bill which we passed 87–12. It does not include substance abuses. That is a mistake in the little chit that was circulated here. These individuals are at 75 percent of the poverty level or less. They cannot get health insurance. This safety net is essential to them if they are going to stay in the community.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time has expired.

Mr. EXON. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, two excellent Senators are offering this amendment and trying to protect the basic Medicaid coverage for the very poorest, very oldest and disabled Americans.

I hope everybody will vote for it. But, again, you cannot turn a frog into a prince. The underlying bill would require 200 such amendments to make it agreeable. I hope people will support this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Do we not get to speak against it, since both sides were for it? There was no opposition.

Mr. DOLE. I would ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. This is another infringement on the Governors. We are going to turn over these programs, make them entitlements, and give them block grants, and make it impossible for Democrats or Republicans to administer the program.

We had this argument. We discussed it long and hard with the Senator from Rhode Island. I hope we would defeat this amendment. If you do not have any faith in your Governor, then vote the other way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 2973.

AMENDMENT NO. 2963

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on amendment No. 2963 offered by the Senator from Louisiana. A motion to table is pending on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I say to my colleagues, I urge my Republican colleagues to vote for this tonight, because NEWT GINGRICH is going to do it in conference. You all are going to be on record of voting against it. They are going to fix it in conference.

I suggest to vote against tabling, because you can add 44 percent more children who would benefit from the child tax credit. Without this amendment, you are cutting off 31 million youngsters who will not benefit from the tax credit. It is that simple. Guess what? They are going to do it in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield my time to Senator NICKLES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment. This amendment would build another entitlement program, another brandnew entitlement program into the Tax Code. According to the Joint Tax Committee, the Breaux amendment would increase outlays by $37 billion over 7 years. I urge my colleagues to vote no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table the Breaux amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

So the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 2963) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. EXON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2975, AS MODIFIED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is amendment No. 2975 offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND].

The Senator from Missouri has 30 seconds.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, pursuant to a unanimous consent agreement when I offered the amendment, I send a modification to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

The amendment is so modified.

The amendment (No. 2975), as modified, is as follows:

On page 1620 after line 1 insert:

SUBCHAPTER A—HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS

SEC. 12201. INCREASE IN DEDUCTION FOR HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.

(a) INCREASE IN DEDUCTION.—Section 162(l) is amended—

(1) by striking "30 percent" in paragraph (1) and inserting "55 percent".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, when I raised the question of deductibility of health insurance, I said we were looking for another offset. I have been able to work with the managers and the majority leader. They have enabled us to eliminate the offsets which would have taken out the long-term care insurance, and we are able to raise the deductibility for self-employed individuals and small business people from 30 to 55 percent. I believe that this is something we can work with in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have already been ordered.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am the cosponsor on this side of the Bond amendment. I strongly support this amendment. We hoped, originally, that we would be able to permit the self-employed to deduct 100 percent of their insurance premiums, and this looks like they are going to take about 55 percent. This is the best we could do, but it is better than in the past.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Can I ask what the offset is?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the time has expired.

Mr. DOLE. We did not need an offset. We found another area where they overestimated or underestimated, or whatever it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I wonder, will the Senator withdraw the yeas and nays?

Mr. BOND. We would like the yeas and nays since everybody is here.

Mr. DOMENICI. OK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 99, nays 0, as follows:

So the amendment (No. 2975), as modified, was agreed to.

BIDEN MOTION TO COMMIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to commit with instructions offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The Senator from Delaware is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, one thing all Americans say they care about is to get a college education for their children.

This amendment will allow—it costs $35 billion, roughly $5 billion a year, and it would allow a $10,000 per year deduction—maximum deduction—for the cost of college tuition for couples making up to $120,000, or individuals up to $90,000.

This is a genuine benefit for the middle class, and we do exactly what the Republican bill does. The way in which we get the money is restrict the growth of tax expenditures.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, has there been a motion to table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back any time I have. I move to table the Biden amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

Yeas and nays they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to table.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

So, the motion to lay on the table the motion to commit was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2976

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on amendment No. 2976 offered by the Senator from Maine, Ms. SNOWE, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. I thank the Chair.

First of all, I would like to say that this amendment is cosponsored by Senators D'AMATO, SHELBY, BIDEN, MACK, MURKOWSKI, HUTCHISON, GRAMM, COHEN, and JEFFORDS.

This amendment is a sense of the Senate that would provide coverage under Medicare for breast and prostate cancer.

When changes were made in Medicare back in 1993, there was an inadvertent omission whereby oral drug treatment was not covered under Medicare for breast and prostate cancer. It is a cost-saving measure.

Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent to vitiate the yeas and nays and ask for a voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I yield my time back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2976) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2977

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on amendment No. 2977 offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The Senator from North Dakota is recognized for 30 seconds.

The Senator will suspend. The Senate will come to order.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, it is an extraordinarily simple amendment. We have in the Tax Code of the United States an incentive, a tax break, a tax deduction for somebody who closes their plant in this country and moves the jobs overseas to a tax haven, produces the same product with foreign workers, then ships the product back to the United States.

This simply gets rid of the tax break for companies that move the jobs overseas. If we cannot close this tax loophole, we cannot close any tax loophole. I would hope we will have an affirmative vote on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield back our time.

This amendment contains extraneous material and is not germane and therefore subject to a point of order under the Budget Act.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the applicable sections of that act for the consideration of the amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to waive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. This will be the last vote this evening, and we will start voting tomorrow morning at 9:15. The first vote will be on the amendment by——

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, may we have order, please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is correct. The Senate will please come to order.

This is the last vote. Senators will please listen.

Mr. DOLE. Senator GRAMM of Texas. The first vote will come on his amendment, and the first vote will be 20 minutes in length. Then we will go back to our 8 minutes after the first vote. We have had 20 votes today. I wish to thank my colleagues.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Are we going tomorrow by the schedule of amendments offered, and then we go down that line and then we are on, will be on the last ones?

Mr. DOLE. Right. We are going to go down—that is right, yes.

Mr. FORD. We go as introduced.

Mr. DOLE. Then we go to tier three.

Mr. FORD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DOLE. Then tier four and tier five.

Mr. FORD. Ten.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive the budget act. The yeas and nays are ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 47, nays 52, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 47, the nays are 52. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The amendment falls.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was rejected.

Mr. ROTH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

LIST OF EXTRANEOUS MATTER (THE BYRD RULE)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, pursuant to section 313(c) of the Budget Act, I submit a list of material considered to be extraneous under subsections 313 (b)(1)(A), (b)(1)(B), and (b)(1)(E) on behalf of the Committee on the Budget.

Section 313(c) of the Budget Act states:

> The inclusion or the exclusion of a provision shall not constitute a determination of extraneousness by the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

In addition, this list does not represent the Budget Committee's position on the program or policies represented in these provisions or a waiver of a point of order against these provisions. The Budget Act requires the committee to simply identify potential violations under three components of the Byrd rule and the committee has complied with the law.

That a provision appears on this list does not mean it will automatically be deleted from the bill. A Senator must raise a point of order against the provision and the Presiding Officer must sustain the point of order. The Byrd rule may be waived in the Senate by an affirmative vote of 60 Senators.

This list is a compilation of items identified by both the majority and minority staff of the Senate Budget Committee. The staffs did not agree on every item, but the differences were small when one considers the controversial and comprehensive nature of this bill. I want to thank the staff. The Byrd rule has evolved over the past 10 years and identifying those provisions that violate the rule is a very difficult exercise.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the list be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BALANCED BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1995—POSSIBLE EXTRANEOUS PROVISIONS; SENATE BILL

(Prepared by the Republican Staff of the U.S. Senate Budget Committee, October 1995)

EXTRANEOUS PROVISIONS—SENATE BILL

Provision	Comments/Violation
	AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY
Sec. 1113(a)(4), 1113(c), and (e) (2)	Clarification on peanut pool and sale, lease, or transfer of farm poundage quota for 1991 through 2000 crops of peanuts and allows non-quota peanuts to become available if market price exceeds 120 percent of loan rate; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 1115	Savings adjustment; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 1116	Sense of the Senate regarding tax provisions relating to ethanol; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
	ARMED SERVICES
	Naval Petroleum Reserve Sale (Elk Hills)
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421a(f)	Requirements on Elk Hills production until sale is completed; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421a(j)	Requirement that a sale cannot take place unless DOE provides a notice to Congress; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421a(k)	Expedited procedures for Congressional consideration of a resolution of approval of the sale; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421a(l)	Notice to Congress of noncompliance with deadlines; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421a(m)	Requirement that GAO monitor DOE sale and report to Congress; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
	Naval Oil Shale Reserve Sale
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421b(b)	Application of Sec. 7421(h), (j), (k), (l), & (m) to the Oil Shale Reserve sale; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421b(b)(C)	Expedited procedures for consideration of joint resolution of approval of the sale; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 3002	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. This section would require the Secretary of Treasury to report to the Congress on the feasibility of a private deposit insurance system.
Sec. 3001(d)	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. This subsection outlines a merger of the two deposit insurance funds for banks (BIF) and thrifts (SAIF), but item (4) of this subsection makes implementation of all of subsection (d) contingent on a future act of Congress (which will be necessary to eliminate all thrift charters). Therefore, the entire subsection 3001(d) will have no effect when reconciliation is enacted.
	COMMERCE, SCIENCE AND TRANSPORTATION
Sec. 4001(a)(C), beginning on p. 207, line 1 with "unless" through "1998" on line 23.	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. Section 4001 directs the FCC to allocate spectrum to applicants by auction spectrum, but exempts certain parts of the spectrum from being sold at auction. Section 4001(a)(C) lists as one of the exemptions the spectrum to be used for advanced/digital television, with a qualification. That is, the FCC can't auction spectrum for digital TV "unless" the FCC submits within six months a new proposal for allocating this spectrum by auction and the Congress "takes action to approve the plan" (i.e. enacts a later law with the President's signature). Because the prohibition on auctioning spectrum for digital TV stands on its own and is unaffected by the possibility that Congress could always come back later and change the law, the language telling the FCC to do a new plan that would have to be approved by Congress has no impact on the receipts yielded by the auctions that are authorized in this bill, and therefore that language is extraneous.
Sec. 4002	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. This section would amend a schedule of regulatory fees charged by the FCC to broadcasters. These fees were established by OBRA '93 as permanent offsetting collections to be "credited to the account providing appropriations" to the FCC. Two months later, the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill for 1994 amended OBRA '93 by saying that these fees "shall be collected only if, and only in the total amounts, required in Appropriations Acts." Therefore, if there is no appropriations action, then these fees cannot be collected. Since future collection of the fees is contingent on future action by the Congress, changing the schedule of fees in this reconciliation bill has no budgetary effect, so the provision is extraneous.
Sec. 4021	Byrd rule (b)(1)(E): A provision which would, on net, increase outlays or decrease revenues in a fiscal year after the period covered by the reconciliation bill. Section limits the fee the Coast Guard can charge for inspection of small vessels. Provision does not sunset and causes outlays beyond the years in which savings are achieved through spectrum auctions.
Sec. 4022(a) Use of Interest for Oil Spill Recovery Institute.	Byrd rule (b)(1)(E): A provision which would, on net, increase outlays or decrease revenues in a fiscal year after the period covered by the reconciliation bill. Section provides for new direct spending by allowing interest in Oil Spill Liability trust fund attributed to the Oil Spill Recovery Institute (OSRI) be used by the Institute. Provision may or may not sunset, due to interaction with next provision, dealing with Section 1012 in Alaska. Provision will cause outlays beyond the years in which savings are achieved through spectrum auctions.
Sec. 4022(a) Use of Section 1012 in Alaska	Byrd rule (b)(1)(E): A provision which would, on net, increase outlays or decrease revenues in a fiscal year after the period covered by the reconciliation bill. Section provides for new direct spending beginning eleven years after enactment of the 1995 Coast Guard authorization bill by mandating principal attributed to the Oil Spill Recovery Institute (OSRI) in the Oil Spill Liability trust fund be used for oil spill liability and compensation activities in Alaska.
Sec. 4033	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. Section provides change in current law to the Local Rail Freight Assistance program allowing for disaster assistance for railroads.
Sec. 4034	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. Section provides for additional eligible state activities under the Local Rail Freight Assistance program.
	ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES
	Subtitle A—United States Enrichment Corporation
Sec. 5002	Enrichment Corporation statement of purpose; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 5004(d)(2) & (3)	Enrichment Corporation amendments dealing with the scoring of the proceeds from the sale of the corporation; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 5013(a)(1)(B)	Requirement that DOE accept low level nuclear waste from any operator of an enrichment facility; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.

Provision	Comments/Violation
VETERANS' AFFAIRS
Veterans' Affairs Committee reconciliation language contains no Byrd Rule Violation

Note: Prepared by SBC majority staff, October 25, 1995 (12:55 pm) and by the Staff of the Committee on the Budget, pursuant to Section 313(c) requiring a list of items considered to be extraneous under subsections (b)(1)(A), (b)(1)(B), and (b)(1)(E). The inclusion or exclusion of a provision shall not constitute a determination of extraneousness by the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the chairman of the Budget Committee was kind enough to discuss with me in advance the list that he just submitted for the RECORD. I, in turn, have shared with him my view of which items in the bill violate the Byrd rule against extraneous matter in reconciliation.

There is a great deal of agreement on these two lists, but some differences persist. To make the RECORD more complete, I submit my list of extraneous provisions and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

At the close of debate on the bill, after Senators and the Parliamentarian have had a full, fair chance to review these lists, I intend to raise an omnibus point of order under the Byrd rule against a large number of provisions that we have determined to be extraneous. I ask unanimous consent that my list be printed in the RECORD to give Senators the maximum amount of notice as to which provisions are under review for that purpose.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BYRD RULE VIOLATIONS, RECONCILIATION 1996

Subtitle and Section	Subject	Budget Act Violation	Explanation
	TITLE: II COMMITTEE: ARMED SERVICES Compliance 1st Year: No; 5-Years: Yes; 7-Years: Yes
7421a.(a)	Sale Required. The sale of the Elk Hills, CA site in the NPR.	313(b)(1)(E)	There is a loss of offsetting receipts in the outyears that is not offset with the title. Specifically, CBO estimates that selling the NPR will result in a loss of offsetting receipts in years 2003–05 of $1.02 billion. Thus, the provision produces revenue losses in years not covered by the budget resolution.
7421a.(e)	Treatment of State of California. Reservation of 7 percent of the sale of the Elk Hills site in the NPR to settle claims with the State of California.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision amounts to California's price for waiving its claim to the land within the NPR. This 7 percent set-aside does not score because the spending is subject to appropriations action.
7421.a.(f)	Maintaining Elk Hlls Unit Production. Sets requirements for Elk Hills to maintain production till sale is complete.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision provides no change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421a.(j)(3)	Notice to Congress. Establishes a sense of the Congress regarding the Secretary of the Energy's approval of the Elk Hills site in the NPR.	313(b)(1)(A)	As a sense of the Senate, this provision produces no changes in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421a.(k)	Joint Resolution of Approval. Provides fast track authority for congressional approval of the sale of the Elk Hills site in the NPR.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision does not produce any change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421.a(1)	Noncompliance with Deadlines. Requires the Secretary of Energy to notify Congress if the sale is delayed.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision produces no change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421.a(m)	Oversight. Requires the Comptroller General to monitor the sale.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision produces no change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421.b.(a)	Sale Required. The sale of reserves in the NPR other than that at Elk Hills, CA.	313(b)(1)(E)	There is a loss of offsetting receipts in the outyears beyond 2002 that is not offset within the title. Thus, the provision produces revenue losses in years beyond the years covered in the budget resolution.
7421.b.(b)	Administration of Sale. Applies subsections c, d, h, i, j, k, l, m, and n or section 7421.a. of this title to the sale of sites other than Elk Hills.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision produces no change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421.b.(b)(C)	Joint Resolution of Approval. Provides fast track authority for congressional consideration of the sale.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision produces no change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADVISORY COMMISSION ON INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am honored to serve as a member of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations [ACIR]. In this era of new federalism, the Government must create a partnership with State and local governments that is based on balanced, decentralized decision making. These governments have been the laboratories for change for the last 20 years. A streamlined and more flexible intergovernmental system will offer significant opportunities for State and local governments to develop more innovative and cost effective methods of delivering programs and services. State and local governments are now ready to rise to the challenges of this new era in history—the Information Age—where experimentation and local control are needed.

For example, as this Congress moves to balance the budget and restore fiscal responsibility and accountability at the Federal level, it cannot do so on the backs of State and local governments. My involvement in drafting Public Law 104-4, the Unfunded Mandates Reform Law, was an effort to relieve this burden. As a former Wyoming State legislator, I am well aware of the hardships the Federal Government places on states and localities.

I look forward to working with the other members of the ACIR in implementing the unfunded mandates reform law and sharing with my Senate colleagues the effects of Federal policy making on State and local governments. Together, we can usher in a new era of government and restore federalism as the founding fathers intended over 200 years ago.

FRANCES W. NOLDE, PIONEER AVIATRIX

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I was recently advised of the passing of a distinguished American, Frances W. Nolde, of Reading, PA. In addition to an illustrious career as a pioneer in aviation and in the theater, she is the mother of a distinguished Washingtonian, H. Christopher Nolde, who is the husband of another distinguished Washingtonian, Mrs. Sylvia Nolde, who was my Executive Assistant for almost 14 years after serving in a similar capacity with Senator Jacob Javits.

Mr. President, I wish to acknowledge the life of Frances W. Nolde with a brief recitation of her career for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Frances W. Nolde was a woman ahead of her time, whose life spanned nearly the entire 20th century. She made unique contributions to the field of aviation as a pilot, World War II Civil Air Patrol leader, visionary, and achiever, all the while raising a family of seven children, founding and directing a country day school, and receiving acclaim as a civic leader in her home community. Musically talented, with a flair for the dramatic, Mrs. Nolde had a budding career on stage and in radio.

Born in Deposit, NY, in 1902, she attended Oberlin Conservatory of Music and graduated from Syracuse University with a BA and BS in Music. She married Carlton Brown, who later became an accomplished Hollywood screen writer. Their marriage ended in divorce.

Frances lived in the New York City area and played in a hit Broadway musical "Lady Be Good," starring Fred Astaire in the 1920's, and starred in one of the first radio soap operas, under her stage name Gloria Gay.

Upon marrying a successful businessman, Hans W. Nolde, Frances moved to Reading, PA, where she was one of the first to combine career and family and became well known for civic and philanthropic activities. She was a board member of the Junior League and founded and directed The New School, and country day school.

A pioneer in aviation, Frances Nolde was one of the early women pilots, beginning in 1940. During World War II she commanded a Civil Air Patrol [CAP] courier base, flying cargo and key personnel for the war industries. She held the rank of full colonel, the highest allowable to women at that time, and was the first National Director of Women in Aviation for the CAP.

In 1948 she won the inaugural All-Women's Transcontinental Air Race—Powder Puff Derby—from Los Angeles to Miami.

The Distinguished Citizen's Award for Leadership in the Advancement of Aviation was presented in 1950 to her by the Altrusa International Organization.

Mrs. Nolde served as an Airport Commissioner and arranged with General Carl A. Spaatz and the U.S. Air Force to rename the Reading Municipal Airport as the General Carl A. Spaatz Field.

She later became associated with the Reading Aviation Service and was Public Relations Director of Aviation Consultants, Inc.

Upon her divorce from Hans, she moved to the Washington, DC, area where she lived for more than 40 years. During that time she was employed by the U.S. Department of Commerce as the Director of General Aviation in the Defense Air Transportation Administration. She was responsible for the Civil Air Reserve Fleet and the National Emergency Airlift Plan. Mrs. Nolde was a member of the American Newspaper Women's Clubs, the Top Flight Club, and the Ambassador's Club.

Her accomplishments and contributions include: vice president, National Aeronautics Association; delegate to Federation Aeronautique Internationale [FAI]; vice president, FAI Economic Technical Commission; Governor 99's (International Organization of Women Pilots) and vice president of its Contest Division; vice president and Treasurer of Aero Club of Washington, DC; Board of Governors and membership Chairman of National Aviation

Club; member President's "Women's Advisory Committee on Aviation."

Mrs. Nolde held a commercial pilots rating, and logged more than 10,000 hours flying time over her outstanding aviation career. A full biography can be found in Who's Who In the world of Aviation and also in Who's Who of American Women.

A long time resident of Bethesda, MD, Mrs. Nolde was 93 when she passed away on October 22. She is survived by her son H. Christopher Nolde of Washington, D.C.; daughter Sally Lutyens of Manset, ME; daughter Frances D. Nolde of Maynard, MA; 9 grandchildren and 8 great-grandchildren.

SENATOR CHARLES GRASSLEY

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, CHUCK GRASSLEY is a man I much admire. Someday when I am out of here teaching a college course, I plan to cite CHUCK as a model Senator. He is not aware that I am placing this into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I am sure that he would protest the cost. However, I believe it is well worth it because he is probably the hardest working, most decent Senator around here. I often say, "CHUCK GRASSLEY is a real U.S. Senator. He is the real McCoy." He keeps a low profile but gets a lot done around here that never is credited to him. He is the type of a U.S. Senator that I particularly like. While some are retiring from this body with much fanfare, and others are holding press conferences about their achievements, CHUCK GRASSLEY keeps quietly working away. In the end, he will go down as one of the great U.S. Senators.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a recent article that appeared in The Hill on October 25, 1995.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From The Hill, Oct. 25, 1995]

SEN. CHARLES GRASSLEY—IOWA REPUBLICAN STANDS OUT AS WORKHORSE AMONG SENATE SHOWHORSES

(By Albert Eisele)

You can't get much more grassroots than Sen. Charles Grassley (R-Iowa).

Early this month, the 62-year-old crusader against federal waste was at the wheel of an International Harvester 1450 tractor, hauling a load of soybeans to a grain elevator near his family farm in northeastern Iowa.

The only working farmer in the Senate, Grassley interrupted his farming chores to issue a press release informing his constituents he had regained his Agriculture Committee seat, which he was forced to give up in January when committee assignments were redistributed after Republicans took control of the Senate.

But last week, Grassley was back in the Senate, behind the closed doors of the Finance Committee helping Republicans work out disagreements over their controversial $245-billion tax cut package, and then defending that package from Democratic criticism in full committee.

"If you're concerned about balancing the budget, you'll be for this program," Grassley declared as he and his GOP colleagues sent their historic tax package to the Senate floor as part of the even more historic budget reconciliation bill.

Then, using a metaphor appropriate to his Iowa origins and his parochial view of his role in the Senate, once described by Congressional Quarterly as "pigs and pork," Grassley said, "The people of this country are tired of living high on the hog, and not worrying about our children or grandchildren paying for it."

For the man who is the philosophical heir of the late Rep. H.R. Gross (R), the quintessential penny-pinching legislator whom Grassley succeeded in the House in 1974, it was a characteristic moment.

Never hailed as an intellectual giant or an inspiring orator, the easy-going third-term senator has made his name, and compiled a truly imposing campaign record, by balancing the needs of Iowa farmers and small businesses with the national yearning for fiscal discipline in government.

Despite one of the lowest profiles in the Senate, Grassley has managed, by stint of sheer hard work, country-bred political smarts and a low-octane ego, to place himself in the middle of the Senate debate over the big ticket issues of tax cuts, budget balancing and welfare reform at the heart of the Republican revolution.

As a member of the Finance Committee, the number two Republican on the Budget Committee behind Chairman Pete Domenici (R-N.M.), and a member of the House-Senate conference committee on welfare reform which holds its first meeting today, Grassley is perfectly positioned to add to his already impressive electoral achievements in Iowa, where he has never lost a race.

Elected to the state legislature while studying for a doctorate at the University of Iowa—he left school after he was elected and never returned—Grassley took over his family farm after his father died in 1960.

By 1974, when he won a narrow victory over a Democratic opponent to replace the retiring Rep. Gross, Grassley had bought additional acreage—it's now just under 600 acres—and turned the farm over to his son Robin, who still farms it, with weekend help from his father in the fall and spring.

Then, in 1980, after Iowa voters dumped liberal Democratic Sen. Dick Clark in favor of conservative Republican Roger Jepson two years earlier, Grassley took on Clark's liberal Democratic colleague, John Culver, after winning 90 of the state's 99 counties in the GOP primary.

His emphasis on pocketbook issues and his earnest demeanor, which belied Culver's charges that he was a tool of the Moral Majority and New Right, earned Grassley an unexpectedly comfortable victory with 54 percent of the vote.

Amazingly, for someone whose name and accomplishments are little-known outside of Iowa, and widely discounted inside the Washington Beltway, Grassley has one of the best records as a campaigner of anyone in the Senate. Of the 43 senators who have run for three or more terms, Grassley is the only one, other than John Warner (R-Va.) and two others who ran unopposed, who has significantly improved his electoral margin in each of the last three elections.

After winning 54 percent of the vote in 1980, he easily disposed of his Democratic challenger in 1986 by taking 66 percent of the vote, and crushed his opponent in 1992, highly touted state Sen. Jean Lloyd-Jones, by winning 70 percent of the vote.

The latter victory was one of historic proportions as he carried every single county while winning by the largest statewide margin in the county, and winning more votes than any candidate in the history of the state—President Eisenhower had the old record.

Grassley has an uncanny ability to translate national issues, such as defense fraud, tax reform, out-of-control government spending, congressional accountability, and international trade—especially for Iowa farm and manufacturing products—into issues of local appeal.

Grassley scored one of his major successes earlier this year when the 104th Congress enacted its first piece of legislation, the Congressional Accountability Act that made Congress subject to the same labor and antidiscrimination laws that apply to all Americans. Grassley has been pushing for such a law since 1989.

But it was his attack on government waste and fraud that first brought him public attention. In 1984, as chairman of the Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Practices, he publicized the notorious $7,600 coffee maker bought by the Air Force. Then, in 1990, he won headlines by uncovering Pentagon purchases of $999 screwdrivers and $1,868 toilet seats.

Grassley is proudest of two major achievements, passage of the Congressional Accountability Act and his work with Rep. Howard Berman (D-Calif.) in promoting the 1986 "whistle blower" provisions, known as the "qui tam" amendments to the False Claims Act, which enabled the Justice Department to recover more than $1 billion in civil fraud cases since 1986.

Over breakfast in the Senate Dining Room last week, Grassley, who had a very un-Iowa-like breakfast—a grapefruit with honey and black coffee—commented, almost apologetically, on the fact that very little major legislation bears his name.

"Sometimes I think the passage of legislation might not necessarily be the best way to measure a person's most important accomplishments," he said. "Sometimes, it's what you might do to stop a bad administrative action or get an amicus brief before the Supreme Court on child pornography."

Grassley has already signed onto Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole's (Kan.) presidential bandwagon, so it's no surprise he predicts Dole will win the bellwether Iowa caucuses next February. But he concedes that Dole will have to beat the 38-percent figure he got in 1986.

And for those who want to bet a long shot, the most successful politician in Iowa history offers this startling advice: "Keep an eye on Phil Gramm [R-Texas]. He's the one to watch."

NAOMI ROSENBLATT

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, it has been my great privilege to have attended Naomi Rosenblatt's bible classes over the past few years. I have found her teaching to be directly related to my duties in the U.S. Senate. She is a splendid teacher, but more importantly, a fine, insightful person. I wish that time would allow me to attend more of her classes.

Naomi Rosenblatt takes the approach that the great stories of the Bible are relevant today—as we struggle with some of the same issues in running the United States as Joseph faced in running ancient Egypt for the Pharoah.

Recently a review of her new book appeared in the Washington Post. It summarizes some of her classes that I have attended along with certain other Senators and journalists. I ask unanimous consent to have the article printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE BIBLE TELLS US SO

(By Jonathan Groner)

In an era when many of our politicians are still trying to locate the proper place of religion in American life, Naomi Rosenblatt has for several years played the role of Bible teacher to many of Capitol Hill's movers and shakers. The weekly Old Testament classes led by Rosenblatt, an Israeli-born Washington psychotherapist, have captivated tough political professionals like senators Larry Pressler and Arlen Specter and journalists William Safire and Marvin Kalb, Wrestling with Angels, co-written with her longtime student Joshua Horwitz but bearing Rosenblatt's stamp as chief author, grows out of these sessions.

It's Rosenblatt's first book, and what a fascinating effort it is; part biblical interpretation, part self-help treatise; a book that adopts an unmistakably Jewish perspective yet remains accessible to readers of all backgrounds.

Rosenblatt's ambitious project was to traverse the entire book of Genesis—amply familiar for the stories of Adam and Eve, Noah and the flood, the Tower of Babel, and the wanderings of the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—and to derive from it universal and psychologically valid lessons about human character. Her approach to the first book of the Bible is inseparable from her therapeutic method.

Rosenblatt says that her role as interpreter of the text is to provide "a psychological and spiritual examination of the multigenerational family," by which she means the family of Abraham, Sarah and their descendants. Sibling rivalries, midlife crises, blended families, guilt and personal responsibility—these are the therapist's stock in trade. Rosenblatt is able to convince me, most of the time, that these also represent useful interpretive tools in understanding the biblical text.

Two thousand years ago, a rabbi said in the Mishna that he had learned more from his students than from his teachers. In struggling with these old riddles, Rosenblatt too enjoyed the assistance of her students. Like the Talmud, Wrestling with Angels is a distillation of discussions held over a period of years. And the questions with which Rosenblatt grapples, as she fully understands, were already noted by the rabbis of the Jewish tradition, who provided their own answers. What was the real nature of the sin of Adam and Eve? Why did God command Abraham to sacrifice his only son? With whom was Jacob really wrestling in his nocturnal encounter with the "angel"? What was the secret of Joseph's success in Egypt?

Yet Rosenblatt's method yields new solutions, or at least new versions of old solutions. Here is her interpretation of Jacob's wrestling with the angel: "Is this 'man' his twin brother, Esau, with whom he wrestled in the womb and whom he must confront the next morning? Is he Jacob's shadow self, the darker part of his psyche that doubts and fears—that he must integrate before he can become whole? Could he be an angle of death, Jacob's fear of mortality rising up to greet him on the eve of his brother's revenge? . . . It seems to me that the 'man' is all of these." Rosenblatt's sensitive reading takes full advantage of the ambiguity and mysteriousness of the biblical story, which is a dream an allegory, or both.

As might be expected, Rosenblatt is at her most convincing when she touches on the portions of Genesis that deal explicitly with intra-family conflicts. The text tells us this directly in Chapter 25, after all: Of her twins, Rebekah preferred Jacob, while Isaac, their father, chose Esau as his favorite. From these facts sprang rivalry and disruption that continued for generations. Rosenblatt's psychological filter is helpful here. She explains, for example, that the story of Jacob and Esau "is a strong warning to us of the danger to children when parents draw them into the shifting power balance of their marriage." That's as true now as it was then.

Rosenblatt's thoughts often echo and extend some of the interpretations already found in Jewish tradition. The result is as if one were seeing the old stories with new eyes. The tradition notes, for example, that once Isaac was consecrated and nearly sacrificed on the altar by Abraham, he took on a personal holiness and thus was never allowed to venture beyond the holy land of Israel. Speaking from a psychological perspective, Rosenblatt also recognizes how circumscribed Isaac's life was. As a child growing up in the shadow of a famous father, she argues, Isaac "never experiences the cathartic personal transformation that the other patriarchs undergo."

Or Rosenblatt explains how Jacob's "emotional blindness on his wedding night mirrors Isaac's physical blindness when bestowing his blessing on his son [Jacob]." This echoes an old rabbinical interpretation that emphasized how the onetime deceiver, Jacob, was later himself the victim of deception.

Not all of Rosenblatt's interpretations are on target. My understanding of the conflict between the wives of Jacob was not measurably aided by Rosenblatt's digression on the dilemma of 20th-century women who are torn between career and motherhood. Nor did her cursory discussion of the attempted seduction of Joseph in Egypt, citing modern views of sexual harassment, add anything to my thinking on either the Joseph narrative or the harassment dynamic. She somewhat shortchanges the whole Joseph narrative, a section of Genesis that gets better treatment from the brilliant contemporary critic Robert Alter.

But these are minor points. Rosenblatt's students on Capitol Hill feel privileged that she is their teacher, and now that this book is available, all of us who take the Bible seriously can consider ourselves similarly blessed.

THE BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, more than 3 years ago I began these daily reports to the Senate to make a matter of record the exact Federal debt as of close of business the previous day.

As of the close of business Wednesday, October 25, the Federal debt stood at exactly $4,977,804,019,628.98. On a per capita basis, every man, woman, and child in America owes $18,895.83 as his or her share of the Federal debt.

It is important to recall, Mr. President, that the Senate this year missed an opportunity to implement a balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Regrettably, the Senate failed by one vote in that first attempt to bring the Federal debt under control.

There will be another opportunity in the months ahead to approve such a Constitutional amendment.

GOVERNOR LEAVITT'S DECLARATION REGARDING GREEK-AMERICAN VETERANS APPRECIATION WEEK

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I rise today to have printed in the RECORD a Declaration signed by Governor Mike Leavitt of Utah entitled: "Greek-American Veterans Appreciation Week, November 5–November 12, 1995."

During the week of November 5th, the Hellenic Cultural Association in Utah is sponsoring a series of events which include a variety of displays in the Hellenic Cultural Museum, Memorial Services and a Greek-American Veterans' Luncheon.

The events have been created to coincide with the 50th Anniversary of the ending of World War II and also for the annual observance of Veterans Day, November 11th.

I salute the Greek Community in Utah for this effort. To my knowledge they are the only Greek Community in America which is honoring their veterans in this way.

I extend my appreciation, support and gratitude to Chris S. Metos, Chairman of the appreciation week. I applaud him for his leadership in this endeavor.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the declaration be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the declaration was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECLARATION

Whereas, ancient Greece is universally recognized as the cradle of Western Civilization, and America historically has close affinities with the ideals exemplified in the Legacy of Ancient Greece and, more recently, with modern Greece; and

Whereas, the tiny country of Greece fought valiantly against overwhelming Axis forces in World War I and World War II and thus contributed mightily to ultimate victory of the Allied countries; and

Whereas, immigrants to America from Greece and their descendants have established themselves as hard working, law abiding, patriotic, progressive American citizens; and

Whereas, Greek-Americans from the State of Utah have responded enthusiastically to the call for active military and merchant marine duty when needed by the United States; and

Whereas, thirty-five Greek-Americans from the State of Utah made the supreme sacrifice for their country in World War I, World War II and the Korean Conflict; and

Whereas, Greek-American veterans returning to civilian life have been highly productive in their chosen careers and professions, including business, medicine, law, engineering, education, etc., whereby the community, state, and nation have benefited greatly and will continue to benefit from their high qualities of leadership, work ethic, love and devotion to family, church and country; and

Whereas, Greek-American veterans of the armed forces and merchant marines of the United States and Greece are gathering at the Hellenic Memorial Cultural Center in Salt Lake City, Utah, Sunday, November 12, 1995, to honor their fallen comrades, to meet socially as a group, to affirm their faith, love and loyalty to the United States and to the Constitution; and

Whereas, the Hellenic Cultural Association-Hellenic Cultural Museum, a non-sectarian, independent, cultural organization seeks to honor these Greek-American veterans and their fallen comrades by sponsoring memorial services, museum tours, displays, and a Greek-American Veterans Appreciation Luncheon, Sunday, November 12, 1995, in Salt Lake City;

Now, Therefore, I, Michael O. Leavitt, Governor of the State of Utah, do hereby declare November 5 through 12, 1995, as Greek-American Veterans Appreciation Week in Utah, to be dedicated to the preservation of the Legacy of Greek and of American ideals, leadership, patriotism and citizenship as exemplified by the Greek-American veterans of the military and merchant marine forces of the United States and Greece.

MICHAEL O. LEAVITT,
Governor.

JUDGE ROBERT E. WISS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding judge, a faithful naval officer, and a remarkable individual, the Honorable Robert E. Wiss, a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. Judge Wiss was 66 when he passed away on Monday morning, October 23, 1995.

Judge Wiss was born in Chicago, IL in 1929 and graduated from the University of Illinois in 1950. He entered the service in that same year for 3 years of active duty but he did not end his military career at that point. He continued in the reserves and finally retired in 1988 as a rear admiral in the Navy's Judge Advocate Generals Corps.

Judge Wiss was an excellent lawyer who received his degree from Northwestern in 1956 and taught law at John Marshall Law School. He was a member of numerous bar associations and was admitted to practice before over a half dozen courts to include the U.S. Supreme Court.

He was truly a talented individual who loved the military, understood it mission, and believed in a strong national defense. He fully understood as well the need for the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Judge Wiss believed that the system was better than any other system of justice in existence but if change was needed, it should be pursued with vigor. If no change was in order, however, Judge Wiss did not tolerate anything short of complete adherence and respect for that system.

In the eyes of those who knew him, he was a legal figure of great stature. In his own mind, he was never important, only extremely fortunate. All people mattered to him and his wife and children most of all. Our thoughts and prayers will be with his wife Charlene and his three daughters, Julia, Karen, and Laurel. He will be missed.

IN MEMORY OF JUDGE ROBERT E. WISS OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. NUNN. I join with Senator THURMOND in paying tribute to the memory of Judge Robert E. Wiss of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. Judge Wiss, who was in the midst of his term on the Court, passed away on October 23, 1995.

Judge Wiss joined the court in 1991 after a distinguished career in both the public and private sectors. In his civilian career, he served as a special counsel to the city of Chicago and as general counsel to Cook County. He had a very successful private practice, rising to senior partnership with the firm of Foran, Wiss, & Schultz. He also was a distinguished teacher, serving on the faculty of the John Marshall Law School in Chicago. He also played a leading role in many bar associations and civic activities.

In addition to his very active civilian practice, Judge Wiss had a lifelong commitment to military law. He served on active duty from 1950 to 1953, and in the Naval Reserve from 1953 to 1988, advancing to the grade of rear admiral. Highlights of his military career included services as director of the Naval Reserve Law Program and commanding officer of the Navy and Marine Appellate Review activity.

Judge Wiss appeared before our committee in 1991 following his nomination to serve on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces—which was then denominated as the Court of Military Appeals. He received the unanimous approval of our committee and was confirmed by the Senate.

In his 4 years on the court, Judge Wiss distinguished himself by his thorough scholarship, probing questions, and keen interest in preserving the dignity and fairness of the military justice system. He will be missed by his colleagues on the court, the lawyers who practiced before him, and his many other friends and admirers. I would like to extend my deepest sympathy to his wife Charlene, and to his children, Julia Leahy, Karen Wiss, and Laurel Latimer. They can be very proud of his outstanding contribution to our Nation.

SUPERFUND REFORM

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I wanted to bring to my colleagues' attention the concerns of a prominent South Dakotan regarding the Superfund program.

Like many of my colleagues, during the August recess, I spent considerable time back home talking to my constituents. While in South Dakota, one issue came up on numerous occasions: Superfund reform. This issue is important to small business men and women throughout South Dakota.

Recently, an op-ed by Bill Huebner of Rapid City, SD, was published in the Wall Street Journal. This article details Mr. Huebner's own unfortunate experience with Superfund. I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. PRESSLER. We all agree that the current Superfund program does not work. It is one of the most expensive environmental programs on the books. Despite the vast amounts of taxpayer dollars that have poured into the Superfund, the program has a very low success rate. One of the prime causes of this low success rate is a confusing and costly liability system. This system is unfair to small businesses. It encourages excessive and costly litigation.

I am encouraged by the draft proposal drawn up by my esteemed colleague from New Hampshire, Senator SMITH. As chairman of the Superfund, Waste Control and Risk Management Subcommittee, he has assumed the daunting task of rewriting the existing Superfund law. I look forward to working with him to create a new Superfund law based on fairness and common sense. We should not insist on a system that calls on small businesses that have complied with past laws and regulations to continue shouldering the burden of cleaning up our hazardous waste sites.

Bill Huebner's article represents not only the concerns of South Dakota small business leaders, but of all small business men and women across the country. They are the innovators who collectively make our economic engine run. For that reason, we should take their concerns and experiences to heart in our reexamination of the Superfund program.

EXHIBIT 1

MY SUPERFUND NIGHTMARE

(By Bill Huebner)

I'm sitting here at my desk starting at a three-foot-high pile of letters, legal motions, and other documents. That pile of paper tells my Superfund story—a 3½-year nightmare that cost my company time, money and business.

For those who don't know, Superfund is the federal government's program to clean up America's worst hazardous waste sites. It was established by Congress in 1980 with $1.6 billion in funding. Today, 15 years later, more than $20 billion in government and private sector funds have been spent. More than 1,300 hazardous waste sites have been identified by the Environmental Protection Agency. But only a tiny fraction of these sites have actually been cleaned up.

Where did Superfund go wrong? Read on.

Back in November 1991, I received a letter addressed to Ace Steel & Metals, claiming I owed $47,000 as my share of the bill to clean up the Douglas County, Neb., Superfund site. Between 1940 and 1982, the letter said, the property had been owned by a series of battery recycling companies. Apparently, some battery lead and acid had seeped into the ground, creating a hazardous waste area.

There were only a few problems. First my company is Act Steel & Recycling, not Ace Steel & Metals. Second, we never sent any batteries to Douglas County. And third, we weren't even in business until 1989—a full seven years after they said the last battery was dumped.

A simple case of mistaken identity. I thought. In 1989, we bought about 20% of the assets of a company called Ace Salvage, as well as the right to use the "Ace" name. That company was still in business, operating as Lipp Ventures. Lipp had sent the batteries to the Douglas County site, so they must be the one the EPA wanted. A letter from my lawyer explaining the situation should clear the whole thing up, right? Wrong.

Our first letter generated no response, so we sent another. This time, we documented everything. We sent copies of our original articles of incorporation from 1989, proving that we couldn't have been responsible for the problems at the Douglas County Superfund site.

Again, no response to speak of. Just a letter of acknowledgment saying thank you very much for the information, but you still owe $47,000. Needless to say, as a small business, we didn't have an extra $47,000 to spare—in fact, that was more than our profit for the entire year. We had to fight on or go out of business.

Finally, after 3½ years, Lipp's attorney settled with the lawyers from Douglas County. No one ever admitted there had been a mistake, but Ace Steel & Recycling was removed from the case "with prejudice." That means the plaintiff reserves the right to bring us back into the lawsuit, so we might not be out of danger yet.

Don't think for a minute that my case was some kind of freak accident. More than 20,000 small and medium-sized businesses, community groups, and other organizations across America have been dragged into the Superfund mess.

The primary problem with Superfund is its unfair liability system known as "retroactive, strict, joint and several liability." Retroactive liability gives the EPA the power to make companies pay to clean up problems that occurred before Superfund was passed, even if they followed every rule on the books at the time. And under joint and several liability, a single company can be forced to finance the entire cleanup cost, no matter now marginal its contribution to the site.

With marching orders like those, you can easily guess the EPA's standard operating procedure: Track down every company with even the most remote connection to a Superfund site, force them to pay, or drag them into court. Most companies fight the charges, rather than pay to clean up a problem they had little or no responsibility for creating. All the litigation caused by Superfund's notorious liability scheme is the main reason it now costs $30 million and takes 12 years to clean up the average Superfund site.

Congress will shortly begin debating Superfund reform legislation. Its top priority must be total repeal of retroactive liability. Superfund reform opponents claim that ending retroactive liability will let polluters off the hook and force taxpayers to pick up the bill. Not true. The program will still be financed by a tax on oil and chemical companies and other large corporations. Individual taxpayers won't have to pay a penny—unless Congress keeps Superfund on it failed course for another 15 years.

Repealing retroactive liability will put an end to wasteful litigation and force the EPA to focus on cleaning toxic waste sites instead of harassing innocent companies. Superfund cleanup could start immediately. And think of how many additional Superfund sites could be cleaned up if 50% of the money wasn't wasted on lawyers and bureaucrats.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated.

POM-454. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 21

"Whereas, the interstate Tahoe Regional Planning Compact ratified pursuant to Title 7.4 (commencing with Section 66800) of the Government Code created the Tahoe Regional Planning Agency; and

"Whereas, the agency is responsible for facilitating the attainment of environmental thresholds in the areas of air quality, transportation, scenic resources, and water quality; and

"Whereas, providing nonmotorized transportation facilities allows recreationists and residents to travel in the Tahoe Basin without an automobile, is consistent with the achievement of those thresholds, and leads to improved air quality and reduced vehicle miles traveled; and

"Whereas, approximately one-third of Lake Tahoe is currently provided with nonmotorized facilities through past cooperative work by local, state, and federal agencies; and

"Whereas, a trailside survey of the existing nonmotorized facilities provided by the Tahoe City Public Utility District shows usage and demand for recreation and commuter use to be exceptionally high; and

"Whereas, a completed nonmotorized facility around the lake would be a major recreational attraction leading to increased economic improvement in the tourism base; and

"Whereas, an enthusiastic "partnership" of public, private, and volunteer groups is ready to move forward to develop such a nonmotorized facility; and

"Whereas, full construction of the ultimate nonmotorized facility will require considerable cooperation between the federal government, the two states that are parties to the compact, local governments, and special districts, and will require a cooperative effort by all parties, public and private, in meeting funding needs over the next five years with a goal of full operation of the system by the year 2000; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That California state agencies, counties, cities, and districts in the Tahoe Basin, the Tahoe Regional Planning Agency, and other interested parties are urged to undertake the necessary steps to ensure the designation and siting, by July 1, 1996, and the development, by July 1, 2000, of an appropriate nonmotorized route on the California side of the Tahoe Basin; and be it further

Resolved, That the United States Forest Service is hereby urged to provide assistance to the Tahoe Regional Planning Agency to ensure the designation and siting of an appropriate nonmotorized route on the California side of the Tahoe Basin by July 1, 1996; and be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of California memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to support the development of the Lake Tahoe Nonmotorized Bikeway and Pedestrian Facility; and be it further

Resolved, That the Tahoe Regional Planning Agency be requested to pursue a similar resolution and concurrent action with the State of Nevada; and be it further

Resolved, That planning for the nonmotorized facility consider the needs of both the recreational user who wishes to take an enjoyable tour of the Lake Tahoe shoreline, as well as the "serious" commuter or recreational traveler who wishes to travel the perimeter of the lake; and be it further

Resolved, That support of this resolution be based on the understanding that all facility development will be consistent with the thresholds established as a requirement of the interstate compact; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Director of the United States Forest Service, to the President pro Tempore of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, to the Tahoe Regional Planning Agency, to the Governor of California, to the Board of Supervisors of El Dorado County, to the Board of Supervisors of Placer County, to the City of South Lake Tahoe, to the Board of Directors of the Tahoe City Public Utilities District, and to the Board of Directors of the North Tahoe Public Utilities District."

POM-455. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California to the Committee on Appropriations.

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 17

"Whereas, the United States government has mandated that state and local governments provide various services to immigrants, whether they are in this country legally or illegally, and has failed to reimburse those state and local governments for the costs of providing those services; and

"Whereas, the United States government historically has failed to adequately control the influx of undocumented immigrants into this country; and

"Whereas, the United States Supreme Court has repeatedly held that regulating the movement of individuals between this country and other nations is exclusively a federal responsibility; and

"Whereas, the costs associated with the supervision of parolees should never have been borne by the State of California because federal law mandates the prompt deportation of criminal aliens; and

"Whereas, the United States Congress enacted the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (P.L. 103-322), authorizing a total of one billion eight hundred million dollars ($1,800,000,000) to be distributed to several states over a period of six years to cover incarceration costs of illegal immigrants, but did not actually appropriate or provide the funds to the states; and

"Whereas, the amount authorized by the federal act would not, in any event, cover more than a fraction of the costs to the State of California associated with the incarceration of illegal immigrants; and

"Whereas, the failure of the United States government to adequately control the borders, in addition to the imposition of huge mandated but unreimbursed costs to state and local governments, has led to blatant inequities in terms of exploitation of undocumented laborers, and abuse of wage, safety, and child labor laws, as well as lower wage levels for California's working poor; and

"Whereas, California, Florida, and other states have suffered disproportionately from the failure of the United States government to control this nation's borders; and

"Whereas, California, Florida, and other states have brought legal actions with federal district courts to compel the United States government to reimburse them for the costs associated with providing mandated and other services to illegal immigrants; and

"Whereas, the federal district courts have dimissed these actions at the request of the United States government based on the doctrine of sovereign immunity, the most recent dismissal being that regarding the action brought by the State of California in the United States District Court in and for the Southern District of California, entitled State of California v. United States of America, Case No. 94-0674 K (CM); and

"Whereas, there is clear precedent for acting to waive the provisions regarding sovereign immunity in situations such as these; and

"Whereas, the continuing dispute between the State of California and the United States government regarding actual costs of providing unreimbursed services to illegal immigrants can best be resolved in an objective judicial proceeding; and

"Whereas, Congress also has the power to take salutary action by amending the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 to appropriate, and distribute to the states over the next six years, the sum of one billion eight hundred million dollars ($1,800,000,000), as originally authorized by the act, to cover costs of incarcerating illegal immigrants; Now therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and Congress of the United States to do all of the following:

"(a) Enact legislation to waive the immunity of the United States government to all suits brought by the states seeking reimbursement for all costs resulting from illegal immigration.

"(b) Enact legislation to facilitate the transfer from state and local custody to the Federal Bureau of Prisons all illegal immigrants in state and local correctional facilities.

"(c) Appropriate and distribute all funds necessary to cover the costs to the various states associated with providing services to illegal immigrants; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

POM-456. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Michigan; to the Committee on Armed Services.

"SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 109.

"Whereas, in response to the call of officials and citizens alike, the United States Department of Defense, through the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service, has achieved remarkable success as a pilot project committed to bringing sound business practices to a worldwide governmental operation. This initiative, which has been made more important by the reorganization of military facilities and base closures around the world, has been nominated for major recognition through the Innovations in American Government program coordinated by the Harvard University Kennedy School of Government; and

"Whereas, the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service is charged with the mission of selling Department of Defense assets, reutilizing resources, transferring property and materials, and encouraging the recovery of metals. With the ever-increasing speed of change in technology and the unique demands of military preparedness in our volatile world, the task facing the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service is a substantial one, representing enormous sums of capital. Fittingly, the Defense Logistics Agency of the Department of Defense selected the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service as a pilot project under the Government Performance Results Act of 1993. Since that time, this operation has constituted a wonderful example of reinventing policies and attitudes in government; and

"Whereas, Michigan has been the recipient of numerous benefits through the efforts of the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service. Products from around the world have gone to Michigan schools, youth groups, universities, museums, local units of government, and police departments. Several million dollars worth of materials, ranging from camping equipment to heavy machinery, have been put to good use; and

"Whereas, the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service responded to its challenge with true business strategies of putting customers first, improving processes and the use of technologies, empowering employees to get results, and meeting customer requirements at a reduced cost. With emphasis on maximizing return to the taxpayer, the service has achieved remarkable success in increasing total assets by nearly 200 percent and attaining self-sufficiency with an operating profit of $17 million. These impressive figures represent a wonderful beginning. Most importantly, the success of this effort has generated a rethinking of all levels, with employees adopting attitudes consistent with those found in a sound and productive business. We hope all governmental agencies will follow this lead: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we recognize the achievements of the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service in being recognized nationally for representing the reinvention potential that exists within the federal government; and be it further

Resolved, That we memorialize the Congress of the United States to continue to encourage the progress of the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service and similar programs in all governmental units; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to officials of the National Performance Review, the Department of Defense, the Defense Logistics Agency, and the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and the members of the Michigan congressional delegation.

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 10

"Whereas, the federal government has attempted to impose national solutions to solve state and regional problems for decades; and

"Whereas, in that frame of policymaking, the role of the federal government in transportation has increased substantially over the past five decades; and

"Whereas, construction of the Interstate Highway System to link all states with a good network of roads was a desirable objective when it was introduced, and that system is very near completion; and

"Whereas, the federal government has expanded its role and mandates beyond the initial interstate system; and

"Whereas, the federal government's responsibilities for highway and mass transit are essentially that of tax collector, payor of public funds, "second-guesser," regulator, and reviewer; and

"Whereas, the state and local governments have continued to be the actual providers of services; and

"Whereas, the states possess the capability to collect their own taxes and formulate their own expenditure priorities without federal oversight or mandates; and

"Whereas, the state and local governments have encouraged and contributed to this gradual increase in federal involvement; and

"Whereas, the new Congress and the President are considering options for reinventing federal government and reducing its involvement in areas in which federal involvement is not necessary; and

"Whereas, the effort of the previous Congress was to establish a new national transportation system to add other modes of transportation only for the sake of intermodalism; and

"Whereas, that action would increase, rather than decrease, the federal role in an area that is not necessary; and

"Whereas, the federal government can do more for intermodalism by eliminating its role in highway building than by expanding its role into transit; and

"Whereas, state and local agencies should recognize that by asking for federal money they are asking for federal intervention and that they cannot expect the United States government to furnish funds and not order them to spend those funds in mandated ways, that every federal dollar received is paid to the federal tax collectors by California residents, and that California taxpayers are benefited if the federal role in collecting and distributing taxes is eliminated. Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to take appropriate action to reorganize the federal Department of Transportation, eliminate federal programs for highways and transit, and limit the federal role in transportation to national safety standards, aviation, the Coast Guard, and Amtrak; and be it further

"Resolved, That federal efforts to develop and establish a national transportation system should be abandoned, and California transportation agencies are urged not to participate in the formation of that system; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States and to the United States Secretary of Transportation."

"Whereas, Yosemite National Park has long been a favorite destination for horseback travelers, and in the park's early days, tourism facilities in Yosemite Valley depended on pack trains and stagecoaches to import supplies and guests, and to provide communication to that then-remote part of the Sierra-Nevada Mountains; and

"Whereas, in 1865, James M. Hutchings opened the first saddle train business in Yosemite, which provided pleasure riding and guide services for guests; and

"Whereas, Yosemite National Park consistently receives high numbers of visitors and, in 1994, a record number of 4.1 million people visited the park; and

"Whereas, only 5 percent of the park's total number of annual visitors leave the paved, developed areas of the park thus leaving most of the 1,170 square-mile park for those persons who prefer a less crowded, more adventurous experience; and

"Whereas, in January of this year, head managers of the Yosemite Stables were given notice that the park's concessionaire, the Yosemite Concessions Services, intends to shut down the stable operations prior to the 1996 season; however, the National park Service has recommended that the stables remain open for another year until the economic and environmental considerations relating to horse operations in the park can be thoroughly evaluated; and

"Whereas, Yosemite stable operations is one of the most profitable services in the park; and

"Whereas, if the Yosemite Concessions Services horse operations are shut down, the park revenues from trail fees will be decreased and the level of trail maintenance will deteriorate; and

"Whereas, if the Yosemite Stables close down, no private use of corrals will be possible, thus making it difficult for individuals with private stock to make use of the riding trails out of Yosemite; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature expresses its opposition to the closure of the Yosemite Stables for environmental and economic reasons; and be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature memorializes the National Park Service, the President, and the Congress of the United States to take steps necessary to prevent the closure of the Yosemite Stables; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the Governor, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States".

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 2

"Whereas, through the Clean Air Act and its amendments (42 U.S.C. Sec. 7401 et seq.), the federal government has undertaken the laudable task of ridding the air we breathe of pollution; and

"Whereas, a balance must be struck between any steps taken to reduce air pollution, and the adverse impact those steps may have upon the economy, the business climate, and the cost and size of government; and

"Whereas, under the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990 (P.L. 101-549), those states with areas that are classified as severe or extreme nonattainment areas are forced to adopt employee commute option and trip reduction laws; and

"Whereas, pursuant to the Clean Air Act, programs are being conducted by California air districts to clean the state's air through the imposition of onerous, burdensome, and costly regulations that require employers of companies having 100 or more employees to establish trip reduction plans; and

"Whereas, an example of the ineffectiveness and excessive cost of employer trip reduction plan regulations can be shown by the resultant failures of the South Coast Air Quality Management District's employer trip reduction plan requirement, Rule 1501, previously known as Regulation 15; and

"Whereas, since its implementation in 1988, Rule 1501 has contributed negligible benefits towards reducing or eliminating smog within the Los Angeles basin, while at the same time, this rule's compliance cost upon employers is estimated at anywhere between $136 million and $197 million annually, or, roughly, $3,000 for every car not driven to work, for a total of approximately $1 billion that Los Angeles basin employers have been forced to spend to comply with this rule; and

"Whereas, the South Coast Air Quality Management District Governing Board realizes that Rule 1501 is ineffective, expensive, and has fallen far short of the average vehicle ridership goals sought by the district pursuant to the Clean Air Act; and

"Whereas, it is obvious that the costs and effects of mandated employer trip reduction plans, such as Rule 1501, can be devastating to companies trying to remain economically competitive, and these policies do not justify the economic and social hardships that will occur in nonattainment areas if employer trip reduction mandates continue as part of the Clean Air Act; and

"Whereas, despite the fact that other avenues may be available to pursue the goals of the Clean Air Act without having to resort to mandated employer trip reduction plans, these alternatives cannot be legally pursued by states in lieu of existing employer trip reduction plan mandates unless Congress amends the Clean Air Act to reflect this intent; Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact an amendment to the Clean Air Act that will eliminate the provisions mandating an employer trip reduction program in extreme and severe nonattainment areas and, instead, allow states to pursue practical and cost-effective alternatives towards solving their air quality problems; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Majority Leader of the Senate, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and to the Legislature of each of the other states."

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 5

"Whereas, the federal Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. Sec. 7401 et seq.) was enacted to encourage states to act appropriately to clean up the air in their own neighborhoods; and

"Whereas, the act, as recently amended (P.L. 101-549), has continued to deviate from the principle of establishing standards and allowing states to design specific actions to satisfy those standards and to rely more on the principle that Washington "knows best"; and

"Whereas, the federal law now specifies detailed procedures and programs that the states must follow, including the requirement for specific types of smog check, and other similar programs; and

"Whereas, the State of California has been in the forefront of clean air activities, including the adoption of new vehicle emission standards, and possesses extensive experience and knowledge about programs and activities that are feasible and cost-effective and those that are not; and

"Whereas, the Clean Air Act has placed California at the mercy of federal bureaucrats to the extent that the state must negotiate with them on minute details, such as whether or not the smog inspection stations can be allowed to sell candy bars and other similar commodities; and

"Whereas, Congress has expressed a strong interest in reducing the role of the federal government by allowing states to manage their own affairs; and

"Whereas, there is a question regarding the efficacy of the science that the Environmental Protection Agency has used to diminish the relative effectiveness of alternative clean air strategies; Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to amend the Clean Air Act to retain the clean air standards, including requirements to reduce emissions from mobile sources, but remove specific requirements such as vehicle inspection and maintenance, and to require the Environmental Protection Agency to reevaluate, using recent scientific, technological, and other environmental findings, the methodology and science used to measure both the inventory of emissions and the effectiveness of individual components of the state clean air plans for purposes of compliance with the broader goals of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990 (P.L. 101-549); and be it further

"Resolved, That the California Legislature will continue to pursue all feasible and cost-effective strategies that, as implemented, produce cleaner air for California's residents, and that those strategies will be pursued because doing so is good for the health and safety of the people of California and not because doing so is mandated by the United States Congress, the federal bureaucracy, or a federal judge; and be it further

"Whereas, the Home Office and Business Opportunities (HOBO) Association of California, an innovative grassroots organization recognized as one of the foremost leaders and advocates of homebased business issues statewide, is sponsoring a Homebased Business Week in the state; and

"Whereas, Homebased Business Week will build public awareness and advance the values of homebased business to California; and

"Whereas, Homebased Business Week will create and promote change, foster economic growth, increase employment, and support the desire for independence and self-reliance, while realizing the concerns for child care, the quality of home life, and the environment; and

"Whereas, Homebased Business Week will assist homebased businesses by providing educational and informational programs, forums, workshops, seminars, and conferences, which will aid in the establishment and development of homebased businesses all across California; and

"Whereas, Homebased Business Week will assist the growing number of homebased business owners in realizing their potential in finding the American dream; and

"Whereas, it would be of benefit to other states to observe Homebased Business Week nationally: Now, therefore, be it

"Whereas, it was Japan that ultimately plunged the United States into World War II when on December 7, 1941, Japanese aircraft attacked without warning the United States Pacific Fleet at anchor in Pearl Harbor in Hawaii which propelled enraged Americans to arms; and

"Whereas, on December 8, 1941, within hours of the attack on Pearl Harbor, Japanese bombers struck the British colony of Hong Kong on the south coast of China and the two United States Islands of Guam and Wake in the Pacific Ocean; and

"Whereas, Japan's next target was the petroleum-rich Netherlands East Indies that were protected by Allied warships that were mauled by Japan's navy in February 1942 in the Battle of the Java Sea; and

"Whereas, only the conquest of the Philippines took longer than Japan expected when American and Philippine forces commanded by United States General Douglas MacArthur defended the islands and although suffering from malnutrition and disease, they beat back Japanese attacks for just over three months; and

"Whereas, on April 9, 1942, about 75,000 exhausted troops on Bataan surrendered to the Japanese and most of them were forced to march about 65 miles to prison camps and many prisoners died of disease and mistreatment during what became known as the Bataan Death March; and

"Whereas, three events in 1942 helped turn the tide against Japan, the first of these being the Doolittle Raid in which Lieutenant Colonel James H. Doolittle led 16 B-25 bombers in a daring bombing raid on the Japanese homeland that consisted of a surprise attack on Tokyo and other Japanese cities to show that Japan could be beaten; and

"Whereas, in May 1942 in the Battle of the Coral Sea, which was the first naval battle in which opposing ships never sighted one another and planes based on aircraft carriers did all the fighting, American warships halted the Japanese assault on Port Moresby on the south coast of New Guinea; and

"Whereas, in the Battle of Midway in June 1942, the United States cracked Japan's naval code and learned of Japan's coming invasion to capture Midway Island at the westernmost tip of the Hawaiian chain and the battle that ensued became the first clear Allied victory over Japan in World War II; and

"Whereas, the Allies developed two major campaigns against Japan in the South Pacific, one force under MacArthur that checked the Japanese on New Guinea and another force under Admiral Chester W. Nimitz that battled the Japanese in the Solomon Islands northeast of Australia that included the six-month battle for Allied control of the Island of Guadalcanal; and

"Whereas, superiority at sea and in the air enabled the Allies to close in on Japan in early 1945 and by then Japan had lost much of its empire, most of its aircraft and cargo ships, and nearly all of its warships and American B-29 bombers were pounding Japan's industries, and American submarines were sinking vital supplies headed for Japan; and

"Whereas, Japan's military leaders went on fighting even though they faced certain defeat; and

"Whereas, the Allies decided they needed more bases to step up the bombing campaign against Japan and chose the Japanese islands of Iwo Jima and Okinawa; and

"Whereas, in April 1945 the United States, Great Britain, and China issued a statement warning that Japan would be destroyed unless it surrendered unconditionally but in spite of the warning, Japan went on fighting; and

"Whereas, on August 6, 1945, an American B-29 bomber called the Enola Gay dropped the first atomic bomb used in warfare on the Japanese city of Hiroshima and after Japanese leaders failed to respond to the bombing, the United States dropped a larger bomb on Nagasaki on August 9, 1945.

"Whereas, on August 14, 1945, Japan agreed to end the war and on September 2, 1945, representatives of Japan signed the official statement of surrender aboard the United States battleship Missouri that lay at anchor in Tokyo Bay and representatives of all the Allied nations were present; and

"Whereas, President Truman declared September 2, 1945s as V–J Day or Victory over Japan Day and World War II had finally ended; Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of California, the Assembly thereof concurring, That the Legislature does hereby proclaim September 2, 1995, as the 50th Anniversary of V–J Day and urges all Californians to join in ceremonies to commemorate this major historic event; and be it further

"Whereas, domestic violence is more than the occasional family dispute; and

"Whereas, according to the United States Department of Health and Human Services, domestic violence is the single largest cause of injury to American women, affecting six million women of all racial, cultural, and economic backgrounds; and

"Whereas, according to data published in 1993 by the Commonwealth Fund and a 1994 survey report by the United States Department of Justice, in the United States, a woman is battered every 15 seconds; 40 percent of female homicide victims in 1991 were killed by their husbands or boyfriends; and

"Whereas, more than half of the number of women in need of shelter from an abusive environment may be turned away from a shelter due to lack of space; and

"Whereas, women are not the only targets of domestic violence; young children, elderly persons, and men are also victims in their own homes; and

"Whereas, emotional scars are often permanent; and

Law enforcement agencies, domestic violence hotlines, battered women and children's shelters, health care providers, churches, and the volunteers that serve those entities are helping the effort to end domestic violence; and

"Whereas, the travel agent industry employs travel agents in this state, who derive a substantial amount of their earnings from the traditional 10-percent commission on airline ticket sales; and

"Whereas, virtually every major airline has imposed a limit on these sales commissions, so that airlines pay no more than $25 on one-way domestic tickets and $50 for round-trip tickets instead of the former commission of 10 percent of the cost of the ticket; and

"Whereas, the imposition of the commission limit is harming the travel agent industry, endangering jobs held primarily by women and single parents; and

"Whereas, a statewide job loss will have a negative impact on the state's budget, resulting in a decrease in formerly collected income taxes and an increase in state unemployment compensation expenditures; and
